Plea of Pleader —A pleader cannot be called upon to plead under this section on behalf of his client and it is improper for a Magistrate to act upon such plea though made in the presence and hearing of the accused. It would be more regular in form for a Magistrate to call upon the accused to say with his own lips whether he denies the truth of the complaint—6 Bom L R 861. But when the accused has been permitted under sec 205 to appear by a pleader the latter may perform all acts which devolve upon the accused in the course of the trial and he can plead guilty or not guilty under this section—6 S L R 206

Record of plea —If the plea is not recorded the conviction is liable to be set aside—7 Cal 96. The Court must record the actual words used a narrative of what occurred and of the statements made by the prisoners is not a proper record of the plea—7 Cal 96. If the statement of the accused is in a foreign language the Magistrate need not record it in the language in which it is made, but the record must be in the language in which it is interpreted—5 Cal 826

833 Conviction on plea —If after a charge is framed the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate can refuse to convict on the plea, and can proceed to take further evidence—Emp v Rash Behari, 25 C W N 212. In a warrant case, although an accused can be convicted on his own plea of guilty, still a conviction should not be made unless there is evidence on the record to support the conviction. It is highly improper in a warrant case to convict an accused on his own admission alone without recording any evidence for the prosecution and without framing a formal charge—29 Mad 372

Again, in order that a conviction on a plea of the accused may be sustained, it is necessary that the accused should admit in his plea all the elements of the offence. If he admits that he killed the deceased but he denies that he had any intention of killing her the Magistrate cannot convict him on such statement. Such a confession does not amount to a plea of guilty—5 W R 23. If the accused pleads guilty to one offence the Judge cannot convict the accused for another offence e.g. if the accused pleads guilty to a charge of murder he cannot be convicted for culpable homicide not amounting to murder—13 W R 55.

If the accused person admits some or all of the facts alleged by the prosecution but pleads not guilty the proper procedure for the Magistrate is to proceed to trial according to law and not to convict him on the admission without taking evidence—9 Bom L R 1346.

255A In a case when a previous conviction is charged under the provisions of Section 221, subsection (7) and the accused does not admit that he has been previously convicted as alleged in the charge the Magistrate may after he has convicted the said accused under Section 255 subsection (2) or Section 258 take evidence in respect of the alleged previous conviction and shall record a finding thereon

834 This new section has been added by sect on 71 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923.

We think that this addition is necessary after section 255 to provide for a case where previous conviction is also charged. Definite provision is made for this in the case of trials before a Court of Session (see section 310) but it does not seem to have been provided for by the Code in the case of a Magistrate's trial.—Report of the Select Committee of 1916. It was suggested to us that the new section 255A is unnecessary on the ground that though a procedure for the proof of previous convictions is necessary in a Sessions Court to prevent the jury or the assessors from being prejudiced by anything they may hear as to the accused's previous record yet in warrant cases the same considerations do not apply. On the whole however we think the new section may serve a useful purpose and we have retained it.—Report of the Joint Committee of 1922.

Prior to the enactment of this section it was held that in a trial before a Magistrate it was not illegal to adduce evidence of a previous conviction before the accused was called upon for his defence if such procedure did not prejudice the accused—Dehrí Sonar v Emperor 50 Cal 367. In another case however the trial was set aside because the accused was prejudiced by reason of the Magistrate allowing the proof of previous conviction to go in before the evidence for the defence was gone into—Golam Hossein v Emperor 10 C W N cxcv. But these cases are no longer of any authority because the present section provides that the Magistrate can take evidence of previous conviction only after he has convicted the accused

256 (1) If the accused refuses to plead, or does not plead

Defence or claims to be tried he shall be required to state at the commencement of the next hearing of the case or, if the Magistrate for reasons to be recorded in writing so thinks fit forthwith whether he wishes to cross examine any and if so which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken. If he says he does so wish the witnesses named by him shall be recalled and after cross examination and re examination (if any) they shall be discharged. The evidence of any remaining witnesses for the prosecution shall next be taken and after cross examination and re examination (if any) they also shall be discharged. The accused shall then be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence.

(2) If the accused puts in any written statement the Magistrate shall file it with the record.

Change —The italicised words in subsection (2) have been added by section 72 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reasons have been thus stated by the Select Committee of 1916 — It may happen that up to the time of a charge being framed the accused is not professionally represented and it seems reasonable in such a case that he should be given time until the next hearing to engage a pleader and decide what witnesses he will cross examine.

835 Scope of Section —This section does not apply to proceedings under sec. 110. Though under section 117 the procedure prescribed for warrant cases is as nearly as possible to be followed in cases of security for good behaviour it does not follow that that gives a right to the accused person to further cross examine the prosecution witnesses on entering on his defence when he has once cross examined them—35 Cal. 243 1916 P. R. 1.

This section does not apply to an inquiry into a Sessions case prior to commitment. In such inquiry the accused has no right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed—Baldeo v. King Emperor 19 O. C. 239. See notes under section 208.

This section applies to summary trials (see sec. 262) and therefore in the trial of a warrant case under the summary procedure the accused has the right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the evidence for the prosecution is closed—Tithu Sahu v Emp, 1 P L T 652

836 Cross-examination —Before framing of charge —Although the proper time to recall and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution is after the charge is read over to him and before he is called upon to make his defence still this section does not prohibit such cross examination before the charge is framed—21 Cal 642 An opportunity should be given to the accused if he so desires to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses even though the charge is not yet framed—8 C W N 838

The fact that the accused has cross examined the witnesses for the prosecution before the charge is framed does not deprive him of the right given him by this section of recalling and cross examining those witnesses after the charge is framed—27 Cal 370 37 Cal 236 20 Cal 469 21 Cal 642 6 Bur L T 67 2 Bom L R 542 Even when the prosecution witnesses were cross examined by the accused before frame of charge on the understanding that the accused would not require those witnesses to be recalled for further cross examination after the charge still the Magistrate cannot refuse the application of the accused to recall and cross examine those witnesses after the charge is framed—6 C W N 424 Ram Chandra v K E 5 Pat 110 A I R 1926 Pat 214

837 Accused's right to cross examine —According to the plain language of this section the accused has a right to have the witnesses for the prosecution recalled and cross examined after frame of charge—7 C L J 240 4 Mad 130 1 P L T 652 24 Cr L J 371 and it is not necessary for the accused to show that he has a reasonable ground for exercising the right of recalling and cross examining the prosecution witnesses He is as a matter of right entitled to cross-examine—21 W R 29 25 W R 32 and the Magistrate is not justified in refusing to recall the prosecution witnesses for cross examination specially when the accused had not cross examined any witnesses before frame of charge—5 P L J 94 Where there are several accused each of the accused should be given an opportunity to cross examine A Magistrate cannot refuse to allow the further cross examination of the witnesses for the prosecution by one of the accused on the ground that they had been cross examined by another—11 C W N 101

The right referred to in this section is absolute and unqualified and is intended to apply only where the witnesses are still before the Court and before they have been discharged from further attendance Under sec 257 however there is a discretion vested in the Court to resubmit the prosecution witnesses already examined and where a witness has been allowed to depart under sec 256 on the representation of the accused that he is not required any further application to re cross examine him must be deemed to fall under sec 257—43 Mad 411

Magistrate's duty to ask — Under this section it is the duty of the Magistrate after a charge has been framed to require the accused to state whether he desires to cross examine the prosecution witnesses already examined—27 Cal 470 Omission on the part of the Magistrate to ask the accused whether he wished to recall any witnesses for cross examination will invalidate the conviction and the case will be retried from the point of framing the charge—Moola v Crown 1914 P R 11 16 Cr L J 146 Mahan Singh v Emp 24 Cr L J 371 A I R 1924 Lah 215 Omission to so ask the accused and the rejection of the accused's application on the ground that it was too late would prejudice the accused in his trial—190 A W N 5 In Munian Chetty v Emp 16 Cr I J 5 (Mad) however it has been held that such omission is a mere irregularity and the conviction is not thereby vitiated

This section lays down that the Magistrate shall record his reasons for requiring the accused to state forthwith whether they wish to cross examine the prosecution witnesses But omission to record the reasons does not render the trial illegal if it has not caused any prejudice to the accused—Ghasi v K E 6 Lah 354 27 Cr L J 408

Adjournment — An accused against whom a charge was framed without any previous intimation when required by the Magistrate to state whether he wished to cross examine said that he had no question to put at present but that time should be granted him for engaging a pleader and for cross examining witnesses it was held that the application for adjournment was reasonable under the circumstances and ought to be granted—Arunugam v Emp (1911) 2 M W N 192 Where the charges are complicated and the accused are ignorant persons they should not be called upon to cross examine the witnesses immediately after the charge is framed but a reasonable time should be given to them to get proper legal advice and to engage a pleader before they are called upon to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses—In re Rangasami 16 Cr L J 786 This is now made clear by the addition of the words at the commencement of the next hearing of the case The provision that the accused should be asked whether they wished to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on a date subsequent to that upon which they are called upon to plead to the charge is a new proposition deliberately introduced into the Code by the Amendment Act of 1923 and the only possible reason for the change is that the Legislature has intended to give the accused persons against whom charges are framed an interval of time to think out the lines of their defence before they are called upon to inform the Court how they intend to proceed Omission of this new procedure is an irregularity which vitiates the whole trial—Phuman v Emp 7 Lah L J 114 26 P L R 460 26 Cr L J 1158 The words inserted by the Amending Act of 1923 indicate the intention of the Legislature that sufficient time should be given to the accused to consider whether he wishes to cross examine any of the prosecution witnesses after the framing of the charge, and it is only in special cases that the Magistrate can require him to state forthwith if he so wishes—Ram Chandra v. K. E., 5 Pat 110 A. I. R. 1926 Pat 214

If summons-case tried as a warrant case—Where an inquiry commenced as a warrant case and the accused curtailed their cross-examination of prosecution witnesses under the impression that they would have a further opportunity of cross-examining them, but no offence triable as a warrant case having been disclosed, the Magistrate closed the case and convicted the accused as in a summons case it was held that it was the duty of the Magistrate to allow the accused an opportunity of completing the cross-examination before proceeding with the case—In re Apparu, 16 Cr. L. J. 250 (Mad.).

Similarly, where a Magistrate, while trying a summons case and a warrant case in one trial under the warrant-case procedure, dismissed the complaint in respect of the warrant case and proceeded with the complaint in respect of the summons case and on being requested by the accused to recall the prosecution witnesses for their further cross examination, refused to do so it was held that the refusal was illegal and the accused must certainly have been prejudiced by the same. The privilege conferred by this section is a substantial one, and when denied it is for the prosecution to shew that there was no prejudice—39 Mad. 503

838 Time of cross-examination—If an accused person desires to recall and cross examine the witnesses for the prosecution, the time at which he should express such desire is when the charge is read over to him—7 Cal. 28 The accused should cross examine the witnesses for the prosecution before he enters upon his defence. But of course it is open to the Magistrate to allow cross examination at any subsequent stage, before the case has been closed—37 Cal. 236 The accused may, after the charge has been drawn up and the witnesses for the defence have been examined recall and examine the witnesses for the prosecution—4 Mad. 130 Sec. sec. 257 But although it is in the discretion of the Magistrate to recall the witnesses at a subsequent stage of the case, the accused has no right to insist upon the witnesses being recalled—7 Cal. 28

'Any remaining witnesses'—The words 'any remaining witnesses' do not refer only to those witnesses who have been named by the complainant under sec. 252 (2), these words are wide enough to include any witness who according to the prosecution is able to support its case though he has not been summoned, provided he is not sprung upon the defence all on a sudden and sufficient opportunity is given to the accused to prepare for the cross examination of such witness—11 Bom. L. R. 1153

839 Discharge of prosecution witnesses—A Magistrate ought of his own motion to discharge the witnesses for the prosecution until accused person has exercised or waived his right of cross examination—6 N W P H C R 284 25 W R 48 Witnesses for the prosecution should not be discharged until the Court has ascertained whether their cross examination after the charge will be desired—8 N L R 65 Where re summoned as a matter of right—6 N W P H C R 284, 2 All 253 If the Magistrate did not so inquire and there was no sufficient proof that the accused consented to the discharge, the accused would be entitled to have the witnesses, whom he desires to cross examine, re summoned—6 N W P H C R 284

840 Expenses—This section gives the accused an absolute right to recall witnesses for cross-examination at the expense of the prosecution and it is not open to the Magistrate to order the accused to pay costs for recalling those witnesses—20 Cr L J 112 (Lah), Ram Chandra v K E, 3 Pat 110 A I R 1926 Pat 214, Radhakishan v Ramakrishna, 7 N L J 57 25 Cr L J 912 1907 P R 12, Bridhichand v Lakhmichand, 8 N L R 65 A Magistrate cannot refuse to summon a witness for the prosecution on the ground that fees for his attendance were not paid—4 C W N 351 Where in order to suit the convenience of the Court or for reasons connected with the discharge of other public business the witnesses for the prosecution are allowed to leave before the charge has been framed or before the right conferred by sec 256 has been exercised by the accused they must be required to attend again and ordinarily any expenses incurred on this score should be paid by the Government There is nothing in this chapter which enables the Magistrate to demand even from a complainant the expenses to be incurred by his witnesses—Bridhichand v Lakhmichand, 8 N L R 65 If, however, the complaint is a private one (e g for an offence of using false trade mark) and the prosecution is not carried on by or under the orders or with the sanction of the Government and is bailable, and it does not appear that the prosecution is directly in the interests of public justice, then the complainant may be ordered to pay the expenses of the witnesses The question as to whether the complainant or the Government should pay the expenses is to be decided by the Magistrate But in no case can the accused be compelled to pay the expenses of the witnesses for the prosecution whom he wishes to cross examine under section 256 Under this section, the right of the accused to cross examine is absolute—Radhakishan v Ramakrishna 7 N L J 57 25 Cr L J 912 A I R 1924 Nag 114

841. Defence—After the cross-examination is over, the accused should be called upon to enter upon his defence It is not a proper or cedure to call upon the accused to enter upon his defence before he has cross-examined the witnesses for the prosecution—8 N L R 65 So also, the practice of examining the witnesses for the prosecution, after the defence is closed to bolster up the prosecution if it appeared that the evidence was prejudicial, is highly deprecated—Radhamadhab v Emp, 15 C. W. N 414

Adjournment for defence—According to the provisions of secs 256 and 257, the accused is entitled as a matter of right to ask for an adjournment, after a charge has been framed against him, to enable him to adduce evidence in support of his defence—1 C W N 313 Where a trial is commenced as a warrant case, it should be concluded by the procedure laid down in this chapter for warrant cases and the Magistrate acts illegally in concluding the trial as a summons case and convicting the accused, without giving him an opportunity to have his witnesses produced by giving him the adjournment asked for—Munshi Teli v Emp, 2 P L T 482

842 Subsection (2)—Written Statement—Where certain legal practitioners convicted under sec 17 (1) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XIV of 1908, for being members of an Association called the "National Volunteers' Association" which was declared by the Government to be an unlawful association under sec 15 (2) (b) of that Act and were then called upon by the High Court to show cause why they should not be removed or suspended from practice under clause 8 of the Letters Patent whereupon one of them proposed to file a written statement, held that the proceedings under clause 8 of the Letters Patent were not of a criminal nature in this sense that the rules of procedure of a criminal trial such as the filing of a written statement under sec 256 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code were not applicable to them and the respondent's written statement could not therefore be received—In re Abdul Rashid, 4 Lah 271

A written statement filed by the accused cannot take the place of the examination of the accused which is imperative under sec 342. See notes under that section under heading 'Written statement'

257 (1) If the accused, after he has entered upon his defence

Process for compelling production of evidence at instance of accused.

applies to the Magistrate to issue any process for compelling the attendance of any witness for the purpose of examination or cross-examination, or the production of any document or other thing, the Magistrate shall issue such process unless he considers that such application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of ve or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Such ground shall be recorded by him in writing.

Provided that when the accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross examining any witness after the charge is framed, the attendance of such witness shall not be compelled under this section unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the purposes of justice.

(2) The Magistrate may, before summoning any witness on such application, require that his reasonable expenses incurred in attending for the purpose of the trial be deposited in Court.

The procedure of this section applies to summary trials and the accused is entitled to have processes issued for compelling the attendance of prosecution witnesses for cross examination when he is called upon to enter on his defence, if they have not been cross examined before—22 Cr L J 271.

843 Issue of process.—The language of this section is imperative. A Magistrate has no discretion to refuse to issue process to compel the attendance of any witness unless he considers that the application should be refused on the ground specified in the section—26 Bom 418. The Magistrate must summon every witness named in the list. He cannot arbitrarily limit the number of witnesses to be examined—26 Bom 418. Thus where the accused put in a list of 72 witnesses and the Magistrate ordered him to cite only 12 of them it was held that the Magistrate's order was arbitrary and illegal—31 Mad 131.

Once the Magistrate has issued summons, he is bound to assist the accused in enforcing the attendance of the witnesses. If the witnesses do not obey the summons the Magistrate cannot refuse to issue a second summons—10 Cal 931 1884 P R 28 1922 P L R 5, 1922 P L R 6 6 C W N 348 Ratanlal 594 4 All 53, Muhammad Din v Emp, 9 C W N cccxix Amrit Mondal v mp 1 P L T 490. It is the duty of the Court to see that the summonses or warrants are duly executed. If the witnesses do not attend the accused can insist upon the Court to issue further process. Where the witnesses cited by the accused failed to attend, and it appeared that the summonses were not duly executed, but the Magistrate proceeded to give judgment remarking that it was the business of the accused to take suitable steps for bringing his witness before the Court, held that the conviction of the accused was illegal and must be set aside—Dijoy v Emp, 19 A L J 945. When once a Court has issued a summons to a witness under this section and the witness fails to appear, it is not justified in dispensing with the evidence of the witness on the ground that at the most he would merely support the accused in his statement

844. Refusal to summon prosecution witnesses—An absolute right of cross examination of the prosecution witnesses is not conferred by this section. The Magistrate can refuse to allow the accused to recall such witnesses for cross examination, if he considers that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. But it is upon the party who thinks himself aggrieved to show that the ends of justice have been frustrated in consequence of the refusal to recall the prosecution witnesses for cross examination—20 Cal 469

Where the accused was given an opportunity under section 256 to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses but he refused to do so, leaving no option for the Magistrate but to close the case, and after the case was closed the accused applied to cross examine the prosecution witnesses and it was held that the accused's attitude was deliberately designed to harass the Court, and that the Magistrate would be justified in refusing the application—Vijaya Rao v. King Emp, 21 M L J 283 (F B). Where the witnesses for the prosecution were subjected to a very lengthy and strict cross examination before the framing of charge, the Magistrate was right in declining to re-summon those witnesses if he was of opinion that the application to re-summon the witnesses was made for vexation etc.—Ratanlal 930, 20 Cal 469, Ramsakal v. Emp, 26 Cr L J 1627 (Cal) but unless the Magistrate considers that the application to re-summon the witnesses is made for the purpose of vexation or delay the accused is entitled to have the prosecution witnesses summoned for cross examination—Monmohan v. Bankim 51 Cal 1044 (1047) 26 Cr L J 384, and the Magistrate cannot refuse to summon the witnesses merely on the ground that they were fully cross examined before—4 C W N 241, 4 C W N 351

The proviso to subsection (1) is to the effect that when an accused has been cross examined or had the opportunity of cross examining any witness after the charge has been framed, the attendance of such witness shall not be compelled under this section, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the ends of justice. The mere fact that it might have been possible from a cross examination of the prosecution witnesses to have extracted from them something which might have been of advantage to the accused is not a sufficient ground to enable the Magistrate to recall those witnesses, it must appear that there was to be obtained from the witnesses sought to be cross-examined something which would have materially affected the result of the trial—Ajo Mian v. K E, 6 P L T. 626 A I R 1925 Pat. 696

The mere fact that the accused's lawyers had previously declined to cross-examine such witnesses or the mere fact that such witnesses not cross examined before does not compel a Court to summon them for to do so would be to render the proviso meaningless—Ibid

After he has entered upon his defence —It is only after the accused has entered upon his defence that the Magistrate can in his discretion refuse the application of the accused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice—27 Cal 370

845 Examination of defence witnesses —A Magistrate cannot refuse to examine a defence witness who is present in Court if he is requested by the accused to do so—4 Bom L R 461 Though it is competent for a Magistrate to decline to summon witnesses for the defence under this section it is not competent for him to refuse to examine the defence witnesses on the ground that their evidence is unnecessary—Emp v Nanbasappa 14 Bom L R 360 Where in a trial involving a capital charge the accused is denied his right to have his defence witnesses examined in Court it must be held that it has resulted in a failure of justice and the conviction ought to be set aside and a re trial ordered—Ayarvali v Emp 45 M L J 305 If a witness is unable to attend the Court owing to illness and he appears to be an important witness the Magistrate should ascertain whether it will be possible for that witness to attend the Court within a reasonable time and if not then his evidence should be taken on commission—Jamu Singh v K E 3 Pat 591 (594) 25 Cr L J 1255 A I R 1925 Pat 55 A Magistrate cannot refuse to summon witnesses cited by the accused on the ground that they are implicated in the charge—15 W R 7 or on the ground that the accused is unable or refuses to pay the costs of the witnesses—24 Cr L J 831 or on the ground that they will not be able to give any reliable evidence one way or the other—(1911) 2 M W N 192 or on the ground that they are living at a great distance—45 M L J 305 The Magistrate cannot refuse process to a defence witness merely because he thinks that no useful purpose will be served by summoning that witness—Ganpat v Emp 24 Cr L J 686 (Lah) Where after a case on both sides having been closed the Magistrate summoned a witness to give evidence whereupon the accused prayed to have certain witnesses summoned to rebut the evidence of the Court witness held that the Magistrate was bound to summon such witnesses and could not refuse to do so on the ground that the accused had stated at the close of his case that he did not wish to examine any more witnesses—6 Cal 714

If a Magistrate rejects the application for summoning the witnesses he should specify his reasons for such refusal If he fails to record the reasons the conviction and sentence will be set aside—4 C W N 241 Manmohan v Baikim 51 Cal 1044 (1047) 3 All 392 1895 A W N 40 Debi Singh v Emp 24 Cr L J 831 Abdul Jabbar v Emp 25 Cr L J 310 A I R 1925 Cal 80

It is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section if the Magistrate states facts which led him irresistibly to the conclusion that the application was for no other purpose than that of vexation or delay or defeating the ends of justice although he does not say expressly that the application was made for that purpose—11 C W N 789 Where a Magistrate rejects an application after recording on it too late, this is a sufficient compliance with this section—39 Cal 781

846 Cross examination —The accused in a warrant case has got three opportunities of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses one (under sec 254) before the charge is framed secondly under section 255 after the charge is framed and under section 257 the accused is given the third opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses unless the Magistrate decides that the application for cross examination is vexatious—5 P L J 94 Lalrai v King Emp 46 Mad 449 (463)

Where on a refusal by the Magistrate to resubmit the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination the accused cited those witnesses on their own behalf as defence witnesses and then proceeded to cross examine them but were disallowed by the Magistrate it was held that the mere fact that the accused had been compelled to treat the witnesses for the prosecution as their own witnesses did not change their character and that although the accused were compelled to obtain their attendance as witnesses for the defence they were really prosecution witnesses and summoned under sec 257 for the purpose of cross examination and the Magistrate was wrong in refusing to allow their cross examination—Sheo Prakash v Rawlins 28 Cal 394 1 C W N 19 Lenku Reddi v Emp (1912) M W N 120

Where an accused first obtained process for the attendance of a witness but subsequently declined to examine him whereupon the Court examined him as a Court witness under section 340 it was held that the witness could not be treated as a defence witness and that the accused had the right to cross examine him—29 Cal 387

An accused may be allowed to cross examine the witnesses called by his co-accused when the case of the co-accused is adverse to his case—21 Cal 401

847 Inspection of documents —In a warrant case the accused has no right to call for the production of documents in the possession of the prosecution and to inspect the same until after a charge has been framed and read out to him under secs 254 and 255 This right is given by section 257 after a charge has been framed But the Magistrate should satisfy himself that the documents called for have some bearing on the case and are relevant before granting a summons for their production—Tahsiram v Pitamberdas, 8 S L R 267

848 Expenses —It has been held in some cases that the inability or even refusal to pay the expenses would not be an adequate ground for refusing to summon the defence witnesses—Delu Singh v Emp 24 Cr L J 831 (Pat) 1898 P R 7 But the Lahore High Court recently holds that if the rule laid down in 1898 P R 7 is to be literally followed then subsection (2) of this section would become an entirely dead letter because one can hardly conceive of a case where an accused person would willingly deposit the expenses of his witnesses if he knew that he had only to express his unwillingness to entitle him to get his witnesses summoned at the expense of the Government Subsection (2) fully empowers a Magistrate to order that the reasonable expenses of a witness shall be deposited by the accused before the witness is summoned But the Magistrate should only summon so many witnesses at one hearing as he thinks he will be able to examine on that hearing to save the expense of parties—Ganpal v Crown 24 Cr L J 686 (Lah)

Although the Magistrate can under this section require the accused to deposit in Court the expenses for the attendance of witnesses still if the Magistrate has once allowed witnesses to be summoned without demanding expenses from the accused and if by any chance the witnesses summoned for a particular date have not been examined on that date the Magistrate has no power afterwards to say that on the next date of hearing the witnesses shall not be summoned except on payment of their expenses by the accused—22 Cr L J 711 (Lah)

A Court ordering a party to deposit the travelling allowance of a witness should state the amount of the travelling allowance to be deposited—Gourishankar v Collector 6 P L T 215 26 Cr L J 965

Change —Subsection (2) has been amended by section 73 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 Similar amendment has been made in sec 245

849 Acquittal —An order of acquittal can be recorded only after a charge has been drawn up—22 W R 25 But an omission to prepare a charge does not invalidate an order of acquittal—1881 A W N 142 If however a warrant case is tried as a summons case and no charge is framed the acquittal amounts to a discharge under sec 253—1886 A W N 260

After a charge is framed the Magistrate can pass no other order except that of acquittal or conviction He cannot pass an order of discharge Even if he discharges the accused the discharge would amount to an acquittal—1883 P R 29 38 Mad 585 Bishambar v Emp 1 O W N 705 So also an order of dismissal of complaint would amount to an acquittal—5 C. L. R 359

Where a Magistrate passes an order of acquittal under this section the Sessions Judge cannot treat it as an order of discharge and direct a commitment of the accused under sec 436 (now 437)—43 Mad 330

The acquittal must be based on the finding that the accused is not guilty the Magistrate cannot acquit the accused merely because the complainant is absent Where a charge has been framed against the accused and the latter have entered upon their defence and produced some defence witnesses they cannot be acquitted on account of the absence of the complainant—Ram Baksh v Jaiaram 27 O C 316 26 Cr L J 264 1 O W N 613 But where after a charge is framed the complainant is absent and it is obvious that the complainant has no desire to proceed with his complaint the Magistrate should acquit the accused and not merely discharge him—Emp v Godhar 1 O W N 486 6 Cr L J 400 See also Note 852 under sec 250

850 Conviction —An accused must be convicted on the strength of the case made against him and not in consequence of his inability to put forward proof of his innocence—Ratanlal 5 If however a Magistrate feels reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused he is bound to acquit him—Ratanlal 854

It is not necessary that the conviction or acquittal should be by the same Magistrate who drew up the charge—3 Cal 495

Sentence —See notes under sec 245

259 When the proceedings have been instituted upon complaint and upon any day fixed for the hearing of the case the complainant is absent and the offence may be lawfully compounded or is not a cognizable offence, the Magistrate may, in his discretion notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained at any time before the charge has been framed, discharge the accused

Change —The italicised words have been added by section 74 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

Principle of section —The primary reason of passing the order of discharge is that the absence of the complainant raises a presumption that the complainant does not wish to proceed with the prosecution—12 Cr L J 184 (Sind)

851 Scope of section —It is not in every warrant case that a Magistrate will be competent to pass an order of discharge on account of the absence of the complainant. The warrant case must fall under this section—10 Cal 67 1891 A W N 116, that is, the case must be instituted upon complaint and the offence must be compoundable without the leave of the Court or non cognizable

All warrant cases would be governed by this section and the fact that a summons instead of a warrant has been issued in the first instance, will not exclude that case from the operation of this section and bring it under Chapter XX—10 W R 31

Under the old law if the case was not compoundable, no order of discharge could be passed—37 Bom 369, 13 Bur L T 244; 17 O C 18. Under the present section however, it is not always necessary that the offence must be compoundable. If the offence is a non cognizable one, an order of discharge may be passed

852 Absence of Complainant —If the complainant is absent the Court is not bound to wait till the end of the day, in order to give the absent complainant an opportunity of appearing—7 Mad 356. But a slight delay in attending the Court, especially where on a day the Court sat earlier than usual would not be a proper ground of discharge—Ratanlal 983

The Magistrate can discharge under this section if no charge has been framed. But if a charge has been framed, and the complainant is absent it is not legal to discharge the accused without hearing the evidence for the defence. The Magistrate ought to admit the accused to bail and enforce the attendance of the complainant—Ratanlal 524, Ratanlal 847. Once a charge has been framed, it is the duty of the trial Court to proceed with the trial even in the absence of the complainant, and to convict or acquit the accused on the merits—Narain v Mewa Singh, 22 Cr L J 312 (Lah) Nabi Baksh v Emp, 25 Cr L J 87 (Lah). Where, after a charge has been framed both parties are absent, the proper procedure for the Magistrate is to get the accused arrested under a warrant, and then decide whether he is guilty or not and not to discharge the accused and then direct the taking of proceedings under sec 514 for forfeiture of his bond—Emp v Godhan, 1 O W N 586

In a warrant case after the charge has been framed, the position of the complainant is reduced to that of a witness, and he cannot be asked to pay the costs of an adjournment necessitated by his absence—Nabi Baksh v Emp, 25 Cr L J 87 A I R 1914 Lah 627

853 Discharge —The proper order is one of discharge and not one of acquittal—37 Bom 369 So also an order of striking off the case is not a proper order under this section—Ramphal v King Emp 17 O C. 18 If a summons case and a warrant case are tried together the proper order is one of discharge and not one of acquittal—41 Mad 727

The Magistrate has a discretion to discharge the accused But in exercising this discretion in discharging the accused he should see whether there is a prima facie case against the accused if there is such a case the Magistrate should convict if he discharges for the sole reason that the complainant is absent his order is illegal—1891 A W N 116 Harun v Abdul 12 Cr L J 184 (Sind) If the absence of the complainant is due to his death the Magistrate has a discretion in a proper case to allow the complaint to be continued by a proper and fit complainant instead of discharging the accused—Mahomed Aram v Emp 28 Bom L R 288 A I R 1926 Bom 178

854 Fresh complaint —The discharge under this section does not amount to an acquittal and a Magistrate who has passed the order of discharge can re hear the case on fresh complaint—Chinnathambi v Gnanasamy 28 Mad 310 29 Mad 126 41 Mad 727 18 M L J 561 28 Cal 632 29 Cal 726 Balcland v Chandoomal 8 S L R 196 Asgar Ali v Akbar Ali 26 Cr L J 1040 (Nag)

Further inquiry —A District Magistrate is competent under sec 437 (now 436) to revive a case which has been dismissed by himself under this section and make it over to a subordinate Magistrate for trial—28 Cal 102

A District Magistrate can order further inquiry if he thinks that the discharge was improper—Ratanlal 988 Ratanlal 76 Ratanlal 145 12 Cr L J 184 as for instance where the complainant was prevented from appearing owing to circumstances beyond his control (e g by reason of floods) and the Magistrate discharged the accused—12 Cr L J 184 He can order further inquiry even if no additional evidence is disclosed—10 Bom 131 15 Cal 608 9 All 52

CHAPTER XXII.

OF SUMMARY TRIALS.

855 Change of procedure from Chap XX or XXI to Chap XXII — There is no section of the Code which expressly sanctions a change of procedure from a trial under Chap XXI to one under Chap XXII, but there is also no section which expressly prohibits such a change. The change of procedure is certainly not contemplated or sanctioned by the Code, but the High Court will regard it as a mere irregularity, which will not vitiate a trial unless it has occasioned a failure of justice. Thus in a case the Magistrate commenced the trial of the accused under Chap XXI but after framing the charge he continued the trial under Chap XXII. It was held that this change of procedure was a mere irregularity, and where there was no failure of justice, the High Court would not interfere in revision—Adoo v Crown, 10 S L R 185

So also, where a complaint was made of an offence not triable summarily, and the Magistrate commenced a regular inquiry, but afterwards finding that the offence committed was triable summarily, tried it summarily, it was held that the Magistrate had acted bona fide in the interests of justice, and the High Court refused to interfere—22 Mad 439. But in Gosta Behari v Baistam, 26 C W N 831 it was held that such a change of procedure in the midst of the trial was prejudicial to the accused, and that there should be a retrial.

Power to try summarily.

260. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Code,—

- (a) the District Magistrate,
 - (b) any Magistrate of the first class specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government, and
 - (c) any Bench of Magistrates invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class and specially empowered in this behalf by the Local Government,
- may, if he or they think fit, try in a summary way all or any of the following offences:—

- (a) offences not punishable with death, transportation or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months;

- (b) offences relating to weights and measures under Sections 264, 265 and 266 of the Indian Penal Code,
- (c) hurt, under Section 323 of the same Code,
- (d) theft, under sections 379 380 or 381 of the same Code, where the value of the property stolen does not exceed fifty rupees,
- (e) dishonest misappropriation of property under Section 403 of the same Code where the value of the property misappropriated does not exceed fifty rupees,
- (f) receiving or retaining stolen property under Section 411 of the same Code where the value of such property does not exceed fifty rupees
- (g) assisting in the concealment or disposal of stolen property under Section 414 of the same Code where the value of such property does not exceed fifty rupees,
- (h) mischief under Section 427 of the same Code,
- (i) house trespass under Section 448 and offences under Sections 451, 453 454 456 and 457 of the same Code,
- (j) insult with intent to provoke a breach of the peace, under Section 504 and criminal intimidation, under Section 506 of the same Code
- (k) abetment of any of the foregoing offences,
- (l) an attempt to commit any of the foregoing offences when such attempt is an offence,
- (m) offences under Section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act 1871

Provided that no case in which a Magistrate exercises the special powers conferred by Section 34 shall be tried in a summary way

(2) When in the course of a summary trial it appears to the Magistrate or Bench that the case is one which is of a character which renders it undesirable that it should be tried summarily the Magistrate or Bench shall recall any witnesses who have been examined and proceed to re hear the case in manner provided by this Code

856 Magistrates empowered —The District Magistrate of Bangalore has no power to try European British subjects summarily under this section as his powers are confined to those conferred on him by the Declarations of the G G in Council and the power to try European British subjects summarily under this section is not included in such powers—39 Mad 942 Under the present law however all such restrictions have been removed

Where an Assistant Commissioner of a district who was before his going to England on furlough authorised to exercise summary powers in a certain local area was on his return from furlough posted to another local area as a first class Magistrate it was held that he had no jurisdiction to exercise summary powers in the latter area—2 Cal 117 But see sec 40 as now amended

Presidency Magistrate —The provisions of this chapter 'do not apply to trials before Presidency Magistrates—Ratanlal 539

Responsibility of Magistrates —The responsibility thrown on Magistrates entrusted with summary powers is very great and the responsibility of those who have to entrust them with such powers is equally great Magistrates who are sufficiently alive to the responsibility entrusted to them will take care that the procedure or the record is not made more summary than what the law has laid down—21 All 189

857 Offences triable summarily —Whether an offence is to be tried summarily or not is to be determined by the facts stated in the complaint as well as the sworn testimony of the complainant—36 Cal 67 27 C W N 148 The Magistrate is competent to dispose of a case summarily where the facts reported disclose an offence triable summarily without reference to the particular charge pressed—6 N W P H C R 254 16 Cal 715 1 Bom L R 683

Where a person is charged with a graver offence the Magistrate ought not to cut down the offence to a less serious one at his own will in order to give himself jurisdiction to try it summarily—24 W R 48 27 Cal 983 29 Cal 409 11 Cal 236 27 C W N 148 1 C L R 434 1888 P R 5 Thus a charge of dacoity cannot be treated as one of unlawful assembly for the purpose of trying it summarily—21 W R 89 see also 23 W R 3 Ratanlal 670 1907 P L R 21 6 Bnr L T 137 24 W R 21 So also no Magistrate is entitled to split up an offence into its component parts for the purpose of giving himself summary jurisdiction thereby depriving the prisoner of his right of appeal—4 Cal 18 Where the value of the property stolen exceeded Rs 50 the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to reduce it to Rs 50 in order to give himself jurisdiction to try it summarily—21 W R 65

Joint charge of summary and non-summary offences—Where an accused person is charged with offences not triable summarily along with offences triable summarily, the Magistrate cannot disregard the former offences, and proceed to try the case summarily—11 Cal 236, 1888 P R. 5 Contra—10 All 55 where it has been held that the mere fact of the complainant charging the accused with summary offences along with non summary ones will not oust the summary jurisdiction of the Magistrate

Summary trial of non-summary offences—Effect—Where a Magistrate deliberately disregards the offence complained of which is an offence not triable summarily, and tries it summarily, his proceedings are absolutely void under sec 530 (g) The conviction and sentence will be set aside, and a new trial under the regular procedure directed—27 C W N 148, 5 C W. N 252. Emp v Ram Narain, 46 All 446

858 Instances of summary offences—Offences under sec 121, Indian Railways Act—1902 A W N 24 offences under sec 65 (a), Stamp Act, for failure to give a receipt—1 Weir 906 proceedings under sec 84 Bombay Act VI of 1873, for recovery of Municipal Taxes—17 Bom 131 offences under the Companies Act for not filing the balance sheet with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies—35 All 173 offences under sec 49 Bengal Abkari Act XXI of 1856 the confiscation provided in that section being merely a consequence of the conviction and not part of the punishment—3 Cal 366

Property of value not exceeding fifty rupees—Where a box containing fifty Rupees was stolen and the price of the box was annas eight the theft was of property exceeding Rs 50 in value (i e Rs 50 8 annas) and could not be tried summarily—22 W R 65 Since a tenant is entitled to the exclusive possession of the whole produce until it is divided under sec 71 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, his complaint against the landlord for theft for having cut and carried away paddy worth Rs 88 of which the latter was entitled to one half cannot be summarily tried by a Magistrate as the value of the property in this case must be regarded as Rs 88 and not Rs 44 only—1 P L J 230

859. Offences not triable summarily—Offences which are punishable with imprisonment for more than 6 months e g an offence under sec 66 of the U P Excise Act (IV of 1910) which is punishable with imprisonment for one year—Bhishha v Emp, 28 O C 123 26 Cr L J 800, offences under sec 2 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act—6 Bom L R 255, 2 L B R 163, 1902 U B R 3rd Quarter (W B C A) 1 4 Mad 234 20 Mad 235. 16 Bom 368, 27 Cal 131, 33 Bom 22 6 S L R 165, 1912 P. Under clause (1) of this section an offence under sec 457 I P C (house breaking by night in order to commit theft) is triable summarily but if the property stolen is worth more than Rs 50 a summary trial would be improper—Dipchand v Emp 14 N L R 190

860 When summary trial undesirable or improper—A summary trial is undesirable in a case where a large number of correspondence has to be gone into and the case is by no means of a simple character—35 All 173 or in a case in which from the nature of the dispute and the plea taken by the accused it is apparent that complicated questions of right and title and production of documentary evidence are involved—Bhīn Bahadur v Emp 1 P L T 121 Parmeshwar v Emp 3 P L T 347 2 Bur L J 55 6 S L R 120 A summary procedure is also undesirable where the accused is a deaf and dumb person—8 Bom L R 849 It is also improper where the Magistrate takes cognizance of the case from his own knowledge or suspicion and holds the trial on inadequate materials—3 C W N 1000 1905 P L R 31 25 W R 69 It is also undesirable in offences of a very serious nature—6 S L R 101 14 N L R 190 It is improper where the charge is a serious or complicated one and the trial goes on for a considerable time and a local inquiry has to be made or a large number of witnesses and accused persons are examined—Emp v Rustomji 23 Bom L R 984 Ghasia Mal v Crown 3 Lah L J 316 25 W R 65 Rakimulla v Emp 26 Cr L J 1016 (Snd)

A summary trial is also improper in a case where the conviction of the accused may entail further serious consequences (e g dismissal from service) Thus where a Police officer of many years standing was charged with criminal intimidation with a view to prevent a person from giving evidence against certain grave offenders and was tried summarily and convicted held that the Magistrate did not exercise a sound discretion in trying the case summarily and depriving the accused of the privilege of an appeal—Sībramanya Ayyar v Queen 6 Mad 396 So also where a village Kulkarni is charged with offences under secs 176 and 402 I P C (intentional omission to give information of offences to a public servant) the Magistrate should not try the accused summarily in as much as cases under sec. 202 are complicated and the conviction of the accused may entail further serious consequences (dismissal from service)—Q E v Hari Gopal, Ratanlal 778, Q E v Waman, Ratanlal 784

261. The Local Government may confer, on any Bench of Magistrates invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the second or third class, power to try summarily all or any of the following offences —

Power to invest Bench of Magistrates invested with less power

(a) offences under the Indian Penal Code, Sections 277, 278, 279, 285, 286, 289, 290, 292, 293, 294, 323, 334, 336, 341, 352, 426, 447 and 504.

(b) offences against Municipal Acts, and the conservancy clauses of Police Acts which are punishable only with fine or with imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month with or without fine

(c) abetment of any of the foregoing offences,

(d) an attempt to commit any of the foregoing offences, when such attempt is an offence

The italicised words at the end of clauses (a) and (b) have been added by section 75 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

A Bench of Magistrates cannot try summarily any other offence except those mentioned in sec 260 and this section—21 W R 12 9 Cal 96

262 (1) In trials under this Chapter, the procedure prescribed for summons cases shall be followed in summons cases, and the procedure prescribed for warrant cases shall be followed in warrant cases, except as hereinafter mentioned

Procedure for summons and warrant-cases applicable

(2) No sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding three months shall be passed in the case of any conviction under this Chapter.

Limit of imprisonment

861 Procedure —The scanty procedure laid down in this Chapter should be strictly followed—22 W R 28 15 Mad 83 Magistrates should take care that the procedure and the record are not made more summary than what the law has laid down—21 All 189, Damodar v Emp 3 P L. T 499 Thus where the Magistrate without issuing process & a record of the proceedings and without dismounting from the horse which he was riding, convicted and fined a man summarily for causing obstruction in a public way, it was held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was illegal—15 Mad 83

In a summary trial of a warrant case, the Magistrate must adopt the procedure laid down in Chapter XXI (except that he has not to frame a charge and is not bound to record the evidence of the witnesses) Therefore the provision of section 256 which gives the accused an absolute right of cross examination of the prosecution witnesses after they have been examined in chief must apply to a summary trial of warrant cases—1 P L T 652 The accused is entitled to have processes issued for compelling the attendance of the prosecution witnesses for cross examination—22 Cr L J 271 (Cal)

In a summary trial of a warrant case, though a charge need not be framed, the accused person cannot be called dilatory, if he delays to name his witnesses until he has heard the evidence for the prosecution and found that the Magistrate considers the evidence a substantial basis for charging him—Ratanlal 768 In a warrant case tried summarily, the Magistrate ought to grant an adjournment if desired by the accused to enable him to summon the witnesses for the defence under sec 257, unless the Magistrate considers that the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay—5 L B R 20

In a summons case the Magistrate must not only state the charge to the accused, but explain it to him—1 Bur S R 594, the record must show that this has been done, and the answer of the accused must be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used—Ibid

862 Sentence —In a summary case, a sentence of imprisonment for more than three months cannot be awarded, if an adequate sentence cannot be passed the case should not be tried summarily—4 L B R 338 The limit of three months applies only to a substantive sentence, a Magistrate is therefore competent to award a sentence of imprisonment in default of fine, in addition to the three months imprisonment—6 All 61

Fine of any amount may be imposed there is no limit to the amount of fine awardable in a summary trial—35 All 173

Solitary imprisonment can also be awarded as part of the sentence—6 All 83

A Magistrate is competent to take security bond under sec 106 on conviction in a summary trial—1896 A W N 181.

The High Court in revision can enhance the sentence passed in a summary trial to two years : i.e. the limit to which a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class can pass sentence—Bom H C Cr R 30-7 1883 See subsection (3) of sec 439

Compensation —Compensation may be awarded under sec 250 to the accused in a trial held summarily—11 Mad 142

263 In cases where no appeal lies, the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates need not record the evidence of the witnesses or frame a formal charge; but he or they shall enter, in such form as the Local Government may direct, the following particulars —

- (a) the serial number,
- (b) the date of the commission of the offence,
- (c) the date of the report or complaint
- (d) the name of the complainant (if any),
- (e) the name, parentage and residence of the accused,
- (f) the offence complained of and the offence (if any) proved, and in cases coming under clause (d), clause (e), clause (f) or clause (g) of sub-section (1) of Section 260 the value of the property in respect of which the offence has been committed
- (g) the plea of the accused and his examination (if any),
- (h) the finding, and, in the case of a conviction, a brief statement of the reasons therefor,
- (i) the sentence or other final order and
- (j) the date on which the proceedings terminated

863 Record —Although the object of a summary procedure is to shorten the course of trial it is nevertheless incumbent on the Magistrate to put on record sufficient evidence to justify his order—27 Cal 450 10 C W N 79 Ratanlal 778 If the particulars required by this section are not clearly given in a judgment in a summary trial convicting the accused the judgment is defective and the conviction cannot stand—Gulam v Emp 23 Cr L J 161

The record should be written by the Magistrate himself, there is no provision enabling him to delegate this duty to a clerk—6 Mad 397 The record should be made at the time of the trial and not afterwards. If admission of the accused should also be recorded at once—25 Mad 23

District Magistrates should satisfy themselves from time to time by examination of the records of summary trials that the law relating to summary trials is properly observed and especially that Magistrates do not exceed their jurisdiction in this regard —Cal G R & C O 5 21

864 Evidence —In a summary trial of a summary trial

Magistrate need not record the evidence of witnesses in writing—1905 A W N 143 Ratanlal 334 But this does not mean that this section excuses a Magistrate from hearing the evidence of witnesses. If the accused denies the charge the complainant and his witnesses must be examined and the case must be decided upon the effect of their evidence though the evidence need not be recorded—39 Cal 931

If at the commencement of the trial the Magistrate is unable to determine whether the proper sentence to be passed should be an appealable one or not he must make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as his examination proceeds. But if he can at this stage determine that the sentence will be in any event non appealable he need not record the evidence. If however he actually does so the notes of the evidence form part of the record of the case and cannot be destroyed by him. Where the Magistrate had destroyed such record the High Court in revision was unable to form an opinion on the propriety of the conviction and set it aside—Satish Chandra v Emp 48 Cal 280 32 C L J 451 22 Cr L J 462 Lal Chand v Emp 46 Cr L J 1454 (Nag)

855 Frame of charge—This section exempts the Magistrate from framing a charge in cases in which no appeal lies. If however he passes an appealable sentence in the case he must frame a charge—Natabar v A E 27 C W N 923 23 Cr L J 1270 Although it is not necessary under this section to frame a charge still the accused must be called upon to answer to the particulars of the offence charged and the Magistrate must specify the offence complained of in such a way as to give the accused notice of what is charged against him—16 C W N 595

866 Particulars of the offence—The record should show clearly the precise nature of the offence and should be complete in all particulars—1881 A W N 59 The facts found by the Magistrate must show what offence has been committed by the accused—3 C W N 281 1887 P R 7 1889 P R 5 Further the record however brief must show the necessary ingredients of the offence charged—3 L B R 3

The offence charged the offence proved and the reasons for conviction must be recorded in such a manner as to enable the Revision Court to say aye or no from within the four corners of the record itself whether the offence charged is an offence in point of law whether the offence proved is an offence in point of law and whether the reasons for the conviction are good and sufficient—10 C W N 79

Under clause (f) the value of the property must be set forth. The Magistrate ought to direct his mind to the question and satisfy himself that the property in respect of which he was trying the accused was less than Rs. 50 in value. It is not enough that it is ascertainable from the records—Brij Nandan v Emp 6 P L T 114 A I R 1922 Pat 227

867 Examination and plea of accused —See clause (g) The plea of the accused must be recorded, omission to record the plea will vitiate the conviction—9 C W N 1111 In all warrant cases there must be some examination of the accused as laid down in sec 342 Sec 263 does not give the Magistrate any discretion whether he will examine the accused or not The words if any in clause (g) are intended for summons cases and do not apply to warrant cases in the latter cases the examination is imperative—41 Cal 743 3 P L T 347 Even the plea of the accused cannot take the place of the examination of the accused and render it unnecessary—3 P L T 347 But the Second Court holds that the examination of the accused is imperative in all summary trials whether of summons or of warrant cases The words if any in this section do not limit the obligation imposed on Courts by sec 342 or render it inapplicable to summary trials but merely have reference to those cases in which owing to the admission or plea of accused (sec 243) or owing to the weakness of the evidence called in support of the prosecution (sec 245 253) the accused can either be convicted on his own plea without the taking of evidence or acquitted on the evidence without the examination referred to in sec 342 —Emp v Nabu 26 Cr L J 1554 A I R 1926 Sind 1 (F B)

868 Finding —In summary trials it is very important that there should be clear findings on questions of fact because it is only through such findings that the Court of Revision can form its own judgment with regard to the legality or otherwise of the proceedings of the trial Court—Emp v Jagmohan 24 Cr L J 916 (Oudh)

869 Reasons for conviction —The Magistrate in a summary trial must in recording the reasons for the conviction state them in such a manner that the High Court may in revision judge whether there were sufficient materials before the Magistrate to justify the conviction—1899 A W N 81 1885 A W N 213 3 C W N 281 1883 A W N 114 1886 A W N 181 Jagan Nath v Lmp 16 O C 357 6 Cal 579 13 C P L R 17 1 L B R 208 3 P L T 499 Janaki v Raghunath 19 Cr L J 719 (Pat) Magistrates should set out so much of the reasons that have influenced them as to satisfy the accused that the Magistrate has considered each of the ingredients of the offence necessary in law for the conviction to which the Magistrate has proceeded—21 All 189 Brij bas v K E 10 A L J 251 Ram Harakh v Crown 9 S L R 89 and while this should be recorded with brevity the brevity should not be such as to tend to obscurity—21 All 189 Thus a judgment in a single line is not a judgment according to law—20 Cr L J 431 (Patna)

264 (1) In every case tried summarily by a Magistrate Record in appealable or Bench in which an appeal lies such cases Magistrate or Bench shall before passing sentence record a judgment embodying the substance of the evidence and also the particulars mentioned in section 263

(2) Such judgment shall be the only record in cases coming within this section

870 Record —The record of the trial must be made at the time of the trial and not subsequently prepared after the close of the trial from memory or from rough notes—15 Mad 83 The judgment which is the only record in appealable cases must be written by the Magistrate himself He cannot delegate that duty to a clerk nor can affix his signature to the record or judgment by a stamp—6 Mad 396

Where a Magistrate passes an appealable sentence he can not make his record in the manner prescribed by sec 263 but must record the evidence and frame a charge—Natabar v Kt g Emp 27 C W N 13 Contra—Kallu v Emp 26 Cr L J 1331 (Oudh) which lays down that even in appealable cases it is not necessary to frame a charge

871 Substance of evidence —The Magistrate is not bound to record the substance of every separate deposition but he is to state generally what is the substance of the witnesses evidence—25 W R 6 The evidence should be recorded in such a way as to enable the Appellate Court to form an opinion whether the evidence is sufficient to support a conviction—4 L B R 338 1 All 680 Where the judgment convicting the accused did not embody the substance of the evidence but the Magistrate merely recorded that the prosecution witnesses supported the complainant and that the evidence of the defence witnesses was conflicting and unreliable held that the judgment was defective and the conviction could not stand—Salim v Emp 24 Cr L J 484 A I R 1924 Oudh 167

In a summary trial a Magistrate made rough notes of the evidence which he subsequently copied and placed on the record and destroyed the original notes. It was held that the Magistrate's action was improper because the destruction of the original notes was tantamount to destroying the original record with the result that there was no legal evidence on the record which an appellate Court could go into—1 P L T 63 See also Saish Chandra v Emp 48 Cal 280 and Lal Chand v Emp 26 Cr L J 1454 (1925)

But the defect in recording the evidence is not always a sufficient ground for quashing the conviction. When the evidence is very imperfectly recorded the Appellate Court may require the Lower Court to remedy the defects by properly recording the evidence in a fresh judgment after re-examining the witnesses or it may order a retrial with that view—1 All 680

265 Records made under section 263 and judgments recorded under section 264 shall be written by the presiding officer, either in English or in the language of the Court or, if the Court to which such presiding officer is immediately subordinate so directs in such officer's mother tongue

(2) The Local Government may authorize any Bench of Magistrates empowered to try offences summarily to prepare the aforesaid record or judgment by means of an officer appointed in this behalf by the Court to which such Bench is immediately subordinate and the record or judgment so prepared shall be signed by each member of such Bench present taking part in the proceedings

(3) If no such authorization be given the record prepared by a member of the Bench and signed as aforesaid shall be the proper record

(4) If the Bench differ in opinion any dissentient member may write a separate judgment

The record must be written by the Magistrate himself see 6 Mad 396 cited under sec 264

CHAPTER XXIII.

OF TRIALS BEFORE HIGH COURTS AND COURTS OF SESSION.

A—Preliminary

266 In this Chapter, except in sections 276 and 307, and in Chapter XVII, the expression "High Court defined Court" means a High Court of Judicature established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, and includes the Chief Court of Oudh, the Courts of the Judicial Commissioners of the Central Provinces and Sind and such other Courts as the Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare to be High Courts for the purposes of this Chapter and of Chap'er XVIII.

The words Chief Court of Oudh have been added by the Oudh Courts Act (XXXII of 1925) and the other italicised words in the middle of the section have been added by sec 12 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923. The words and of Ch XVIII at the end of the section were accidentally omitted when the Act of 1898 was framed and have now been added by sec 76 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923).

The Judicial Commissioner (e.g. of Sind) is a High Court only for the purposes of Chapters 18 and 23 but not for the purpose of Ch 31 (Appeal). A Judicial Commissioner holding a sessions trial on the Original Side is to be deemed a Sessions Judge and not a High Court for the purpose of Ch 31, so that an appeal will lie from his decision to the Bench of the Judicial Commissioners Court—Khudabux v Emp, 26 Cr L J 562 A I R 1925 Sind 249.

267. All trials under this Chapter before a High Court shall be by jury, and notwithstanding anything herein contained, in all criminal cases transferred to a High Court under this Code or under the Letters Patent of any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of

Trial before High Court to be by jury

India Act 1915 the trial may if the High Court so directs be by Jury

268 All trials before a Court of Session shall be either by jury or with the aid of assessors

Trials before Courts of Session to be by jury or with assessors

Trial ordinarily with assessors—In the absence of any Notification under sec 269 a trial in the Court of Session must be with the aid of assessors—1858 P R 18

872 Trial by jury and trial with assessors—Difference—In a trial by jury the jury is the real tribunal and is aided by the Judge and in certain matters directed by the Judge but in a trial with the aid of assessors the Judge is the sole tribunal and judge of law and fact and the responsibility of the decision rests solely with him though in the decision of the case he is expected to take into consideration the opinion of each assessor In a trial by jury the jury form a tribunal or body with a foreman and the verdict is the verdict of the body and when there is no unanimity among the members of the body the opinion of the majority prevails as the verdict of the body But in the case of a trial with the aid of assessors the assessors do not form a body but each acts and expresses his opinion individually and the Judge is to invite the opinion of each separately and record it—A. E. v. Thirumalai 24 Mad 523 27 Cal 295 14 Bom L R 710 Jaisukh v Emp 43 All 125 19 A L J 1 Jairam v Emp 20 N L R 129 25 Cr L J 459 In a trial with the aid of assessors the individual opinion of each assessor is taken but in a trial by jury the individual opinions of the members of the jury are never intended to be disclosed—36 Mad 585 But the law makes no distinction as to the procedure between a trial by jury and a trial with the aid of assessors except as to the summing up of the case in the former and the manner in which the verdict in the former and the opinions of the assessors in the latter are respectively taken—33 Bom 423

Trial when begins—A trial by jury or with assessors begins only when the charge has been read and the accused claims to be tried—15 Bom 514

268 (1) The Local Government may,* * by order in the official Gazette direct that the trial of all offences or of any particular class of offences before any Court of Session, shall be by jury in any district, and may, with the like sanction, revoke or alter such order

Local Government may order trials before Court of Session to be by jury

(2) The Local Government, by like order may also declare that in the case of any district in which the trial of any offence is to be by jury, the trial of such offence shall if the Judge on application made to him or of his own motion so directs be by jurors summoned from a special jury list, and may revoke or alter such order

(3) When the accused is charged at the same trial with several offences of which some are and some are not triable by jury he shall be tried by jury for such of those offences as are triable by jury, and by the Court of Session with the aid of the jurors as assessors for such of them as are not triable by jury

The words with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council which occurred in the first line of subsection (1) have been omitted by the Devolution Act XXVIII of 1920. The words with the like sanction occurring near the end of that subsection should also be omitted and have been retained obviously through oversight

873 Class of offences —The classes of offences referred to in this section are not restricted to the classification found in the Penal Code e g offences against the State offences against public tranquility etc or to the classification found in this Code e g bailable offences cognizable offences etc Offences may be classified according to the persons who commit them or according to the person or property against whom or which they are committed or in regard to the particular occasion in connection with which they are committed—23 Mad 632

Where by a Notification the Government directed that in a particular district an offence under sec 436 I P C was to be tried by jury and not with the aid of assessors held that an offence under sec 436 read with sec 149 I P C should also be tried by jury and not with the aid of assessors because an offence under sec 436-149 I P C is not a different offence from an offence under sec 436 I P C—Ramsundar v Emp 7 P L T 178

874 Trial of jury case with assessors and vice versa —If a jury case is tried with the aid of assessors and no objection is taken at the trial the trial will stand good by virtue of sec 536 (2)—23 Mad 632

So also the trial by jury of a case properly triable with assessors is not invalid on that ground—3 Cal 765 And unless the accused objects to such procedure before the verdict is delivered he cannot be allowed to object with regard to it subsequently in appeal—33 Bom 423 Where an assessor case is tried by jury the Judge cannot treat the verdict of the jury as the opinion of assessors so as to be able to concur with the opinion of the minority if he disagrees with the opinion of the majority. If the Judge disagrees with the opinion of the majority he must submit the case to the High Court under sec 307 of the Code—5 Cr L 555

875 Joint trial of jury case and assessor case —Under sub-section (3) an accused may be tried simultaneously at one trial by the jury for offences triable by jury and by the Judge with the aid of the same jurors as assessors for offences triable with the aid of assessors—2 L W 933 But in such a trial the Judge must always preserve a distinction between the two cases (the jury case and the assessor-case) and must not treat the whole case as a jury-case. He must separately record the verdict of the jury in the jury-case and must separately record the opinions of the jurors as assessors in the assessor case. If he disagrees with the verdict of the jury he must not send the whole case to the High Court but must send only the jury-case under sec 307 and pass judgment with reference to the assessor case under sec 309—9 Bom L R 1057 Ratanlal 600 If in the course of such trial it appears that only one offence was committed viz an offence triable with assessors and the Judge tries the case with the jury and disagrees with the verdict of the jury he cannot send the case to the High Court under sec 307 but should pass judgment under sec 309 because he must treat the case as one triable with the aid of assessors and he must treat the jurors as assessors—2 Mad 15

Again in such joint trial of two cases (a jury case and an assessor case) all persons who would serve as jurors in the jury case must serve as assessors in the assessor-case. Where the Judge after taking the verdict of the jurors in the jury case took only the opinion of two of them in the assessor case it was held that the Judge's procedure was illegal he should have taken the opinion of all the jurors as assessors—Ramkrishna v Emp, 26 Mad 598 Similarly where in such joint trial the Judge selected five gentlemen as jurors in the jury case and two of them only as assessors in the assessor case it was held that the Judge acted illegally he ought to have taken all the five jurors as assessors in the assessor case—Pingai v K E 21 M L J 520

876 Transfer of case from jury district to non jury district and vice versa —The words trial shall be by jury in any district mean that the trial shall be by jury if the case is tried in the district in which the notification is in force they do not mean that the case shall be tried by jury even if it is transferred from a jury district to a district where jury trial does not prevail. The High Court has power under sec 526 to transfer a sessions case from a jury district to a non jury district and section 269 does not in any way limit that power but in such a case the trial in the latter district will be with the aid of assessors—Emp v Jumo, 10 S L R 154 18 Cr L J 31

dacoits for some distance but returned back almost immediately and had nothing to do with the dacoity that afterwards followed it was held that such a statement did not amount to a plea of guilty—7 W R 39 Where the plea of guilty is accompanied by qualifying statements such a plea is not properly speaking a plea of guilty Thus where the accused said that he killed his wife but that he did so under grave provocation (e.g. in consequence of discovering her in an act of adultery) such a statement was not a plea of guilty to murder—11 Cal 410 So also where the prisoner admitted the guilt but said that he had committed the offence under the influence of certain persons mentioned it was held that the plea was not one of guilty—1886 A W N CC Where the prisoner pleaded guilty but stated further that he committed the offence because he was subject to epileptic fits it was held that this was not a plea of guilty on which the accused could be properly convicted—Ratanlal 698 Where the prisoner admitted that he killed his wife but stated that he was not in his right mind at the time it was held that this was not a plea of guilty—5 N W P H C R 110

Partial plea of guilty —Where the accused is charged with having made two contradictory statements and he pleads guilty to one charge that does not show that he pleads not guilty in respect of the other charge It may be that both statements may be false In such a case the prisoner ought not to be allowed to elect which statement he shall admit to be false—8 W R (Cr Let) 6

Plea of not guilty —The accused can plead guilty under sec 271 or he can claim to be tried under sec 272 or he can refuse to plead which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried The plea of not guilty is not recognized by this Code—41 Cal 1072 A plea of not guilty amounts to a claim to be tried

Record of plea —If the accused pleads guilty the plea should be recorded Where no such plea appears on the record the conviction is bad and must be set aside—5 M L T 75 7 Cal 96 5 A L J 157

If the statement is made by the accused in a foreign language it is not necessary that the plea must be recorded in the words of that language It should be recorded in the language in which it is conveyed to the Court by the interpreter—5 Cal 826

881 Conviction on plea —The word thereon shows that the conviction must be upon the plea recorded before the Sessions Judge and not on a confession made before the committing Magistrate If the prisoner before the Court of Session has pleaded what in effect amounts to a plea of not guilty the Judge is not justified in convicting him upon a confession made by him before the committing Magistrate—2 N W P H C R 479 Some corroborative evidence is necessary to warrant a Court of Session in acting upon a confession made before the committing Magistrate but retracted at the trial—1898 A W N 22, 23 Bom. 316

Where an accused person pleads guilty to the specific offence with which he is charged, he cannot on such plea be convicted of an offence other than that specifically charged—2 Weir 335 Thus, where the prisoner has pleaded guilty to the offence of murder, he cannot be convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder—3 S L R 58 2 Weir 335 Where the accused has pleaded guilty to a charge of culpable homicide, he cannot be convicted of the offence of grievous hurt for which he was not tried—Ratanlal 413

Conviction discretionary —It is discretionary with the Sessions Judge to accept or not the plea of guilty of the accused He may or may not convict the accused on such plea It is open to the Judge to go into the evidence and leave the case to the jury, despite a plea of guilty—2 Weir 335, 20 O C 136 Shanker v Emp 24 A L J 318 27 Cr L J 449 If the Judge does not think fit to convict the prisoner on the charge to which he has pleaded guilty, he should proceed to try him as if the plea has been one of 'not guilty,' and he will have to take all the evidence in order to determine whether the prisoner has committed the offence to which he has pleaded guilty or any other offence with which he is charged—13 W R 55 23 Mad 151 Where there are several co-accused who are to be tried jointly, and one accused has pleaded guilty, the Judge has a discretion to decide either that the accused be convicted on such plea or that he should be put on his trial in spite of his plea of guilty The proper procedure to follow in such a case is that if the Judge convicts the accused on the plea of guilty he should be removed from the dock, in which case he can be called as a witness against the other accused, or that the Judge should put it on his record that he decides to put the accused on his trial in spite of his plea of guilty—Kesho Singh v King Emp, 20 O C. 136, 23 Mad 151

Where the Judge ought not to convict on plea —Where the accused has pleaded guilty to one offence, but there is clear prima facie evidence of a different offence, the Judge ought not to convict the accused on his plea, but should proceed to try the case Thus where there is clear prima facie evidence of the offence of murder but the prisoner has pleaded guilty to a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder on grave and sudden provocation, the Judge ought not to convict him for the latter offence, but should proceed to try him for the former offence—Ratanlal 410

A plea of guilty should not be accepted in capital offences—1905 P. R 54, Emp v Laxmya, 19 Bom L R 356 In a case of murder, it has long been the practice of the Court not to accept the plea of guilty, for murder is a mixed question of fact and law Unless the Court is perfectly satisfied that the accused knew exactly what was implied by his plea of guilty the case should be tried especially where the accused is an illiterate person—Dall v Emp 20 A L J 326 20 A L J 669 In capital cases, where there is doubt whether the persons who pleaded guilty to the charge of murder fully understood the meaning and effect of such plea the Judge should proceed with the trial and take evidence—19 All 119 A person may plead that he hit somebody who thereby died without necessarily admitting that he committed murder for murder under the I P C requires a certain intention or a certain knowledge In such cases it is advisable not to convict solely upon the plea of the accused but to proceed to trial—8 Bom L R 240 The Nagpur Court holds that it is not illegal to convict in a murder case on a plea of guilty and in each case the circumstances must be examined to see whether the plea of guilty is one which should have been acted on Where the accused is represented by a pleader and a trial is not claimed and the accused's answer amounts to a plea of guilty it is quite legal to convict him on that plea—Manjoo v Emp 24 Cr L J 570 (Nag)

882 Charge for one offence conviction on plea for another —It is illegal to convict a person of an offence upon his own plea when there is no formal charge in respect of that offence Thus where an accused person was charged with the offence of murder and the charge was not proved but the Court convicted her of the offence of concealment of birth which it considered was admitted by her in her examination by the Court it was held that such conviction was illegal A charge of concealment of birth should have been framed and the accused tried thereon—Ratanlal 386

Postponement of conviction —Where an accused person pleads guilty the Court should record his confession and forthwith convict him thereon If there are other persons being tried with him for the same offence the Court should not postpone his conviction merely for the purpose of allowing the statements he may have made to be considered against the co accused It is against the spirit of the law to postpone his conviction so that he may technically be said to be tried jointly for the same offence with the other co accused and any statement in the nature of a confession he may make may be used against them—30 All 540 12 A L J 1239 13 C W N 552 After a plea of guilty a trial may be continued when it is thought necessary to ascertain the part taken by the accused in order to assess the punishment but it is unfair to defer the conviction of the accused solely with the view of having his confession considered against his co accused who have pleaded not guilty—23 All 53

and convicts the accused his trial is at an end and he may be called as a witness against or for any person who has been accused along with him—3 Mad 151 Where in a joint trial of several persons one of the accused pleads guilty his statement affecting himself and the other accused is not entitled to be considered under sec 30 of the Evidence Act for the statement following the plea of guilty ceases to be the statement of a person jointly tried because the trial ends so far as he is concerned with his plea—27 Mad 491 1911 P R 15 15 Bom 66 19 Bom 195 7 Mad 10 4 Cal 483 ~C W N 749 17 All 524 22 All 445 7 All 160

272 If the accused refuses to or does not plead or if he claims to be tried the Court shall proceed to choose jurors or assessors as hereinafter directed and to try the case

283 If the accused refuses to or does not plead —The accused cannot be called upon to plead not guilty such a plea is not recognised in the Code The accused may either claim to be tried or refuse to plead which is taken to be the same as claiming to be tried—41 Cal 1072 If he pleads not guilty the Judge will proceed to try him

In a case where the prisoner pleads not guilty and the Public Prosecutor does not offer evidence in support of the charge the Judge ought to instruct the assessors that they are bound to find the prisoner not guilty—4 M H C R App 39 Where there is nothing which can be believed amount to proof the case should not be put to the jury at all as a verdict of guilty (if the jury pronounces such a verdict) cannot under such circumstances be sustained—16 W R 19

If the accused makes no answer to the inquiry whether he is guilty or has any defence to make it should be ascertained whether he is obstinately mute or dumb ex coactione Dei If he be found to be obstinately mute the plea of not guilty should be recorded and the trial should proceed If he is found to be dumb an inquiry should be made whether he is sane or insane or incapable of being tried If he is found to be sane a plea of not guilty should be recorded and the trial should proceed but if he is found to be insane the procedure laid down in Chapter XXXIV should be followed—Ratanlal 19

has been read and the accused claims to be tried—15 Bom 514 25
Bom 694

Same jury may try several persons successively —By the term 'successively' is understood that one trial is to follow the other : at the conclusion of one trial the same jury may proceed to try the accused in the next case. The law does not contemplate that the two trials shall be conducted piecemeal in such a manner that at their conclusion the jury shall be called upon to decide at one and the same time upon two distinct classes of evidence which though they may have points in common require careful discrimination as bearing upon the guilt or innocence of two sets of accused—6 Cal 96

273 (1) In trials before the High Court, when it appears to the High Court, at any time before the commencement of the trial of the person charged, that any charge or any portion thereof is clearly unsustainable, the Judge may make on the charge an entry to that effect

Entry on unsustainable charges

(2) Such entry shall have the effect of staying proceedings upon the charge or portion of the charge as the case may be

Effect of entry

284 If the Court is clearly of opinion that no offence has been made out it is the duty of the Court to stay the proceedings by making an entry as contemplated by this section—21 Cal 97

Applications under this section should be disposed of by the High Court in its original criminal jurisdiction—9 Cal 397

C—Choosing a Jury

274 (1) In trials before the High Court the jury shall consist of nine persons

Number of jury

(2) In trials by jury before the Court of Session the jury shall consist of such uneven number, not being less than five or more than nine, as the Local Government by order applicable to any particular district or to any particular class of offences in that district, may direct

Provided that where any accused person is charged with an offence punishable with death the jury shall consist of not less than seven persons and, if practicable of nine persons

The word 'five' has been substituted for 'three' and the proviso has been added, by sec 13 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923 "In the Sessions Court the number should be any uneven number from five to nine which the Local Government may select Thus, five should be substituted for three in section 274 as the minimum number of jury in a Sessions Court In murder cases, before the Sessions Court, we are of opinion that the number of jury should if practicable be nine"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, Para 25

The number fixed by the Local Government must be strictly adhered to Where the Local Government has fixed the number at five, a trial by a jury consisting of seven members is ultra vires—26 All 211

275 (1) In a trial by jury before the High Court or Court of Session of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European or Indian British subject, a majority of the jury shall, if such person before the first juror is called and accepted so requires, consist, in the case of an European British subject, of persons who are Europeans or Americans and, in the case of an Indian British subject, of Indians

Jury for trial of European and Indian British subjects and others

(2) In any such trial by jury of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European (other than an European British subject) or an American, a majority of the jury shall, if practicable and if such European or American before the first juror is called and accepted so requires, consist of persons who are Europeans or Americans

This section has been redrafted by sec 14 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923 Prior to the amendment, it stood as follows —

In a trial by jury before the Court of Session of a person not being an European or an American a majority of the jury shall if he so desires, consist of persons who are neither Europeans nor Americans

The reason of the amendment has been thus stated The most difficult question for the Committee to decide is that of trial by the jury of European British subjects This is the point on which non official European opinion is most emphatic, namely that it is essential that a mixed jury should remain both in the High Court and in the Sessions Court in all cases which are to be tried by jury under our proposals, subject however to certain provisions and safeguards namely —The same law as to the composition of the jury shall apply to Indians as to Europeans that is to say the majority of the jury if an Indian accused so desires shall consist of persons who are not Europeans or Americans. This is already the law in Sessions Courts and section 275 should be so amended as to make it apply to the High Court also — Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee Para 25

885 This section must be read as controlled by the provisions of section 528B. That section lays down that if a person does not claim to be dealt with as an Indian subject before the committing Magistrate he shall not assert the claim at any subsequent stage of the case. It follows therefore that if an Indian subject does not claim to be dealt with as such before the committing Presidency Magistrate he will not be entitled to claim before the High Court to be tried by a jury the majority of which must be Indians according to the provisions of section 275 — Emperor v Hareendra 31 Cal 980 (991) 29 C W N 384 26 Cr L J 385. The same result will happen if the claim to be dealt with as an Indian subject is made before the Presidency Magistrate but is rejected by him — Ibid (at p 990)

A Native Christian is not entitled to say that he must be tried by a Christian jury. But he can like any other accused object to the jurors individually—: W R ~

Jurors to be chosen by lot

Provided that—first, pending the issue under this section of rules for any Court the practice now prevailing in such Court in respect to the choosing of jurors shall be followed

Existing practice maintained

secondly in case of a deficiency of persons summoned the number of jurors required may, with the leave of the Court be chosen from such other persons as may be present,

Persons not summoned when eligible thirdly in a trial before any High Court in the town which is the usual place of sitting of such High Court

Trial before special jurors

(a) if the accused person is charged with having committed an offence punishable with death, or

(b) if in any other case a Judge of the High Court so directs, the jurors shall be chosen from the special jury list hereinafter prescribed and

fourthly, in any district for which the Local Government has declared that the trial of certain offences may be by special jury the jurors shall in any case in which the Judge so directs be chosen from the special jury list prescribed in Section 325

Change —In the third proviso the words in a trial sitting of such High Court have been substituted for the words in the presidency towns by sec 77 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 The object of this amendment is to include those High Courts which are not situated in Presidency Towns e g the High Courts at Allahabad Lahore Patna Rangoon Similar amendments have been made in sections 315 and 316

886 Chosen by lot —The object of the Legislature in choosing a jury by lot is to render impossible any intentional selection of jurors to try a particular case and the accused is entitled to a strict observance of the provisions contained in this section and sec 279 Irregularities in choosing the jury by lot affect the constitution of the Court and cannot be cured by sec 537—7 C W N 188 33 All 385 In 8 Cal 739 and 1917 M W N 1 however where the Judge himself selected the jurors instead of choosing them by lot it was held that such a procedure was merely irregular and the verdict would not be interfered with if no prejudice was caused to the accused and no objection was taken by him to such a procedure at the trial

The persons who are to be chosen by lot ought to be selected from the entire number of persons summoned to act as jurors and the selection ought to be made from one box—1 Bom 462

In order to nominate a jury for the trial of any prisoner or other person to be tried by a jury a Sessions Judge shall cause to be put together in one box cards or pieces of paper containing the names of all the persons summoned to attend except such of the said persons as shall have been excused by the Sessions Judge from serving on that day in consequence of their having served as jurors on the previous day or for any other cause Such cards or pieces of paper shall be as nearly as may be of equal size and shall bear the name of one person summoned to attend The Sessions Judge shall then in open Court draw or cause to be drawn out of the said box one after another as many of the said cards or pieces of paper as may represent the number of jurors required to try the case and if any of the jurors whose names shall be so drawn shall not appear or if any be objected to and the objection be allowed then such further number shall be drawn as may be necessary to complete the number of jurors required for the case — Cal G R & C O p 19

Second proviso, — The second proviso provides that in case of a deficiency of persons summoned the number of the jurors required may with the leave of the Court be chosen from such other persons as may be present. But there is nothing in the proviso that these persons must be chosen by lot or that they should be on the jury list — Govt of Bengal v Muchu Khan 29 C W N 652 26 Cr L J 819. If the Judge is unable to obtain a panel in the manner provided by the second proviso his duty is to postpone the trial and to summon jurors under the provisions of sec 326 (2) — 7 C W N 188

277 (1) As each juror is chosen, his name shall be called aloud, and upon his appearance, the Names of jurors to be called accused shall be asked if he objects to be tried by such juror

(2) Objection may then be taken to such juror by the Objection to jurors accused or by the prosecutor, and the grounds of objection shall be stated,

Provided that, in the High Court, objections without grounds
 Object on without grounds stated shall be allowed to the number of eight on behalf of the Crown and eight on behalf of the person or all the persons charged

Where the Judge instead of hearing and deciding objections proceed ed to exempt some of the persons present merely on their own representations, the procedure was irregular and the irregularity could not be cured by sec 537 — 7 C W N 188

278 Any objection taken to a juror on any of the follow-Grounds of objection ing grounds, if made out to the satisfaction of the Court, shall be allowed

- (a) some presumed or actual partiality in the juror,
- (b) some personal grounds, such as alienage, deficiency in the qualification required by any law or rule having the force of law for the time being in force, or being under the age of twenty one or above the age of sixty years,
- (c) his having by habit or religious vows relinquished all care of worldly affairs,

- (d) his holding any office in or under the Court ,
- (e) his executing any duties of police or being entrusted with police duties ,
- (f) his having been convicted of any offence which, in the opinion of the Court, renders him unfit to serve on the jury .
- (g) his inability to understand the language in which the evidence is given or, when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted ,
- (h) any other circumstances which, in the opinion of the Court, renders him improper as a juror

887. Clause (d) —The fact that a person is a clerk in the office of the Magistrate of the district is not sufficient to disqualify him from sitting as a juror—7 Cal 42

279 (1) Every objection taken to a juror shall be decided by the Court, and such decision shall be recorded and be final

(2) If the objection is allowed, the place of such juror shall be supplied by any other juror attending in obedience to a summons and chosen in manner provided by Section 276, or if there is no such other juror present, then by any other person present in the Court whose name is on the list of jurors, or whom the Court considers a proper person to supply on the jury

Provided that no objection to such juror or other person is taken under Section 278 and allowed

Under subsection (1) the trial Judge has a wide discretion of accepting or overruling objections to jurors and his decision is final. Gout of Bengal v Muchu 29 C W N 652 26 Cr L J 317

280 (1) When the jurors have been chosen, they shall appoint one of their number to be foreman

(2) The foreman shall preside in the deliberations of the jury, deliver the verdict of the jury, and ask any questions from the Court that is required by the jury or any of the jurors.

(3) If a majority of the jury do not, within such time as the Judge thinks reasonable, agree in the appointment of a foreman he shall be appointed by the Court

281 When the foreman has been appointed, the jurors shall be sworn under the Indian Oaths Act, 1873

Swearing of jurors

282 (1) If, in the course of a trial by jury, at any time before the return of the verdict, any juror, from any sufficient cause, is prevented from attending throughout the trial, or if any juror absents himself and it is not practicable to enforce his attendance, or if it appears that any juror is unable to understand the language in which the evidence is given or when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted, a new juror shall be added, or the jury shall be discharged and a new jury chosen

Procedure when juror ceases to attend, etc

(2) In each of such cases the trial shall commence anew

888 Unable to understand language —Where a juror was deaf and blind he was held to be unable to understand the language of the trial and was discharged and the case was tried de novo—19 Mad 375

Absence of witness —The Judge can discharge the jury owing to the absence of a juror but he cannot do so owing to the absence of a witness —4 Bom L R 939

Trial shall commence anew —Where a juror was discharged and replaced by another and the trial was not commenced anew but the Judge called the witnesses who had been examined read out their statements to them which they admitted to be correct and the trial proceeded it was held that there was no valid trial—36 All 481

But the trial which becomes null and void owing to the incompetence of a juror under this section is not null and void for all purposes Thus if a witness has given false evidence during such trial he can be prosecuted under sec 193 I P C The nullity of the trial will not affect the liability of the witness for prosecution for perjury—19 Mad 375

889 Discharge of jury for misconduct —After the close of the prosecution case and before the counsel for the accused called his witnesses the foreman of the jury informed the Court that they had arrived at an unanimous verdict (which was unfavourable to the prisoner) and did not desire to hear anything more The Court remarked that the conduct of the jury in arriving at a verdict unfavourable to the prisoner before they had heard the evidence which the accused wished to call for, was unfair to the accused and against all principles of justice. The counsel for the accused thereupon pressed for the discharge of the jury for such misconduct and for empanelling a fresh jury. But the Standing Counsel remarked that the case was not covered by sec 282 or sec 283 (which were the only sections relating to discharge of the jury during the trial) and the jury could not therefore be discharged, but under instructions from the Advocate-General he entered a nolle prosequi—Emperor v Olu Muhammad, 7 C W N xxxi. The point was therefore left undecided in that case, but in a recent case of the same High Court the question arose again, and it has been decided that although section 282 or section 283 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not provide for the discharge of the jury for improper conduct during the trial, (as for instance where some of the jury were seen one day associating with the man who was looking after the case for the accused), nor is it specifically provided by any other section of the Code, still the Sessions Judge has an inherent power to discharge the jury for misconduct. But such power is not to be exercised lightly, nor until the Judge has satisfied himself, by such form of inquiry as in the circumstances he can adopt, that reasonable grounds for exercising such a power exist—Rahim Sheikh v Emperor, 50 Cal 872. In England also, the Judge has the power to discharge the jury for improper conduct, e g where one of the jurors had left the box without leave—Reg v Hard, (1867) 10 Cox C C 573.

The discharge of the jury for misconduct is not equivalent to a verdict of acquittal, but the prisoner can be remanded for a fresh trial and a new jury should be empanelled—Reg v Davison, (1860) 8 Cox C C 360, Rahim Sheikh v Emperor, 50 Cal 872. If the jury have misconducted themselves, they may be discharged and a new trial directed with a new jury but no such action can be taken unless the misconduct has been established by what is regarded as evidence in the eye of the law—Mamfru v Emp, 51 Cal 418 (430, 431).

Discharge of jury in case of sickness of prisoner.

283 The Judge may also discharge the jury whenever the prisoner becomes incapable of remaining at the bar.

D.—Choosing Assessors

284. When the trial is to be held with the aid of assessors, not less than three and, if practicable, four shall be chosen from the persons summoned to act as such

Assessors how chosen

Change —The italicised words have been substituted for the words "two or more" by sec 15 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923. We add the further recommendation that in all cases triable with the aid of assessors, there shall be, if possible, four, and in any case not less than three, assessors"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, Para 26

890 Choosing assessors —The choice of jurors is by lot but the choice of assessors is entirely with the Judge, who in the exercise of this power should pay every consideration to any reasonable objection raised although the law does not, as in the case of jurors, provide for objections being taken to an assessor. In the selection of assessors, regard must be had to the nature of the case, to the person tried, and to the public feeling excited. They ought not to be pleaders nor young men fresh from the College and devoid of experience. They ought to be persons of independent conditions in life, men of judgment and experience—23 W R 35

Though there is no express provision for objecting to the selection of an assessor, still there is no reason why an objection of presumed or actual partiality should not be allowed, particularly when it is urged at the time of selection of the assessor. The opinions of assessors are of great value both to the Judge who tries the case and to the Superior Courts. It is therefore necessary as an elementary principle that they should be above suspicion. The relationship of landlord and tenant or of master and servant creates an incapacity in a person to sit as an assessor in a case. An objection to an assessor that he is a tenant of the person interested in the prosecution is a valid objection—Shivdhan v Emp, 3 P L T 32

*From the persons summoned —The assessors must be chosen from the persons summoned to act as such. The Judge is not competent to select any one to act as an assessor who has not been summoned under sec 326 or 327. Where out of several persons summoned the Judge selected only one, and he selected two other persons at random from the persons present in Court, it was held that the trial was bad as it was practically conducted with one assessor only—1894 A W N 207 Man Singh v Emp, 35 All 570 Balak Singh v K E, 3 P L J 141. Where in the absence of assessors duly summoned, the Judge appointed the Nazir of the Court to act as an assessor, the trial was held to be illegal as the Nazir was not duly summoned and in choosing assessors there is no provision corresponding to the second proviso to sec 276 (in choosing jurors)—13 O C 337. But where a person was summoned to serve as an assessor on a particular date in a particular case and he failed to appear in Court on that date but appeared on a subsequent day when another trial had to commence, and he was selected to act as an assessor in that trial his selection would not be improper—Chutla v Emp 17 Cr L J 17 (All)

Number of assessors —Under this section as new amended there must be at least three assessors. A trial held with less than the required number of assessors is null and void and the illegality cannot be cured by sec 537—Jairam v Emp 25 Cr L J 459 20 N L R 129 Pragi v Emp 11 O L J 245 Ram Narain v Emp 27 O C 213 26 Cr L J 359. A trial commencing with the aid of one assessor is not a legal trial and sec 537 cannot cure the defect—A. L. v Jairam 25 Bom 694 15 Bom 514. If there were two assessors (which was the required number prior to the present amendment) but one of them was deaf and blind there was properly speaking only one assessor and the trial was invalid—11 All 106 2 Weir 340.

This section lays down that the number of assessors should be not less than three and if practicable four. Where four assessors are not chosen it is right that the Court should give reasons in the order sheet to explain the impracticability of choosing four. But the trial with three assessors without the record of these reasons is not irregular but is still according to law—Jamal v Emp 26 Cr L J 713 (Pat).

Trial without assessors —The trial will be invalid if a portion of the trial which consists in the taking of additional evidence takes place after the discharge of the assessors—15 All 136.

284 A (1) In a trial with the aid of assessors of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European or Indian British subject if the European or Indian British subject accused or where there are several European British subjects accused or several Indian British subjects accused all of them jointly, before the first assessor is chosen so require, all the assessors shall in the case of European British subjects be persons who are Europeans or Americans or, in the case of Indian British subjects be Indians

Assessors for trial of European and Indian British subjects and others

(2) In a trial with the aid of assessors of a person who has been found under the provisions of this Code to be an European (other than an European British subject) or an American all the assessors shall, if practicable and if such European or American before the first assessor is chosen so requires, be persons who are Europeans or Americans

This section has been newly added by sec 16 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923. Under this section Indians and Europeans can claim to be tried before their own countrymen as assessors. In any district in which for any class of offences Indians are normally triable in a Court of Session with the aid of assessors and in which no racial considerations are involved the accused whether Indian or European shall be tried with assessors who if the accused so claims shall all be of the nationality of the accused.—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee Para 26

Subsection (2) embodies the old section 460 with certain modifications

891 The accused if he intends to avail himself of the provisions of this section must make a claim to the privilege conferred by it failure to make a claim will amount to waiver—1912 P R 6

285 (1) If in the course of a trial with the aid of assessors, at any time before the finding, any assessor
 Procedure when assessor is unable to attend is, from any sufficient cause, prevented from attending throughout the trial, or absents himself and it is not practicable to enforce his attendance, the trial shall proceed with the aid of the other assessor or assessors

(2) If all the assessors are prevented from attending or absent themselves the proceedings shall be stayed and a new trial shall be held with the aid of fresh assessors

892 Absence of assessors.—This section contemplates that at least one assessor must attend continuously throughout the trial—6 C W N 715 K E v Thirumalai 24 Mad 523 Therefore where in a Sessions trial beginning with three assessors one of the assessors died at an early stage of the proceedings and later on another assessor became too ill to be present and the third was absent before the pleader for the defence addressed the Court it was held that the trial was a nullity—13 All 337

An assessor who is absent during a part of the trial cannot be allowed to resume his seat as assessor once he is absent he ceases to occupy the position of an assessor Where such an assessor was allowed to resume his seat and the evidence recorded in his absence was read over to him and he gave his opinion just like the other assessors it was held that the procedure was not in accordance with law His opinion ought not to have been taken—8 C P L R 9 6 C W N 715 Ratanlal 695 In a Madras case however it has been held that such a procedure is merely irregular but not illegal Though the proper course would have been to proceed with the trial with the aid of the other assessor alone, and to accept his opinion only still the fact that the absent assessor was allowed to resume his seat and take part in the trial and give his opinion would not vitiate the opinion of another assessor which was validly given. The assessors merely assist the Court but do not form part of the tribunal which decides the case and the assessors unlike the jury give their opinions separately and not as members of a body. And the invalidity of the opinion of one does not affect the validity of the opinion of the other—A. E. v. Thirumalai 24 Mad 523

If assessor is an interested person—Where in the course of a trial it is found that one of the assessors is interested in the trial and is unfit to sit as an assessor there is no provision of law to meet such a contingency. In such a case the proper course is to refer the case to the High Court to set aside the order appointing the incompetent assessor and all subsequent proceedings in the trial. Then the Sessions Judge will be asked by the High Court to choose another assessor and proceed with the trial de novo—1917 M W N 378 13 Cr L J 473

DD—Joint Trials

285 A In any case in which an European or American is accused jointly with a person not being an European or American, or an Indian British subject is accused jointly with a person not being an Indian and such European Indian British Subject or American is committed for trial before a Court of Session he and such other person may be tried together but if he requires to be tried in accordance with the provisions of Section 275 or Section 284A and is so tried and the other person accused requires to be tried separately, such other person shall be tried separately in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter

This section has been newly added by sec 17 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 193. It provides that in cases in which Indians and Europeans are sought to be tried jointly they can claim to be tried separately before jurors or assessors who are their own countrymen

E—Trial to close of cases for Prosecution and Defence

286 (1) When the jurors or assessors have been chosen Opening case for the prosecutor shall open his case by prosecution reading from the Indian Penal Code other law the description of, the offence charged, and shortly by what evidence he expects to prove the guilt of the accused.

(2) The prosecutor shall then examine his witness

Trial cannot be postponed—After the jurors have been chosen the prosecutor shall open his case and the trial cannot be postponed to enable the prosecutor to examine a witness by commission—19 Cal 113

893 Examination of witnesses—The object of a prosecution is not to secure a conviction but to see that justice be done. The prosecutor is bound to call all the witnesses who prove their connection with the transaction in question and who also must be able to give important information. If such witnesses are not produced without sufficient reason being shown the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution—8 Cal 121 Muhammad Yunus v Emp 50 Cal 318 (326) 7 All 904, 1 P L T 161 3 S L R 200. The duty of the prosecution is not to secure a conviction but to assist the Court in arriving at the truth and for that purpose to place before the Court all the material evidence at its disposal—44 Cal 477 (F B) 42 Cal 957. All the persons alleged or known to have knowledge of the facts ought to be brought before the Court to be examined. The fact that certain witnesses were examined by the committing Magistrate against the express desire of the police officer conducting the prosecution is not a ground for not calling them—10 Cal 1070. All the witnesses who were present at the scene of the crime must be called by the prosecution even if they give contradictory versions so that the jury may draw their own conclusions from their depositions—Ratanlal 581 1 P L T 491, 42 Cal 422 and it is not a sufficient reason not to call such a witness simply because the opinion he has formed shows an unconscious bias on his part—9 C W N 438. The prosecutor is not free to choose how much evidence he will bring before the Court, he is bound to produce all the evidence in his power directly bearing upon the charge. It is his duty to call all witnesses who can throw any light on the case whether they support the prosecution theory or the defence theory—1 P L T 161, and the prosecutor should not refuse to call and examine any witnesses for the prosecution merely because his evidence may in some respects be favourable to the defence—Queen Emp v Durga 16 All 84 (F B)

But the prosecution is not bound to call or put into the witness box for cross examination, any witness whom he believes to be false or whose evidence is unnecessary for the trial—Ranjit v King Emp, 2 Pat 309 (315), Emp v Reed, 49 Cal 277, Muhammad Yunus v Emp 50 Cal 318, Q E v Durga 16 All 84, Emp v Balaram, 49 Cal 358 (367) Q E v Stanton, 14 All 521 Q E v Bankhandi, 15 All 6 Emp v Dhumno 8 Cal 121 Kaimi v Crown, 1916 P R 12, Darassami v Emp, 45 M L

J 846, or who will misrepresent facts or will misstate what has happened—9 C W N 438 Although the Court is entitled to draw an inference adverse to the prosecution on the ground that independent eye witnesses have not been called, still if the witnesses who have been called by the prosecution are worthy of credit, the Court is not entitled to disbelieve them simply because some persons who could have thrown light on the case have not been put before the Court by the prosecution. It is of course not for the police or the Public Prosecutor to champion a particular theory and to suppress the evidence of a reliable witness simply because his testimony is inconsistent with it, but if the police or Public Prosecutor is of opinion that a witness is a false witness or is likely to give false testimony or that his evidence is unnecessary, he is justified in not sending up or producing that witness, and his absence at the trial ought not to be a reason for disbelieving the other prosecution witnesses if they are otherwise worthy of credit—Ranjit v King Emp, 2 Pat 309 (314, 315)

All the witnesses sent up by the committing Magistrate must be examined, and the Sessions Judge is not competent to pick and choose among them. It is the duty of the Court to examine all such witnesses unless it has good and sufficient reason to believe that the witnesses came to the Court-house with a pre-determined intention of giving false evidence—15 All 6 14 Cal 245 7 All 904 2 Weir 378 In 14 All 521, however, it has been held that the prosecution is not bound to examine a witness examined before the committing Magistrate except when the committing Magistrate has stated in his order of commitment that he has been influenced by that particular witness in ordering the committal. No further duty is imposed on the prosecution than that of having in attendance every witness examined before the committing Magistrate so that the witness may be cross examined or not by the defence counsel as he chooses.

Where there is no ground for disbelieving the witnesses all the witnesses must be examined and the trial cannot be stopped and no final opinion as to the falsehood or insufficiency of the prosecution evidence ought to be arrived at, until all the witnesses have been examined. Thus, where after the examination of some of the witnesses the Judge asked the jury whether they wished to hear any more evidence and they stated that they did not believe the evidence and wished to stop the case, and the Judge recorded a verdict of acquittal, it was held that the procedure was wrong. All the remaining witnesses ought to have been examined before any verdict was recorded—20 Mad 445

If some of the prosecution witnesses examined before the committing Magistrate are not examined before the Sessions Judge by the Public Prosecutor, still the accused is entitled to have them put into the box for cross examination—Nagendra v King Emp, 27 C W N 820 When Public Prosecutor does not call a witness examined before the

Magistrate on the ground that he will not speak the truth he should explain to the Court that this is the reason and should tender him for cross-examination. In the absence of any such explanation or other reasonable grounds apparent on the face of the proceedings inferences unfavourable to the prosecution will be drawn from the non production of the witness—7 All 904

The witnesses must be orally examined in Court before the jury it would be a faulty procedure to dispense with their examination and to read over to the jury the recorded statement of the evidence given by them at a previous hearing of the case. If such a procedure is adopted the jury would have no opportunity of gauging the value of the testimony of each individual witness by his general demeanour. A witness may show a suspicious hesitancy in answering certain questions put by the counsel for the prosecution or he may show an equally suspicious excess of zeal. Both Judge and jury are undoubtedly influenced to a considerable extent by the manner in which a witness gives his evidence in chief and moreover the demeanour of a witness during the examination in chief may be of the greatest help to the counsel for the defence in his cross-examination. All these advantages would be lost if a mere record of the evidence is read over instead of examining the witness—Lyme v Crown 4 Lah 382 (at p 386). And so in an English case Sir John Coleridge has made the following remarks on the impropriety of reading over at the retrial of a case the Judge's note of evidence given by the witnesses at the previous trial instead of examining them fully. Those of their Lordships who have been used on motions for new trials to hear the Judge's note of the evidence read probably know well by experience how difficult it is to sustain the attention or collect the value of particular parts when that evidence is long. But this is not all. The most careful note must often fail to convey the evidence fully in some of its most important elements those for which the open oral examination of the witness in the presence of the prisoner Judge and jury is so justly prized. It cannot give the look or manner of the witness his hesitation his doubts his variations of language his confidence or precipitancy his calmness or consideration it cannot give the manner of the prisoner when that has been important upon the statement of anything of particular moment. It is in short the dead body of the evidence without its spirit which is supplied when given openly and orally by the ear and eye of those who receive it — Attorney General v Bertrand (1867) 36 L J P C C 51 (57) L R 1 P C 520 (535)

The evidence must be taken in the presence of the accused. It is an irregular procedure to examine witnesses in the absence of the accused and then to read over to the accused the evidence recorded in his absence the accused being allowed to cross-examine the witnesses. Such a pro cedure prejudices the accused in his cross-examination and defence—

5 C P L R 33

The prosecution must give positive evidence of the guilt of the accused, and cannot depend upon the weakness of his adversary's case. The Court is concerned not so much with the truth or otherwise of the theory suggested by the accused as with the case for the prosecution. The proof of the case against the prisoners must depend for its support not upon the absence or weakness of explanation on their part but upon the positive and affirmative evidence of their guilt that is given by the Crown—Mamfru v Emp, 51 Cal 418 (425 426)

Witnesses not examined before the committing Magistrate—The prosecution cannot demand as of right that any witness not examined in the preliminary inquiry should be called and examined at the trial. But the Court if it considers necessary may call and examine him—14 All 212. But the mere fact that a witness has not been examined before a committing Magistrate is no ground for refusing to take the evidence of such witness. There is nothing in the Code which restricts the examination at the trial only to the witnesses examined before the committing Magistrate. But the prosecutor should as a matter of justice and fairness to the accused state in his opening address the name of such witness—1889 P R 1

894 Cross-examination—As a rule the cross examination of a witness should take place after his examination in chief and cannot be postponed. There is no provision of law which authorises the Judge to allow all the prosecution witnesses to be examined at once and to permit the cross examination to be reserved to a subsequent date—2 Weir 381. But though the accused is not entitled to such postponement as of right still there is no reason why the Sessions Judge should refuse an application for such postponement where the application was a reasonable one under the circumstances of the case—41 Cal 299

A Sessions Judge is not justified in stopping the cross examination and turning the witness out of Court because he is of opinion that the witness is not speaking the truth and no reliance can be placed on the deposition of a witness whose cross examination has been thus stopped—1900 A W N 149

Cross-examination of a witness not examined in chief—The ordinary practice in properly constituted Courts is that where a witness for the prosecution is not examined by the Crown he is placed in the witness-box in order that the defence may have an opportunity of cross examining him—5 Cal 614 11 Bom L R 1162 15 W R 64 14 All 521 14 Ca 245. But there is no provision in the Code analogous to English practice entitling the prisoner, as a matter of right, to have a witness for secution who is not called put into the box for cross examination and the disallowing of it is no error in law—5 B H C R 85, 14 Cal 245 14 All 521

287. The examination of the accused duly recorded by or before the committing Magistrate shall be tendered by the prosecutor and read as evidence

895 The examination of the accused —This section contemplates an examination of the accused although sec 209 does not make it imperative on the committing Magistrate to examine the accused—Ratan lall 100 The examination of the accused recorded by the Magistrate should be put in before the accused is called on to enter on his defence—2 Weir 361 Cal G R & C O p 23

The whole of the examination should be read out—4 M H C R App 4 8 W R 38 9 M L T 316 Where the prisoner had made two statements before the Magistrate the one amounting to a confession of the guilt and the other to a denial thereof the trial Court ought to consider both the statements and their relative credibility—10 B L R 332 18 All 78

This section permits a previous statement of the accused to be read as a part of the case for the prosecution only so far as such statement refers to the offence for which the accused is being tried and not so far as it relates to a previous conviction The portion as to previous conviction cannot be read out to the jury or assessors under sec 310 until they have given their verdict or opinion—Taka Ahir v K E 5 P L J 706

Where the accused was examined about a confession which was not admissible in evidence the questions and answers to them could not be said to be duly recorded as the questions were not such as were allowed by the law to be put and the answers to these questions were not admissible in evidence against the accused—4 L B R 244

Committing Magistrate —The phrase committing Magistrate in Secs 287 and 288 is merely a compendious way of referring to the Magistrate or Magistrates who held the preliminary inquiry on which the commitment was made Where a subordinate Magistrate inquired into a case and discharged the accused and the District Magistrate acting under sec 436 (now 437) committed the accused for trial the examination recorded by the subordinate Magistrate would be the examination recorded by the committing Magistrate within the meaning of this section—31 Mad 40

The examination of the accused before the committing Magistrate must be given in evidence at the trial It is not optional with the prosec-cution to put in such statement or not. If it is not tendered by the prosecution the Judge is bound to call for it—15 Mad 352 13 W R 63

This section requires that the statements made by the accused before the committing Magistrate must be read out to the prisoners at the trial, but it is not necessary for the Judge to ask them specifically if they have any objection to the reception of these confessions—14 W R 9

288 The evidence of a witness duly recorded in the presence of the accused under Chapter XVIII may, Evidence given at Preliminary inquiry admissible in the discretion of the presiding Judge, if such witness is produced and examined, be treated as evidence in the case for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872

895A Change —The word recorded has been substituted for taken the words under Chapter XVIII have been substituted for the words before the committing Magistrate and the italicised words at the end of the section have been newly added by section 78 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 The words under Chapter XVIII have been used in place of the committing Magistrate to cover the case of evidence recorded by a Magistrate other than the committing Magistrate under sec 219 —Report of the Select Committee of 1916 Abdul Gani v Emp 53 Cal 181 42 C L J 205 26 Cr L J 1577 Besides there is no special procedure laid down in Ch XVIII for recording evidence and any evidence recorded by a Magistrate before commitment whether recorded with a view to commitment or in the ordinary course of trial is evidence recorded in the presence of the accused under Ch XVIII —Abdul Gani v Emp 53 Cal 181 42 C L J 205 26 Cr L J 1577 A I R 1926 Cal 235

896 Object and scope of section —This section is intended to provide for the contingency that may arise when a witness who is produced before the Court of Session holds back information and evidence, and tells a different story from that which he gave before the Magistrate in the preliminary inquiry—2 All 646

This section refers only to the evidence of witnesses recorded under Chap XVIII Statements made by witnesses before a Police officer or to an investigating Magistrate are not contemplated by this section—31 Mad 127 A statement made by a witness at a search does not come under this section—36 Mad 159 A statement given by a witness before a monigar cannot be used under this section—Malaya v Emp 4 L J 278

Duly taken in the presence of accused —A statement made in the absence of the accused cannot be treated as evidence against him under this section—1904 P R 3 23 Cal 361 35 All 260 So also where the accused was merely allowed to be present but was not allowed to cross examine the witnesses before the committing Magistrate, the evidence of such witnesses cannot be said to be duly taken and cannot be treated as evidence under this section—21 Cal 642 Such ex parte statements by witnesses without the accused being allowed to rebut them by cross examination is not evidence at all under this section—Ibid

897 Produced and examined —The evidence of witnesses given before the committing Magistrate may be used as evidence if the witnesses have been produced and examined at the trial a statement made before the committing Magistrate by a person who has since disappeared is inadmissible in evidence because the witness is not produced and examined before the Sessions Judge—16 N L R 30 Mere producing of the witnesses is not sufficient they must be examined—1913 M W N 544 If examined by the prosecution and not merely tendered for cross examination by the accused without being examined in-chief—9 Mad 83 Moreover the deposition given before the committing Magistrate may be treated as evidence after the witnesses are examined at the trial The Sessions Judge is not justified in convicting the prisoner solely upon the evidence of the witnesses given before the committing Magistrate without examining them afresh—24 W R 11 1883 P R 23 This section does not allow the use of the deposition as a substitute for examination at the trial This section is not an exception to sec 286 it does not dispense with the examination of the witnesses directed by sec 286—9 Mad 83 1 W R 14 Without examining the witness it is improper to read his deposition given before the Magistrate and to ask him if it is true Such a procedure amounts to putting a leading question to the witness and it is an implied intimation that the same story is expected from him again—6 C P L R 33 Further the statements made by a witness before the committing Magistrate should not be read out to the witness in the trial before the defence has had an opportunity of cross examining him—3 Lah 144

Moreover the deposition of the witness before the committing

Magistrate can be used as evidence if the witness is examined at the trial as a witness. Where the witness [before the committing Magistrate being found concerned in the offence was committed to take his trial along with the accused in the case his deposition in the Magistrate's Court could not be treated as evidence against the accused under this section he not being a witness in the trial—1883 P R 23

898 Use at the trial of the deposition before the Magistrate.—Where a deposition of a witness given before the committing Magistrate is tendered in evidence at the Sessions trial the Sessions Judge should then and there determine the question of its admissibility and record his reasons for its admission as evidence—1 Bom L R 156

Where the witnesses made certain statements implicating the accused before the committing Magistrate but at the trial before the Sessions Judge they resiled from those statements and told an altogether different story held that the statements made before the committing Magistrate were not merely relevant for the purpose of contradicting or negating the statements made before the Court of Session under sec 155 Evidence Act but that under sec 288 could also be treated as evidence in the case as substantive evidence of all the facts therein deposed to—46 Bom 97 Amir Zaman v Crown 6 Lah 199 26 P L R 361 26 Cr L J 1245 Abdul Gani v Emp 53 Cal 181 42 C L J 205 26 Cr L J 1577 Tuli v Emp 47 All 276 26 Cr L J 450 Rahha v Emp 6 Lah 171 26 P L R 304 A certain witness made a statement before the committing Magistrate but resiled from that statement before the Sessions Judge whereupon his statement made before the committing Magistrate was put in evidence under sec 288 and in order to corroborate this statement a statement made by that witness before the Police was proved and put in evidence Held that the statement made before the committing Magistrate was testimony within the meaning of sec 157 of the Evidence Act and therefore the prior statement made before the Police was admissible in evidence to corroborate the statement made before the committing Magistrate—Mam Chand v Crown 5 Lah 324 (328) 25 Cr L J 1201 Where a Sessions Judge being of opinion that certain previous depositions had been gained over by the accused allowed their depositions given before the committing Magistrate to be received in evidence held that this section enabled the Court to treat such depositions as substantive evidence in the case at the trial where for purposes of justice the adoption of such a course was found necessary by the Judge. Such evidence may be used as much in favour of the defence as of the prosecution and the Court is not restricted in permitting the production of the evidence before the committing Magistrate to use it solely for the purpose of contradicting the witnesses at the Sessions trial—24 414 2 Pat 517 Depositions of witnesses taken before the com

A statement made by a witness before a committing Magistrate and subsequently repudiated by him before the Sessions Court, is admissible in the Court merely for the purpose of contradicting the witness But the substance of such repudiated statement should not be used by the prosecution as substantial evidence of the allegations unless it is corroborated in some material particulars by independent evidence—21 W R 49, 22 All 445 27 Cal 295, 10 C W N 107, 21 All 111, Ratanlal 966, Mam Chand v Crown, 5 Lah 324 (328), 12 Mad 123 2 Weir 374 375 A conviction based solely on evidence given by the witnesses before the committing Magistrate and retracted by them at the trial is unsustainable—Sher Dil v Crown 1919 P R 17 If it were permissible to convict an accused person relying solely upon the evidence given by a witness before the committing Magistrate the logical consequence would be that the taking of evidence before the Sessions Court might be altogether dispensed with—21 W R 49 Evidence given before a committing Magistrate cannot be effectually utilised in support of a conviction unless it is shown by other corroborative evidence that the evidence given before the committing Magistrate should be preferred to and substituted for the evidence given at the trial—A E v Jehal Teli 3 Pat 781 (794) 6 P L T 53 26 Cr L J 270 Q E v Jadub Das 27 Cal 295

In a case in which there was a fight between the villagers of two neighbouring villages and there was a complaint of offences under secs 148 324 and 326 I P C the prosecution witnesses spoke to the fight alleged and also identified the assaultants before the committing Magistrate In the Sessions Court the witnesses gave a general account of the fight but as regards the identification of the particular assaultants each witness professed his inability to make any such identification The Sessions Judge found that in order to save one another the members of each party had agreed not to identify their assaultants in the Sessions Court and that the witnesses retracted that portion of their evidence before the committing Magistrate in pursuance of a concerned conspiracy to defeat the ends of justice The Sessions Judge accordingly relied upon the statements made before the committing Magistrate under sec 288 Cr P Code and believing those statements in preference to the statements made before the Sessions Court convicted the accused Held that under this section the Sessions Judge was in the circumstances of the case perfectly justified in admitting the statements as evidence in the trial—Peda Somadu v Appigadu 45 M L J 602

A Sessions Judge does not show a proper discretion in allowing a statement made before the committing Magistrate by a witness to be used as evidence under this section when the witness repudiates it at the Sessions and attributes it to improper influence in the course of the investigation and when the circumstances are such that the Judge cannot rely on it—7 C W N 345 Where a witness who in the Sessions trial reciles from his deposition given before the Magistrate states that the latter deposition was made under the influence of the Police the Judge should exercise a proper discretion in making some inquiry by examining the Inspector of Police regarding the restraint and pressure put upon the witness before admitting such statement as evidence—4 C W N 49

899 Subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act —It is difficult to understand exactly what the amendment of the section intended to effect but there were certain difficulties felt by the Courts with regard to how far the evidence taken before a Magistrate should be relied upon But these words should not be interpreted to mean that evidence duly taken before a Magistrate can only be utilized at a trial in a case where the Evidence Act specifically authorises its use Such a construction is erroneous because there are only certain sections in the Evidence

Act (secs 32 33 145 155, 157) which can in any way be regarded as even remotely dealing with this subject but none have any direct bearing. There is indeed in the Evidence Act nothing at all which permits or specifically provides for the use of evidence taken before a Magistrate as evidence at a trial. Nor should those words be construed to mean that sec 288 can be utilized in all cases except those in which the Evidence Act directly prohibits such use because there is no such prohibition in the Evidence Act at all. What is really meant by the amendment is that evidence duly taken before a Magistrate can be used for all purposes in a trial Court so long as the evidence is evidence within the meaning of the Evidence Act or, in other words, Magisterial depositions can be utilized in a trial Court as of evidential value only if the matter contained therein is according to the rules of evidence laid down in the Evidence Act of evidential value. For instance if mere hearsay evidence was contained in a Magisterial deposition it would not simply because it was so contained be capable of being utilized by a Sessions Judge as of evidential value at the trial. The amendment may also probably mean that the evidence taken before a Magistrate can only be used at the trial subject to the procedure laid down in the Evidence Act—King Emp v Jehal Tek 3 Pat 781 (788 790) 6 P L T 53 26 Cr L J 270.

The words 'for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act' do not mean that the evidence given before the committing Magistrate can be used in the Court of Session only for the purpose of corroboration and contradiction in accordance with sections 155 and 157 of the Evidence Act. Such evidence may be acted upon by the Sessions Court precisely as if that evidence has been deposed to before the Sessions Judge. The words merely mean that the law of evidence enacted in the Evidence Act must be complied with. For instance evidence which had been wrongly admitted by the committing Magistrate in violation of the provisions of the Evidence Act cannot be transferred to the file of the Sessions Judge and used at the trial. The amendment is obviously introduced for the purpose of removing any doubt as to the right of the Court to treat the evidence given before the committing Magistrate as substantive evidence in the trial, when such evidence has in the discretion of the trial Court been properly brought on that Court's record—Amir Zaman v Crown 6 Lah 199 26 P L R 361 26 Cr L J 1245 A I R 1925 Lah 452 Abdul Gam v Emp 53 Cal 181 142 C L J 205 A I R 1926 Cal 235 Emp v Basappa 27 Bom L R 113 26 Cr L J 705.

900 Practice and procedure.—The counsel for the prisoner is not entitled to refer to the deposition for the purpose of contradicting the witness without having drawn the attention of the witness to the alleged contradiction in his deposition, and without having given him an opportunity of explaining it—31 Cal 142 Lachmi Lal v. H. E. 3 P. L. T. 398 Before a Judge can use as evidence the deposition given before the Magistrate he is bound to let his intention or the possibility that he may do so be known to the accused and the prosecution in order to afford the accused and the prosecution an opportunity for testing such statement by cross examination or otherwise dealing with such statement as part of the case which may be taken into consideration by the Judge. Otherwise it is impossible for the prosecution or the defence to deal with the matters which may influence the Judge's mind in coming to a decision—1886 A. W. N. 256

It is improper for the Judge trying a case to take a witness's deposition bodily from the committing Magistrate's record and to treat it as evidence before the Court itself—7 All 86 21 All 111 The Judge is bound to put to the witnesses whom he proposes to contradict by their previous statements the whole or such portion of their depositions as he intends to rely upon so as to afford them an opportunity of explaining their meaning or denying that they had made any such statements and so forth—7 All 86

When a counsel or pleader cross examines a witness with reference to a previous deposition the parts thereof to which the cross examination is directed should be set out in the Judge's minute of the proceedings; the depositions must also be numbered and translated in the minute of the proceedings—Ratanlal 343

Power of High Court.—Where in an appeal the High Court was of opinion that the statements made before the committing Magistrate by certain witnesses who were also examined before the Sessions Judge should have been brought upon the record by the exercise of the powers conferred by section 288 it directed the Sessions Judge to take proceedings for the purpose after giving notice to the accused persons that it was proposed to use those statements against them—19 A. L. J. 917

289 (1) When the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution and the examination (if any) of the accused are concluded the accused shall be asked whether he means to adduce evidence

Procedure after examination of witnesses for prosecution

(2) If he says that he does not, the prosecutor may sum up his case, and if the Court considers that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence it may then, in a case tried with the aid of assessors record a finding or in a case tried by a jury, direct the jury to return a verdict, of not guilty.

(3) If the accused, or any one of several accused says that he means to adduce evidence and the Court considers that there is no evidence that the accused committed the offence, the Court may then in a case tried with the aid of assessors record a finding, or in a case tried by a jury, direct the jury to return a verdict, of not guilty

(4) If the accused, or any one of several accused, says that he means to adduce evidence, and the Court considers that there is evidence that he committed the offence, or if, on his saying that he does not mean to adduce evidence, the prosecutor sums up his case and the Court considers that there is evidence that the accused committed the offence, the Court shall call on the accused to enter on his defence

901 Examination of the accused —The words 'if any' show that it is optional with the Judge to examine the accused. The omission to examine the accused is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the trial—27 Mad 238 9 C L J 55 But see notes under sec 347

Sum up —The prosecution has a right to sum up under subsection (2) when all the accused say that they do not mean to adduce evidence—18 Bom 364

902 No evidence —Subsection (2) or (3) applies only where there is no evidence and would not cover cases where the Court considers that the charge is itself improper—12 All 551

When there is no evidence the jury should be directed to find a verdict of not guilty and it is wrong to leave it to the jury to say whether the accused is guilty or not guilty—7 W R 39 When there is no evidence which can if believed amount to proof the case should not be put to the jury at all as a verdict of guilty if the jury returns such a verdict cannot under such circumstances be sustained—16 W R 19

The words no evidence do not mean no satisfactory trustworthy or conclusive evidence. If the Court is satisfied that there is not upon the record any evidence which even if it were perfectly true would amount to legal proof of the offence charged against the accused then the Court has power without consulting the assessors to record a finding of not guilty but the Sessions Judge has no such power merely because he considers the evidence untrustworthy or unsatisfactory or inconclusive. It is not the intention of the Legislature that the assessors or the jury should give their opinion or verdict in those cases only where the Judge is inclined to believe the evidence for the prosecution—10 All 414 16 Bom 414 If there is any evidence relevant to the charge prepared the accused must be called upon to enter upon his defence, and the trial should be completely gone through even though the Sessions Judge may consider such evidence unworthy of belief—2 Weir 382 9 C P L R 24 The case can be withdrawn from the jury only on the ground that there is no evidence at all and not on the ground that the Judge disbelieved the evidence for the prosecution on the strength of the medical evidence—16 W R 20

The accused must be acquitted under this section if there is no evidence on the prosecution side and he cannot be convicted on the evidence given against him by the witness called by the co accused in his defence—5 M L T 75

When a judgment of acquittal is recorded under this section the opinions of the assessors need not be recorded—7 B H C R 82

Finding of not proven —The Code does not provide for a finding of not proven The proper course is to record a finding of 'not guilty' —2 Weir 381

903 Defence —A criminal case ought not to be adjudged on mere probabilities The burden of proof is always on the Crown and not to any extent on the accused and unless the evidence is of such a nature as to enable the Court to judge rather than conjecture the accused should not be called upon to make his defence—Ratanlal 772 Ratanlal 773

It is not a mere formality but an essential part of the criminal trial to call upon the accused to enter on his defence and omission to do so is not a mere irregularity curable by Sec 537—23 Cal 252 In James v Emp 16 A L J 41 however the omission to call upon the accused to enter on his defence was held to be a mere irregularity cured by Sec 537 unless the accused was prejudiced thereby

The accused shall be called upon to adduce evidence witnesses are examined for it is only when evidence has been produced that he can be called on to enter on his defence it is extremely irregular to examine the defence without the evidence of the prosecution evidence but the conviction is valid if the irregularity has not prejudiced the accused—41 Cal 252

If the accused has not his witnesses present the case—23 W R 58

290 The accused or his pleader may

Defence stating the facts or law to rely, and make such statements as he thinks necessary on the evidence for the prosecution then examine his witnesses (if any) and cross-examine and re-examine (if any) witnesses called by the prosecution

904 Examination of defence witness —The accused is at liberty to meet the case in any way he likes. He can as to the whole or any part of the case against him rely on the witnesses for the prosecution or may call fresh evidence himself. No adverse inference will be drawn against him if he does not produce or examine any witnesses—8 Cal 121 10 Cal 140 21 C W N 1152 (per Huda J). But where a prima facie case of circumstances making out or tending to support the charge against the accused is established and he withholds evidence in disproof or explanation available to him and not accessible to the prosecution, an inference unfavourable to the accused may legitimately be drawn—Ashraf Ali v K E 21 C W N 1152 (per Teunon J).

When the accused are being tried separately each would be a competent witness at the trial of the other—23 Bom 213 16 Bom 661

The burden lies on the prosecution to prove beyond all reasonable doubt that the offence was committed by the accused. If the prosecution cannot prove the guilt of the accused beyond all doubt the accused is under no obligation to explain how the offence was committed or who committed the offence or by what means—Ratanlal 686. When there is no prima facie evidence sufficient to convict the accused he is not under any obligation to explain to the Court his movements at the time of the offence—10 Cnl 970.

The record is not complete unless it shows the nature of the defence set up. If the accused makes any statement it must be recorded. If he makes no statement or refuses to answer when called upon to enter upon his defence a note should be made accordingly and when there is nothing to show the nature of the defence a note of the address to the Court (if any) should be recorded—15 W R 16.

905 Cross examination —An accused person must be allowed to cross examine the witnesses called by another co accused for his defence if the case of the latter is adverse to that of the former—21 Cal 401. But the accused cannot cross examine his own witness. Thus where a prosecution witness was examined before the committing Magistrate but was not called in the Sessions Court and thereupon the counsel for the defence examined him he would be treated as a witness for the defence and the defence counsel was not entitled to cross examine him unless it appeared that the witness was suppressing the truth or was lying or refusing to give information—20 All 155.

291 The accused shall be allowed to examine any witness

Right of accused as to examination and summoning of witnesses not previously named by him, if such witness is in attendance, but he shall not, except as provided in Sections 211 and 231, be entitled of right to have any witness summoned, other than the witnesses named in the list delivered to the Magistrate by whom he was committed for trial

906 Summoning witnesses—The accused is entitled as a matter of right to secure the attendance of all witnesses named in the list delivered to the Magistrate—2 W R 6 3 W R 36 15 W R 34 23 W R 56 and a conviction without summoning and examining the defence witnesses is liable to be set aside—12 W R 22 47 Cal 758

If some of the witnesses whose names have been entered in the list given to the committing Magistrate (under sec 211) fail to appear in the Sessions Court the Judge ought to summon them and he cannot refuse to do so on the ground that the application for summons has been made at a late stage of the trial (viz at a time when the examination of the other defence witnesses has been ended and the case is ready for arguments)—47 Cal 758

The accused person cannot however require the Sessions Judge as of right to summon and examine witnesses other than those named in the list—3 W R 29 And the Judge's refusal to grant an adjournment to summon a witness not named in the list is not illegal—Nazir Singh v Emp 7 Lah L J 478 26 P L R 767 But the Sessions Judge has an inherent power if he thinks proper to exercise it to summon those witnesses—8 All 668

A Sessions Judge should not refuse to enforce the attendance of certain witnesses for the defence on the ground that there is ample evidence on the record about the matter it is for the accused person and not for the Judge to say what amount of evidence it would be proper to place before the jury in order to establish the case for the defence—7 C W N 188

Prosecutor's right of reply 292 The prosecutor shall be entitled to reply,

- (a) if the accused or any of the accused adduces any oral evidence,
- (b) with the permission of the Court on a point of law or
- (c) with the permission of the Court when any document which does not need to be proved is produced by any accused person after he enters on his defence

Provided that in the case referred to in clause (c) the reply shall unless the Court otherwise permits, be restricted to comment on the document so produced

Change —This section has been redrafted by section 79 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 Prior to this amendment the section stood as follows —

292 If the accused or any of the accused adduces any evidence the prosecutor shall be entitled to reply

Clauses (a) and (b) have been drafted by the Joint Committee (1922) and clause (c) has been added during the debate in the Assembly on the motion of Mr Srinivasa Rao See the Legislative Assembly Debates February 7 1923 page 2011

907 Object and scope of section —The object of the law in this section is to let each side have an opportunity of commenting on the evidence of the other and not to give an additional advantage to the prosecution Therefore where the defence counsel first said that he meant to adduce evidence but afterwards informed the Court that he did not mean to call evidence the Judge should not allow the right of reply—10 Cal 140 This section makes the right of reply dependent upon the fact of evidence having been actually adduced—30 Bom 421 11 Bom L R 177 Under the Code of 1882 the prosecutor had a right of reply if the accused stated that he meant to adduce evidence whether he did or did not actually adduce evidence

908 What amounts to adducing evidence —The putting in of the depositions of certain prosecution witnesses made before the committing Magistrate and of the statements of the accused made under sec 16 to a Police constable forming part of the record sent up by the Magistrate cannot be said to be adducing evidence by the accused within the meaning of this section The tender of them as evidence by the accused is merely an application to the Judge for the exercise of the discretion vested in him by sec 288—31 Cal 1050

The prosecution shall be entitled to reply if the documentary evidence for the defence is adduced after the case for the prosecution is closed—43 Cal 426 See clause (c) of the section Therefore where during the cross examination of the prosecution witnesses and before entering upon defence the accused puts in some documentary evidence it does not give a right of reply to the Crown because so long as the case is in the hands of the prosecution the putting in of documents cannot be said to take the prosecution by surprise and this is the correct test for determining whether the prosecution should have the right of reply—10 C W N cclxvii 14 Cal 245 17 Cal 930 43 Cal 426 10 Cal 1024 14 Bom 436 7 L B R 84 Contra—14 All 212 11 Mad 339 16 All 88 30 Bom 421 4 L B R 5 and 1 S L R 91 where it has been held that the prosecution is entitled to a right of reply even if any documentary evidence is put in by the defence before the close of the evidence for the prose cution (e.g. if any document is produced by the defence during the cross examination of prosecution witnesses) This view is no longer correct by reason of clause (c) newly added in the section

If while the case for the prosecution is going on the defence in his cross examination utilises a witness for the prosecution to his own advantage or puts in a lot of documentary matter through such witness it cannot deprive him of his right to the last word because it does not amount to adducing evidence for the defence—11 Bom L R 177

909 Reply —Reply means reply generally to the whole case Even if one of the accused calls witnesses and the others do not the prosecution is entitled to reply not merely on the evidence adduced by one of the accused but generally on the whole case It is not the intention of this section that the prosecution is to sum up as to such of the accused as do not call evidence and to reply only on the evidence adduced by the other —18 Bom 364

293 (1) Whenever the Court thinks that the jury or assessors should view the place in which the offence charged is alleged to have been committed or any other place in which any other transaction material to the trial is alleged to have occurred the Court shall make an order to that effect and the jury or assessors shall be conducted in a body under the care of an officer of the Court to such place which shall be shown to them by a person appointed by the Court

(2) Such officer shall not except with the permission of the Court suffer any other person to speak to or hold any communication with any of the jury or assessors and unless the Court otherwise directs they shall when the view is finished, be immediately conducted back into Court

This section speaks of the view of the locus in quo by jury or assessors whereas section 539B relates to the view of the place by Magistrates

Examination of witness not permitted —The assessors cannot view the scene of the alleged offence and cannot examine the witnesses at the spot because by subsection (2) the officer conducting the jury or assessors to the spot cannot suffer any other person to speak to or hold any communication with any of the jury or assessors —5 W R 59

294 If a juror or assessor is personally acquainted with any relevant fact, it is his duty to inform the Judge that such is the case, whereupon he may be sworn, examined, cross-examined and re-examined in the same manner as any other witness

295 If a trial is adjourned, the jury or assessors shall attend at the adjourned sitting, and at every subsequent sitting, until the conclusion of the trial.

310. When trial should be adjourned —A Judge is bound to adjourn a case in which a witness summoned for the defence is absent especially if he is a material witness and the case cannot be satisfactorily decided in his absence—15 W R 34, 18 W R 20, 23 W R 58 But under such circumstances the Judge will not be justified in discharging the jury in the midst of a trial and adjourn the case to the next Session—4 Fom L R 939.

296 The High Court may, from time to time, make rules as to keeping the jury together during a trial before such Court lasting for more than one day; and subject to such rules the presiding Judge may order whether and in what manner the jurors shall be kept together under the charge of an officer of the Court, or whether they shall be allowed to return to their respective homes.

In every case involving the punishment of death or of transportation for life in which the trial lasts for more than one day, the jury should be kept together during the trial by the Sheriff or Deputy Sheriff or such other officer as the presiding Judge may appoint for that purpose, and in every other case in which the trial shall last for more than one day, it shall be in the discretion of the presiding Judge whether the jury shall be kept together in manner aforesaid or shall be allowed to return to their respective homes—Bombay Gazette, 1875, Part I, p. 653.

R.—Conclusion of Trial in Cases tried by Jury.

297. In cases tried by jury, when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court shall proceed to charge the jury, summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided.

911. When the case.....are concluded —This section specially enacts that the Judge shall only charge the jury when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply are concluded, i.e. after all the evidence has been taken on both sides, and the counsel of both parties have finished addressing the jury. A Judge who charges the jury and takes verdict as regards some only of the accused and afterwards hears arguments and takes verdict as regards the remaining accused, will be acting irregularly and contrary to the provision of this section—36 Mad 585. After the witnesses for the prosecution and a certain number of witnesses for the defence had been examined, the foreman of the jury asked if the defence could not cut down the number of witnesses they had summoned, the defence thereupon agreed to dispense with all further witnesses save one. The Judge taking the foreman's intervention as an indication that the jury had decided to acquit, proceeded to charge the jury upon the case as it stood. The jury however found the accused guilty, whereupon the Judge ordered the remaining witnesses for the defence to be examined, and after this was done he again addressed the jury and then the jury again gave their verdict. Held that the procedure was entirely illegal, because all the evidence on both sides must be concluded before the case could be submitted to the jury. Both the verdicts were therefore null and void—Lynn v Crown, 4 Lah 382.

The procedure adopted by the Judge in requiring the jury to give a finding on one of two questions of fact constituting the proof in the case, before he concluded his charge with reference to the other question of fact, was irregular, if not illegal, and was certainly calculated to embarrass the jury in arriving at a proper verdict as to the character of the offence, if any proved—2 Weir 499.

912. Charge to jury —The form and contents of a charge vary with the circumstances of individual cases, with the nature of the evidence the Judge is to deal with, and the mode in which the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence are conducted. Generally speaking, it is usual to begin a charge by setting out the offence or offences which the prisoner is charged with having committed, and explaining the law relating to those offences. Then the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence may be referred to, and such comments made on the evidence adduced by the other side as the Sessions Judge may think it desirable or useful to make to the jury. Care should be taken to place the defence set up fairly before the jury and to ensure that the jury appreciate the issue or issues which they have to try. The charge should include the usual warning as to the duty of the jury to the prosecution on the one hand to the prisoner on the other—Afruddi v A, 23 C W N 833.

In addressing the jury the Judge should endeavour to speak in a manner simple and direct. The charge must not be involved nor should the language be extravagant—11 Cr L J 538 (Cal). He should not use expressions assuming the guilt of the accused nor should he use slang and colloquial phrases and the interrogative method in charging the jury—45 Cal 557. In charging the jury it is the duty of the Judge to give a narrative and history of the case to the jury and to place the evidence and facts in a clear manner before them so as to enable them to grasp the details and come to a right decision—6 Bom L R 31.

If a charge is to be delivered in Bengali and the Sessions Judge is not sufficiently acquainted with that language to prepare the charge in Bengali it is open to him to obtain such assistance as he requires from the officers of his Court. But it is not desirable that he should resort to the services of the Public Prosecutor for this purpose—Afiruddi v K E 23 C W N 833.

913 Summing up of evidence.—The object of a summing up is to enable the Judge to place before the jury the facts and circumstances of the case both for and against the prosecution so as to help them in arriving at a right decision upon the points which arise for their consideration—Khiyiruddin v Emp 42 C L J 504 27 Cr L J 266. Where the provisions of this section are neglected and the Judge does not sum up at all the conviction will be set aside and a new trial ordered—9 W R 51 23 Cal 252. The summing up contemplated by this section cannot mean any statement of the evidence which a Judge may in his caprice think proper to make to the jury but a proper summing up containing a full and distinct statement of the evidence on both sides, with such advice as to the legal bearing of the evidence and the weight which properly attaches to the several parts of it as a sound judicial discretion would suggest. The Judge in a proper summing up must formulate and specify simple issues for consideration and collate the evidence pro and con bearing upon the issues in order to assist the jury to arrive at the correct decision thereon. Merely summarising the evidence examination in chief cross examination and re examination of the different witnesses who have deposed at the trial and putting before the jury all that has been said by the witnesses or by the lawyers appearing on the two sides and budding together important facts as well as trivial points without any attempt at discrimination is not a proper summing up. Such a summing up instead of aiding the jury only confuses them—Jessarat v Emp 29 C W N 526 26 Cr L J 1009 A I R 1925 Cal 729. It is the duty of the Judge to state to the jury what are the principal points in the evidence and how they bear for or against the prisoner in short to render the jury every assistance in his power towards coming to the right conclusion—6 W R 72. The jurors ordinarily are not men who are used to weighing the evidence and it is therefore necessary that all help should be given to them in the light of the observations made by the learned Judges in the decided cases—Abdul Gani v K E, 53 Cal 181 42 C L J 205 He should state the evidence pro and con with a running commentary as to its agreement and disagreement with the other facts of the case—1 W R 25, 25 W R 54. Where a fair and proper statement of the evidence has not been placed before the jury, the High Court will set aside the conviction—13 C W N. 754 Where the Judge did not sum up the evidence at all but simply charged the jury with these words— "It is for you to say from the evidence you have heard whether you consider the accused guilty or not," it was held that the charge was wholly insufficient, and a retrial was ordered in the case—1902 A W N 201 Where the Judge did not sum up the evidence to the jury, but only treated it generally and called it a very poor evidence which standing alone amounted to nothing, it was held that the charge to the jury was defective—23 Bom 316 But it is not necessary for the Judge, in his charge to the jury, to go into the minutest details in the evidence—40 Cal 367

In summing up the case, the Judge must place before the jury all facts of prime importance in favour of the accused—6 Bom L R 31. He cannot omit any matters of prime importance, especially if they favour the accused merely because they have been elaborately discussed by the Advocate—27 Bom 644, 3 S L R 102, 40 Bom 220 So also, he cannot omit to draw the attention of the jury to what appears to be a possible answer to the charge against the accused, notwithstanding that it has escaped the counsel of the accused—19 C W N 653 This section makes it imperative on a Sessions Judge to place in his summing up to the jury evidence both for the prosecution and the defence The fact that the pleaders for the accused thought it unnecessary to place much reliance upon the defence of the accused would not absolve the Sessions Judge from his duty of placing before the jury all the facts in favour of the accused—17 Cr L J 19 (Mad) Omission to put the material facts or to put the defence to the jury is sufficient to cause the High Court to quash the conviction if this Court comes to the conclusion that the verdict of the jury was affected thereby—K E v Barendra Kumar Ghose, 28 C W N 170 (199); R v Hill, (1911) 7 Cr App Rep 26 R v Wilson, (1913) 9 Cr App. Rep 124, R v Smith, (1920) 84 J P 67 But where the Judge made a reference to the statement made by the accused, the mere omission to draw the attention of the jury to the defence of the accused is not a misdirection and does not vitiate the trial—K E v Barendra Kumar Ghose, 28 C. W N 170 38 C L J 411 (Sankaritola Postmaster Murder Case)

The Judge must always be careful that he does not usurp the of the advocate, and that the evidence of the case is presented to in as dispassionate and impartial a manner as is expected of the officer He ought not to express any opinion on the reliability of the evidence for the prosecution or the defence—25 C W N 682

In cases of very serious offences and where the evidence is merely circumstantial the evidence should be read over in extenso to the jury (and not merely summed up)—5 B H C R 85 Where the trial has been a prolonged one the Judge ought to read over to the jury the important testimonies in the trial—Ratanlal 850 But an omission to read out the material portions of the evidence is not in itself sufficient for the reversal of the verdict of the jury In each case it must be a question whether such omission was such as to mislead the jury and the Appellate Court will not interfere unless it has prejudiced the accused—5 Bom L R 207

The law does not expressly require a Judge to formulate at the conclusion of the delivery of his charge specific questions for the jurors reply Such a practice is however helpful in deciding the legal effect of the Judge's finding but the formulation of such questions requires great care and the queries should be confined within the narrowest possible compass—Rupan Singh v K E 4 Pat 626 27 Cr L J 49 A I R 1925 Pat 797

914 Laying down the law —It is the duty of the Judge to give a direction upon the law to the jury so far as to make them understand the law as bearing upon the facts and to enable them to decide the point at issue—8 Cal 739 Thus where in a trial for murder grave and sudden provocation causing loss of power of self control is suggested for the defence it is the duty of the Judge to explain the distinction between murder and culpable homicide and the jury as judges of facts have to decide the issue as to sudden provocation—Ratanlal 766 In a charge of rioting the jury must be told that a rioting can only take place when there is an unlawful assembly consisting of at least five men with one of the common objects mentioned in the I P C and it is essentially necessary to mention what an unlawful assembly is The jury are not experts in law—Abdul Sheikh v Emp 17 Cr L J 92 (Cal) Mere reference to the sections of the I P C defining offences (25 Cal 736) or mere reading out to the jury the sections of the I P C does not amount to a sufficient explanation of the law—Sri Prosad v Emp 4 C W N 193 Nor should the Judge merely give a copy of the Penal Code to the jury to read and interpret it for themselves but he must explain the law to them and tell them in a kind of popular language of what offence they are to convict the accused—14 Cal 164 It is necessary for a Judge to read the very words of the section itself to the jury if he purports to give them what the provisions of law are and then if necessary to explain what is the meaning of the section Where the only direction as to what constitutes murder was contained in one sentence murder is the intentional killing of another human being with malice or forethought," held that though it was a comprehensive way of describing what the meaning of murder was, it was not the way in which the Court ought to charge the jury in this country. It is usual to refer to the sections which relate to culpable homicide, and to direct the jury as to what is culpable homicide and in what circumstances culpable homicide amounts to murder—Emp v Durga Charan, 26 C W N 1002. Moreover it is the duty of the Judge to call the attention of the jury to the different elements constituting the offence and to deal with the evidence by which it is proposed to make the accused liable—Taju Pramanik v Q E, 25 Cal 711 21 Cr L J 694 (Cal), Mari Valajan v Emp, 30 Mad 44. It is also the duty of the Judge to explain the law as regards abetment—47 Cal 46. In complicated cases, the Judge should in his charge to the jury not only explain the law, but should draw their attention to the evidence in the case and explain how they shall apply the law to the particular facts of the case—Rupan Singh v K E, 4 Pat 626 27 Cr L J 49.

The Judge cannot omit to explain the law on the ground that it has been sufficiently explained by the pleaders on both sides in their addresses to the jury. The responsibility of laying down the law for the guidance of the jury rests entirely with the Judge, and the verdict given by the jury in the absence of any such direction on the law by which they should be guided cannot be accepted as a valid verdict in the case—29 Cal 379; Ramprasad v Emp 26 Cr L J 1090 (Nag). The Judge's charge is not only for the purpose of stating the law and explaining it to the jury, but also of helping them to find facts. He has to advise the jury as to the logical bearing of the evidence admitted upon the matters to be found by them. He ought to do that to limit the chances of error of the jury—Afiruddi v K E, 23 C W N 833.

But in explaining the law upon a particular offence the Judge ought not to discourse in all branches and departments of the crime, especially in a case of complicated offence as murder or culpable homicide. It is so is to confuse the jury and possibly to direct their deliberation into channels that have nothing to do with the case—19 C W N 652. The Judge should lay down the law only in so far as it has a bearing on the evidence adduced in the particular case, to simplify the issues before the Court, to keep the jury within proper limits and not to perplex their minds with considerations that are outside the scope of the inquiry—19 C W N 653. All unnecessary facts and arguments should be avoided by the Judge, and the charge should be strictly confined to the evidence adduced and the application of the law to such evidence—S W R 87. No rulings of the Court should be cited by the Judge in his charge to the jury, nor should he attempt to differentiate or form any opinion whatever as to the merits of the case.

a procedure confuses the minds of the jury and constitutes a misdirection—Meher Sardar v. K E, 16 C W. N. 46

915 Misdirection to Jury —Examples —(1) Omission to give the jury a sufficient explanation of the law so as to enable them to decide the point at issue is a misdirection—8 Cal 739, 25 Cal 561, 2 Weir 500, 9 M L T 345, 35 Cal 736 Thus, where in a dacoity case, the Judge stated to the jury "Dacoity is committed when any number of persons not less than five conjointly commit robbery" but did not explain to the jury what was necessary to constitute the offence of robbery, it was an omission to lay down the law, and amounted to a misdirection—Mani Valayan v Emp, 30 Mad 44, Nawab Ali v K E, 11 O L J 315, 25 Cr L J 1129 So also, omission to explain to the jury the difference between murder and culpable homicide, or to tell them under what view of the facts the accused ought to be convicted of murder or culpable homicide or to be acquitted, is a misdirection—3 L B R 75 Where the act of the accused was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death and thus came within the definition of murder (punishable under sec 302 I P C) and the Judge himself described the act to the jury as 'imminently dangerous' but said that the offence was punishable under section 304 I P C (culpable homicide not amounting to murder), held that there was a misdirection in not explaining to the jury as to how the act which he himself described as "imminently dangerous" was rendered punishable under section 304 I P C—Muhammad Yunus v Emperor, 50 Cal 318 (324) In a case of criminal breach of trust, the Judge should tell the jury that the test they are to apply is whether the circumstances relied upon by the accused showed an intention of causing 'wrongful gain' or 'wrongful loss,' and the Judge should also explain the meaning of these terms Omission to do so amounts to a misdirection—Browne v K E, 7 Bur L T 20 It is a misdirection not to adequately explain to the jury the law in regard to abetment—47 Cal 46, or in regard to onus of proof—26 C W. N 972.

(2) Failure to call the attention of the jury to the different elements constituting the offence is a misdirection—25 Cal 711 Thus, where in a case of murder, the Judge simply asked the jury to find whether the prisoner inflicted the injuries on the deceased, it was held to be a misdirection the jury ought to have been asked to find as to the intention of the accused to cause death or the knowledge that he was likely to cause death—1 Bom L R 784, 35 Cal 531 Similarly, where in a case under secs 474 and 475 I P C, the Judge told the jury that the only issue which they had to decide was whether the forged documents were in the possession of the accused, ignoring altogether the question of knowledge combined with intention which is so absolutely requisite to justify a conviction under sec 474 I P C, it was held that the Judge had misdirected the jury—16 Bom 165 Where in a case of retaining stolen property, the Judge directed the jury to decide whether the property was stolen and whether it was retained by the accused without asking them to decide whether the accused knew or had reason to believe the property to be stolen, it was held that this amounted to a misdirection—15 Bom 369 So also in a case of receiving property stolen in the commission of a dacoity (sec 412 I P C) the Judge directed the jury to the effect that if they found that the properties were properly identified as having been the properties stolen at the time of the dacoity and were found in the accused's possession, they were bound to presume the accused's guilt but the jury were not properly directed that it was their duty to weigh all the circumstances of the case and consider the accused's explanation and then decide whether or not they should make such a presumption, held that this was a serious misdirection—Satya Charan v Emp 52 Cal 223 26 Cr L J. 1155

(3) Failure to point out to the jury as to the relevancy or otherwise of a confession made under inducement, and merely telling the jury that if the confession was true it was enough to warrant the conviction of the accused, is a misdirection—26 Mad 38 See notes under sec 298

(4) Omission to explain to the jury the attitude to be taken towards a retracted confession as evidence against a co accused is a misdirection—47 Cal 46 Where the Sessions Judge directed the jury that the retracted confession of a co accused is practically of no value against anybody but the confessor, but asked the jury to take into consideration the confession while considering the cases of the other two co accused individually, held that this was a misdirection as it was likely to prejudice the jury and lead them to give some weight to such statements when they should have disregarded them altogether—In re Ibrahim 42 C L J 496 26 Cr L J 1146 A I R 1926 Cal 374

It is a misdirection to tell the jury that the retracted confessions are not to be held true unless they are corroborated by independent reliable evidence because there is no rule of law that a retracted confession must be supported by independent reliable evidence corroborating it in material particulars—23 Bom 316 (Contra—18 All 78 2 Weir 507 and 2 Weir 509, where it has been held that if a confession is subsequently retracted and it is not corroborated by independent evidence the Judge should point out to the jury that it is not safe to rely on the retracted confession unless it is corroborated by independent reliable evidence and an omission to point this out to the jury amounts to a misdirection) It is also a misdirection to the jury to tell them to leave out of consideration the retracted confessions of the accused—8 M L T 372 The question to be put to the jury regarding such confessions is not whether they are corroborated by independent evidence but whether having regard to the circumstances under which they were made and retracted and all the circumstances connected with them it was more probable that the original confessions or the statements retracting them were true. An omission on the part of the Judge to put this question to the jury amounts to a misdirection—21 Mad 83

(5) A Sessions Judge should caution the jury not to accept the accomplice's evidence unless it is corroborated in material particulars. Omission to state this amounts to a misdirection—24 C W N 119 12 Mad 196. But a recent Calcutta case lays down that an uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law although it has long been the practice for the Judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Therefore it is not a misdirection to tell the jury that a conviction upon the evidence of the approver alone will not be illegal—Emp v Jamal 51 Cal 160 (1963) following the judgment of Lord Reading C J in R v Baskerville [1916] 1 K B 658 (663). Ledu Molla v Emp 52 Cal 595 42 C L J 501 26 Cr L J 1037

(6) An omission to arrange the facts deposed by witnesses is a misdirection—10 W R 7. Omission to point out to the jury that there was an absence of evidence material to the case for the prosecution is a misdirection—23 W R 21

(7) Where there are several accused persons and the case is against all of them does not stand on the same footing omission by the Judge to ask the jury to consider the case as against each of the accused individually is a serious misdirection—Khyiruddin v Emp 42 C L J 504 A I R 1926 Cal 139

(8) When a charge to the jury placed prominently before them all the circumstances that went against the accused and did not call their attention to any of those that were in favour of the accused it was held that there was a misdirection sufficient to vitiate the trial—4 C W N 196 40 Bom 220 21 Cr L J 670 (Cal). Omission to make the jury acquainted with the nature of the case for the prosecution and the nature of the case for the defence is a misdirection—23 C W N 833. But the fact that every point in favour of the accused has not been put to the jury does not amount to a misdirection. The charge must be judged as a whole and one must see whether judging it as a whole the case for the two sides has been fairly put so that the jury can understand what they have to decide and can come to a right conclusion. It is not necessary for the Sessions Judge to repeat everything that has been said by the pleader for the defence in his speech. But he should draw the attention of the jury to the more essential items and the strongest argument that has been advanced for the defence. A mere reference to the argument of the pleader is insufficient—Haricharan v Emp 34 C L J 512 Abdul

Salim v Emp. 49 Cal 573 The fact that the address of the defence counsel to the jury is a lengthy one does not excuse the Judge from pointing out important points of the defence argument to the jury—Pearcy v Emp. 20 C W N 436 (F B) A verdict obtained from the jury without placing before them an important piece of evidence in favour of the defence, whatever may have been its real worth cannot be sustained—Ahijiruddin v Emp. 42 C L J 504 • 27 Cr L J 266

(9) A Judge's direction to the jury to consider the proof of previous convictions as evidence giving rise to an inference regarding the character of the prisoner amounts to a misdirection—5 Cal 768 See section 310

(10) Omission to tell the jury that the accused is entitled in the benefit of any reasonable doubt that they may have on any point is a misdirection—34 Cal 698

(11) Where the Judge stated in his charge to the jury that there was a mass of oral evidence on behalf of the prosecution as well as for the defence, but that the jury might neglect it all, it was held that this was a misdirection, because it is the duty of the jury to give their verdict upon considering the whole of the evidence—6 Bom L R 31

(12) Omission to invite the jury to consider carefully what each of the accused said in his statement with reference to the charges framed against him, is a misdirection—47 Cal 46

(13) The Sessions Judge is guilty of misdirection where he has failed to draw pointed attention to the fact that the jury have to rely upon the testimony of an absent witness and where evidence which ought not to have been allowed to be given has been improperly admitted under sec 33 of the Evidence Act—39 Mad 449

(14) In a case of theft the failure on the part of the Judge to call attention to the whole of the evidence telling against the accused and especially his observation as to the case resting wholly on the identification of certain jewels with which the evidence went to show that the accused had dealt, constitutes a misdirection—2 Weir 488

(15) Where in a case of theft, the evidence against the accused was the possession of stolen property 5 years after the occurrence, it was held that the Judge had misdirected the jury by saying "On this evidence, notwithstanding that it is nearly 5 years since the crime occurred, you will decide whether you are satisfied with the prisoner's explanation for his possession of the stolen property" The proper course would be to tell them to consider whether after 5 years it was reasonable to require the prisoner to prove how he came by the goods or whether his story, not being in itself improbable, ought not to be accepted—2 Weir 489

(16) A direction to the jury that they should convict the prisoner if they believed that he had shown the stolen property to the Police, is a misdirection, because the mere fact that a person knew where the stolen property was and showed it to the police is not equivalent to possession of stolen property—2 Weir 493

(17) Where a Judge directed the jury to acquit one of the prisoners on the ground that the witnesses who identified him had deposed falsely it was held that the Sessions Judge ought to have made it clear to the jury that if they disbelieved the witnesses on whose testimony the case hinged in regard to any of the prisoners that was a circumstance to be carefully weighed by them in estimating the credibility of the testimony so far as it affected the other accused. His omission to do so amounted to a misdirection—2 Weir 501

(18) Omission to point out to the jury the discrepancies in the evidence of the principal witnesses for the prosecution constitutes a misdirection—33 C L J 150 Emp v Durga Charan 26 C W N 1002

(19) Where a number of persons who could have given important information were not examined as witnesses for the Crown the Judge should direct the jury to draw an inference adverse to the prosecution. His omission to do so amounts to a misdirection—Muhammad Yunus v Emp 50 Cal 318 (326) Tenaram v K D 33 C L J 180

(a) Where the accused raised the plea of private defence and the case for the prosecution was that there was no right of private defence at all the Judge should simply tell the jury that the question they had to decide was whether or not the right of private defence came into existence and not how far it extended or whether it was exceeded. Moreover in dealing with the law as to the right of private defence there are several important points the omission of which would amount to a serious misdirection. Thus in a murder case in which the right of private defence is set up the Judge in explaining sec 100 I P C which contains a list of six heads of offences should point out those heads which would and those which would not apply to the case they were trying otherwise the jury would naturally disregard those to which their attention was not specially directed by the Judge. Moreover in explaining the law as to private defence the Judge should also explain to the jury the provisions of section 101 I P C in a case where there is a charge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder as well as the minor charge of causing grievous hurt. The omission on the part of the Judge to explain these points amounts to a misdirection—Muhammad Yunus v Emp 50 Cal 318 (325-326). On a charge under sec 304 I P C where the defence of the accused is that the deceased came into his house for robbery at midnight and that the accused inflicted wounds on him which proved fatal the Judge should expound the law to the jury not only with reference to the right of private defence of person but also with reference to the right of private defence of property and should direct the jury to consider whether the accused had not used more force than was necessary for preventing the deceased from running away with the stolen property. Omission to so charge the jury amounts to a misdirection—Basaruddin v Emp 28 C W N 585 39 C L J 525

(21) The Judge is entitled to tell the jury that when a prisoner is charged with causing hurt to another the burden of proving that it was done in the exercise of the right of private defence lies on the prisoner—23 C W N 833. But when the accused has examined witnesses to prove the defence (e.g. the right of private defence) set up by him it is no longer necessary for the Judge to refer to the law relating to burden of proof (because the accused has discharged that burden) the Judge should simply ask the jury to decide the question of fact on the evidence before them. If in such a case the Judge refers to the provisions of section 105 of the Evidence Act it would mislead the jury and lead them to think that the defence set up by the accused would require a higher standard of proof. This is clearly a misdirection—50 Cal 318 (at page 325)

(22) It is a misdirection to suggest to the jury that in capital cases stronger evidence of a higher degree of certainty is required than in other criminal cases—49 Cal 167

(23) Omission to warn the jury to pay no attention to the previous proceedings amounts to a misdirection—Mir Mowz v A E 31 C L J 305

(24) Where one of the witnesses for the prosecution is himself suspected of being implicated in the offence the jury should be directed not to accept his evidence without the most careful scrutiny. Omission to give such a direction amounts to a serious misdirection—Satya Charan v Emp 52 Cal 223 26 Cr L J 1155

(25) The question as to whether the accused was under 12 years of age and incapable of understanding the nature of his act is one for the jury to decide notwithstanding no proof may have been adduced on the point and if the Judge attempts to exclude the consideration of the question from the jury by saying that they should leave that question out of account altogether the Judge is in error and his summing up on this point amounts to a misdirection—Emp v Ah Raza 28 O C 69 26 Cr L J 310

(26) Where the witnesses who had made certain statements before the committing Magistrate retracted those statements at the trial the Sessions Judge ought to tell the jury that the witnesses should be looked upon with suspicion and that their evidence should be regarded with great caution and the Judge ought to ask the jury to decide for themselves as to which of the two versions is correct. If instead of doing so the Judge expresses his opinion with a certain degree of assertion to effect that the statements made before the committing Magistrate true and that the depositions given before him are false his cha

the jury is vitiated by misdirection—Abdul Gani v K E 53 Cal 181

(27) It is a misdirection not to explain to the jury the difference between a crime and a civil wrong (e g the distinction between a civil and a criminal trespass)—41 Cal 662

916 Effect of misdirection —A misdirection does not justify a reversal of the verdict of the jury unless the misdirection has in fact occasioned a failure of justice—Legal Remembrancer v Shyam Sundar 26 C W N 558 Unless the misdirection is material the conviction will not be disturbed in appeal —In re Mullimayandi, 45 M L J 845 21 Cal 955 The High Court will not set aside a verdict where it is not erroneous in spite of the misdirection—Emp v Nannaddi, 22 C W N 572 21 Cal 955 See Note 1151

917 Non direction —Mere non direction is not necessarily misdirection those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood—1 P L J 317 Abrath v N W Railway Co, (1886) L R 11 A C 247 R v Stodder (1909) 25 T L R 712 King Emp v Barendra, 28 C W N. 170 (at p 199) 44 Cal 477 In a charge of unlawful assembly the omission to explain clearly to the jury the alleged common object of the unlawful assembly is not a misdirection but a mere non direction which will not justify the verdict being set aside if the prisoner was not prejudiced thereby—4 C W N 196 17 Cr L J 92 (Cal) Failure to point out to the jury the weakness of the evidence against the accused and the possibility of the offence having been committed by another is not a positive misdirection but merely a non direction—5 W R 13 Omission to call the attention of the jury to the evidence of defence witnesses whom the High Court considered to be untrustworthy is a mere non direction and not a misdirection—7 Cal 42 Omission to enter into details concerning the identification of stolen articles is not a mis-direction—1 W R 22

Duty of Judge. 298. (1) In such cases it is the duty of the Judge—

- (a) to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial, and especially all questions as to the relevancy of facts which it is proposed to prove and the admissibility of evidence or the propriety of questions asked by or on behalf of the parties, and in his discretion, to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence, whether it is or is not objected to by the parties,

- (b) to decide upon the meaning and construction of all documents given in evidence at the trial
- (c) to decide upon all matters of fact which it may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given
- (d) to decide whether any question which arises is for himself or for the jury and upon this point his decision shall bind the jurors

(2) The Judge may if he thinks proper in the course of his summing up express to the jury his opinion upon any question of fact or upon any question of mixed law and fact relevant to the proceeding

Illustrations

(a) It is proposed to prove a statement made by a person not being a witness in the case on the ground that circumstances are proved which render evidence of such statement admissible

It is for the Judge and not for the jury to decide whether the existence of those circumstances has been proved

(b) It is proposed to give secondary evidence of a document the original of which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed

It is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the original has been lost or destroyed

918 Question of Law —In a charge under sec 376 I P C the question whether when the complainant had consented to the act the offence within the meaning of sec 375 I P C has been committed is one of law for the Judge to decide under this section and not a question for the jury—19 Bom 735 The question as to whether a communication is privileged or not is one of law for the Judge to decide and he should not leave it to the jury to find whether it is so or not—10 W R 14

Direction of the Judge —What a Judge says to the jury upon a point of law is a binding direction upon the jury—20 W R 41 They are not entitled to resort to a commentary on the law during their consultation about the verdict They should take the law from the Judge—6 Bom I R 258 If the jury return a verdict according to the direction of the Judge the High Court will not interfere with the verdict unless it is manifestly erroneous—11 Cal 85

1 919 Admissibility of evidence —The Judge has to advise the jury as to the logical bearing of the evidence admitted upon the matters to be found by them—23 C W N 833 This section expressly lays down that one of the duties of a Judge in a trial held with the jury is to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence whether it is or is not objected to by the parties If that is so the fact that the accused puts forward some particular ground for holding that the evidence is inadmissible would not relieve the Judge of his duty to look into all the circumstances in order to judge whether it is admissible or not—Emp v Panch Kauri 52 Cal 67 29 C W N 300 26 Cr L J 782 It is for the Judge to decide whether the evidence adduced before him is admissible or not the credibility of the evidence is to be left to the jury—Albas v Q E 25 Cal 736 45 Cal 557 Thus the question as to which documents or evidence the jury are to receive is for the Judge to decide and the question as to what they are to believe is for the jury—Ratanlal 452 It is a misdirection for the Judge to say that he sees no reason to disbelieve a particular witness He ought to leave the question of believing or disbelieving to the jury—7 C L J 246 The Judge is not entitled to say in a general manner that there is nothing in the evidence to support or even to lend a semblance of support to the contentions of the accused—K E v Taribilla 75 C W N 682

In case of accomplice evidence the Judge should caution the jury not to accept the approver's evidence unless it is corroborated Omission to say so will amount to a misdirection—12 Mad 196 24 C W N 119 The failure to tell the jury explicitly that the statement of one prisoner against another should not be considered in weighing the evidence against that other is such a grave irregularity as to vitiate the trial even though the Judge in summing up considered separately the evidence against each of the accused without referring at all to the statement referred to—6 B H C R 10 Put see 51 Cal 160 cited under Note 915(5) ante

Confessions —It is for the Judge to decide whether the statements or confessions made to the Magistrate and how much of the confessions made to the police are admissible leaving it to the jury to decide amounts to a misdirection—45 Cal 557 Omission to mention to the jury that a confession made by the accused to the police officer is inadmissible in evidence is a misdirection—Soneshwar v Emp 3 P L T 101 The Judge must decide whether the confessions are voluntarily made or not It is not for the jury to decide But once the confessions are admitted in evidence it is for the jury to determine the weight to be attached to them and the truth or otherwise of those confessions—11 Bom L R 332 But the Judge should charge the jury that the mere confessions of prisoners tried simultaneously with the accused for the same offence which are in a very qualified manner made operative as evidence by sec 30 of the CrP

dence Act, ought to be valued merely as accomplice's testimony, and to be treated as evidence of a peculiarly infirm and defective character requiring specially careful scrutiny before it can be safely relied on—21 W R 47 Where a Judge admitted in evidence a confession made before a Police Officer and directed the jury that the confession could and should be used not merely against the maker but also against his co accused, it was a misdirection—45 Cal 557

As regards retracted confessions see Note 915, no (4) under sec 297

920. Inadmissible evidence —It is the duty of the Judge to see that evidence which is not admissible in itself should not be allowed to go in to the prejudice of the accused—25 Cal 736 Where a document, which is not per se admissible, is admitted by the Court, and the accused having sufficient opportunity at the trial omits to take any objection, he cannot afterwards in appeal impeach the verdict of the jury on the ground that the document had been admitted without formal proof But it is competent to the High Court to consider whether, after excluding the evidence wrongly admitted, the rest of the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict—19 Cr L J 886 (Pat) Where during the trial before a jury the Public Prosecutor read an alleged confession of the accused which not being recorded according to law was inadmissible in evidence, held that the irregularity of allowing it to be read might have influenced the minds of the jury, however carefully the Judge might have endeavoured to remove any impression caused thereby, and that the accused was entitled to a retrial—3 P L T 52

Meaning and construction of document —The Judge must explain to the jury the legal construction to be put upon a document and its legal effect and bearing—3 W R 69 If there appears to be a palpable blot or alteration on the face of a document, the Judge has every right to draw the attention of the jury to it—17 W. R 58

921. Clause (c) —It is the duty of the Judge to decide upon all matters which it may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given Thus, if it is proposed to give secondary evidence of a document the original of which is alleged to have been lost or destroyed, it is the duty of the Judge to decide whether the original has been lost or destroyed—Ratanlal 452 Where the accused made one confession before the committing Magistrate, and another confession before the Court of Session, retracting the previous confession, and alleged that he was beaten by the Police and the previous confession was caused by inducement offered by the Police, it was held that the jury was to decide whether the first confession was induced by illegal means, whether that inducement still existed or had been effectually removed when the Magistrate recorded the confession—Ratanlal 245

922 Expression of opinion by Judge—Though it is open to a Judge to express his opinion to the jury on any matter of fact still the Judge ought to refrain from expressing any decided opinion on matters of fact in unmistakable terms because the decision of the questions of fact is left entirely for the jury—1 W R 2 1 W R 25 4 C W N 196 The Judge in his charge to the jury ought not to express his own opinion in terms too dogmatic and unqualified even though he informs them that they are not bound by any opinion of his—18 C W N 180 Topandas v Emp 25 Cr L J 761 (Sind) The Judge should be careful to express his opinion in such a way as not in any way to interfere with the duties of the jury to finally decide according to their own view of the facts—Fazaruddin v K E 4th C L J 111 26 Cr L J 1553 The Judge should not impress his own opinion indelibly on the mind of the jury and thus give them no option but to arrive at a decision which he himself arrived at—Akhyriddin v Emp 4th C L J 504 27 Cr L J 166 He should present the facts in their natural aspect and ought to leave the jury to decide the facts for themselves and he must not suggest far fetched explanations of points that tell in favour of or against either party—2 Weir 386 14 V L T 44th If he expresses any opinion he should also add that it is his own opinion which is not binding on the jury and that the jury is at liberty to draw their own conclusions—2 Weir 385 10 Cal 970 Topandas v Emp 25 Cr L J 761 (Sind) 34 Cal 608 35 Cal 531

Duty of jury 299 It is the duty of the jury—

- (a) to decide which view of the facts is true and then to return the verdict which under such view ought, according to the direction of the Judge, to be returned;
- (b) to determine the meaning of all technical terms (other than terms of law) and words used in an unusual sense which it may be necessary to determine whether such words occur in documents or not,
- (c) to decide all questions which according to law are to be deemed questions of fact,
- (d) to decide whether general indefinite expressions do or do not apply to particular cases, unless such expressions refer to legal procedure or unless their meaning is ascertained by law, in either of which cases it is the duty of the Judge to decide their meaning

It is the duty of the Judge to explain to the jury the distinction between murder and culpable homicide, and to tell them under what view of the facts A ought to be convicted of murder, or of culpable homicide, or to be acquitted

It is the duty of the jury to decide which view of the facts is true and to return a verdict in accordance with the direction of the Judge whether that direction is right or wrong, and whether they do or do not agree with it

(b) The question is whether a person entertained a reasonable belief on a particular point—whether work was done with reasonable skill or due diligence

Each of these is a question for the jury

923 View of facts —It means the whole view of facts alleged against the accused—the view taken by the prosecution which leads to the conclusion of his guilt or the view which is set up on his behalf and which would make him innocent—21 W R 72 In an offence under sec 193 I P C it is enough for the jury to find that the two contradictory statements are proved to their satisfaction and they need not find which of the two statements is false—21 W R 72

924 Questions of fact —It is the duty of the jury and not of the Judge to decide all questions of fact Where in the summing up the Judge left no question of fact for the jury to decide but decided all himself and said expressly that in his opinion it was proved that the accused had committed murder and the only thing he left to the jury was to say which of the exceptions to sec 300 I P C applied if the jury held that the offence did not amount to murder it was held that such a summing up was not in accordance with law and a new trial should be ordered—9 W R 51 But although the jury are the sole judges of facts still it is the duty of the Judge to help the jury to find facts He has to advise the jury as to the logical bearing of the evidence admitted upon the matters to be found by them—23 C W N 833

By verdict should be understood the collective opinion of the jury as a body, arrived at after mutual consultation and ascertained and announced by the foreman In case of disagreement among the jury the individual opinions of the members are never intended to be disclosed—Public Prosecutor v Abdul Hamid, 36 Mad 585 If a Judge records the individual opinions of the jurors by name, the procedure is opposed to the fundamental principle of the scheme of trial by jury—Jagannath v Emp 12 O L J 643 2 O W N 534 26 Cr L J 1346 Where it was alleged that the verdict of the jury was arrived at by casting lots whereupon the Judge held an inquiry and examined the individual jurors held that the statements of the jurors as to what happened in the jury room and as to the mode in which the verdict was arrived at were inadmissible—40 Cal 693

Where after the delivery of the verdict the jury wants to say some thing more it is undesirable to stop the jury at such stage of the proceedings for it may happen that before the verdict is recorded the foreman may make some observations in respect of that verdict which may show the Judge that the jury have not properly understood the case It would then be the duty of the Judge not to record the verdict but to re charge the jury so as to lay the case properly before them—30 Cal 485 Where the jury were apparently not able to follow the summing up of the Judge as regards the law bearing on the charges it is the duty of the Judge when the foreman told him of it to explain it to them again—1911 M W N 190 There can be no valid verdict if the jury have not rightly understood the nature of the offence in question—21 W R 1

927 Application of section —Under this section the Sessions Judge can ask the jury if they are not unanimous to retire for further consideration before the delivery of verdict but cannot do so after its actual delivery—7 L B R 140 36 Mad 585

But if the verdict is not clear, the Judge may require them, after delivery of verdict, to consider it even though they be unanimous, since a verdict which is ambiguous or not clear cannot be received—1 W R 50

928 If the jury are not unanimous —A jury may be required to retire for further consideration, only when their verdict is not unanimous. An unanimous verdict of the jury, unless it is contrary to law, must be received by the Judge—3 Cal 871 7 W R 22, 3 L B R 75. If the jury is unanimous, and there is no ambiguity in the verdict, the Judge cannot require them to reconsider their verdict—19 Bom 735 ; 20 Bom 215. If the Sessions Judge disagrees with the unanimous verdict of the jury, the only course open to him is to act under sec 307—28 Bom 412

When the jury are not unanimous, it is open to the Judge to require them to retire for further consideration, giving at the same time further directions on matters of law—6 Bom L R 258. But the Judge is not bound to summon a fresh jury—1 W R 41.

shall return a verdict on all the charges on which the accused is tried and the Judge may ask them such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is

929 Verdict on all the charges —The Judge ought to call upon the jury to return a verdict on each one of the heads of the charges. If the trial is for murder of two persons, and the jury return a verdict of guilty, the Sessions Judge should ascertain whether the verdict relates to the killing of one or the other or both—Ratanlal 746, 22 Cal 377

Where there are more than one accused as well as several charges, it would be a convenient course if the officer of the Court were to take a verdict of the jury upon each charge separately. Thus, in a case the accused were charged under sections 147, 148, 304, 326 and 325 I P C, and the Sessions Judge asked the jury the comprehensive question "I shall want you to give me a verdict in respect of the offences under sections 147, 148, 304, 326 and 325 I P C for each of the accused" and the jury returned an incomplete verdict, i.e. they gave a verdict only as regards sections 147 and 148 and expressed no opinion as regards the other charges; and the Sessions Judge had to question the jury again on the other charges. The High Court held the procedure to be sanctioned and directed that in such a case the officer of the Court should at first question to the jury "What is your verdict with regard to the accused as regards the charge under section 147 I. P. C.?"

then get a clear answer upon this charge. Then he would ask 'What is your verdict with regard to each of the accused as regards the charge under section 148?' He would then get a definite answer to that question. Then he would proceed on the same way and ask 'What is your verdict with regard to each of the accused as regards the charge under section 304?' and so on. If this procedure is adopted there would be no difficulty in getting a complete verdict from the jury—Eran Khan v Emp 50 Cal 658 (663)

If a Judge charges the jury and takes verdict as regards some only of the accused and afterwards hears arguments and takes verdict as regards the remaining accused he acts irregularly and contrary to the provisions of this Code—36 Mad 585

930 Questioning the jury.—The Judge is entitled to question the jury as to their verdict only where it is ambiguous or incomplete so that it is necessary to ascertain what the verdict really is—36 Mad 585 37 Cal 759 15 Bom 452 21 Cal 955 20 Bom 215 21 W R 1. If the verdict of the jury is incomplete or is not free from ambiguity the Judge is wrong in accepting such verdict without questioning the jury as to what their verdict really is. Thus where the jury returned a verdict of guilty but not voluntarily under a charge of voluntarily causing grievous hurt and the Judge accepted the verdict to be one of guilty and convicted the accused it was held that the verdict was really one of not guilty and the Judge was wrong without further questioning the jury in treating it as a verdict of guilty—12 C W N 530 see also 7 C W N 135. So also where in a case there were several accused and several charges under sections 147 148 304 325 and 326 I P C and the jury returned a verdict of guilty under see 147 against some of the accused and under section 148 against the rest but gave no verdict on the other charges held that the verdict of the jury was incomplete and it was necessary for the Sessions Judge to put further questions to the jury to ascertain what their verdict was as regards the charges under sections 304 35 and 326 I P C—Eran Khan v Emperor 50 Cal 658 Ram Prasad v Emp 26 Cr L J 1090 (Nag). In a case of rioting if the verdict of the jury leaves it uncertain what the common object of the assembly is the Judge ought to ask the jury questions under this section to ascertain the common object. If he does not do so the verdict is bad in law—21 Cal 955. Where in a case under see 408 I P C the jury returned a verdict of guilty but were not definite as to the amount embezzled but gave some approximate amount which was a fraction of the amount charged and where the Judge was inclined to think that a much larger amount than that mentioned by the jury had been misappropriated held that in a case like this the Judge was entitled to ask the jury such questions as were necessary to ascertain what their verdict was—Ahrode v A E

When the jury have delivered a verdict the Judge cannot ask them to reconsider their verdict The Judge is only entitled to question the jury to ascertain what their verdict really is—36 Mad 585 4 Lah 382 7 L B R 140 If he disagrees with their verdict he should proceed under section 307 but he cannot ask them to reconsider their verdict—7 I B R 140

Object of questions —This section never contemplates that on ascertaining that the jury are not unanimous the Judge should make minute inquiries to learn the nature of the majority and its opinion so that he would have the opportunity of accepting or refusing that opinion as a verdict according as it coincides with his own opinion or not Whatever may have been the individual opinion of the Judge if he went so far as to ask the jury what was the exact majority and what was the opinion of the majority the Judge ought to receive that verdict without hesitation—10 Cal 140

Asking reasons for verdict —This section enables the Judge to ask only such questions as are necessary to ascertain what the verdict is Questions put to the jury demanding their reasons for the verdict (i.e. reasons for convicting or acquitting the accused) specially if the verdict is unanimous exceed the limits of questioning which the law contemplates in this section—6 Bom L R 258 20 W R 50 9 Cal 53 43 Mad 744 In re Ram Natcher 22 M L J 355 13 Cr L J 586 (Mad)

But a reference under section 307 does not become invalid by reason of the Sessions Judge having asked the jury questions as to the reason of their verdict—43 Mad 744 On the other hand he should ask reasons under certain circumstances See Note 937 under section 307

Questions and answers to be recorded —The questions put to and the answers given by the jury must be recorded in their exact words it is not enough if their substance only is recorded—8 Cal 739

304 When by accident or mistake a wrong verdict is delivered, the jury may before or immediately after it is recorded, amend the verdict and it shall stand as ultimately amended

931 By accident or mistake —This section contemplates cases where the verdict delivered is not in accordance with what was to be delivered by the jury, such mistake being the result of an acc

only But where the jury commits a mistake in understanding the law, and such mistake results in an erroneous verdict, it cannot be amended by the jury under this section but can be corrected only by the Judge disagreeing with the jury and referring the case under sec 307 to the High Court—28 Bom 412 So also where the jurors being misled by the notes of the foreman as to some of the evidence, delivered an erroneous verdict, such a verdict could not be said to have been delivered by accident or mistake and could not be amended by the jury under this section—22 M L J 355

After the witnesses for the prosecution and certain witnesses for the defence were examined the Judge addressed the jury and asked them to give their verdict The jury gave a verdict of guilty, thereupon the Judge proceeded with the examination of the remaining witnesses for the defence, and after it was done, he again summed up the case to the jury and asked them to reconsider their verdict in the light of additional evidence The jury again returned a verdict of guilty and the Judge passed sentence on the accused Held that the first verdict was illegal because the Judge had charged the jury before the examination of the defence witnesses was finished (sec 297) and the second verdict was illegal because section 304 empowers the jury only to amend a wrong verdict delivered by accident or mistake but does not empower them to reconsider a verdict in the light of additional evidence As soon as the first verdict was delivered (even though it was illegal) the jury became functus officio and they had no power to deliver a fresh verdict on further evidence taken The procedure was wholly illegal the conviction and sentence must be set aside and a new trial held—Lyme v Crown 4 Lah 382

Where the verdict of the jury is clear and there is no accident or mistake in delivering it, it is a proper verdict and cannot be amended under this section and a second verdict delivered by the jury after being questioned by the Judge cannot be allowed to stand as an amendment—Ratanlal 982, 19 Bom 735

Before or immediately after it is recorded —The power of amending a verdict provided by this section must be exercised before or immediately after it is recorded and cannot be exercised after the jurors have dispersed In a trial by jury the foreman announced the verdict of 'not guilty' as the unanimous verdict of the jury and the verdict was recorded and the prisoner acquitted From information received some days afterwards the Judge was led to believe that the jurors were not agreed as regards the verdict the Judge summoned the foreman and examined him on oath he deposed that the verdict given as the unanimous verdict was really the verdict of a majority and was given as the unanimous verdict owing to a misunderstanding that the opinion of the majority was binding upon all jurors It was held that the Court had no jurisdiction in conse quence of the foreman's subsequent statement to set aside the verdict and the order of acquittal—1913 P R 6 (F B)

The italicised words have been added by section 80 of the Cr P

Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 The amendment is merely verbal and is the same as that made in sections 245 (2) and 258 (2)

932 When the verdict of the jury has been delivered the Sessions Judge is bound to say and record whether he agrees with the verdict or not—7 W R 6 15 W R 46 It is not competent to a Sessions Judge after the jury has returned their verdict and gone away and in the absence of the accused to examine some witnesses and then to act on the evidence in determining whether or not he should differ from the jury—7 Bom L R 979 If he agrees with and accepts the verdict of the jury (or of the majority) he is bound to deliver judgment according to the verdict once he agrees with the verdict he cannot afterwards reconsider it or disagree with it and refer the matter to the High Court—4 C W N 683

Acquittal —As soon as the judgment of acquittal is pronounced the prisoner is entitled to be discharged from custody (if there is no other charge pending against him) and his further detention is illegal It is for the jail authorities in whose custody the prisoner was to satisfy themselves of the result of the trial and no formal warrant of release by the Court to the jail authorities is necessary—5 M H C R App 2

Sentence —If the verdict of the jury is one of guilty it is the duty of the Judge to pass an adequate sentence for the offence for which the jury have convicted the prisoner and the fact that the Judge has differed from the jury cannot be a ground for passing a light sentence In doing he usurps the functions of the jury—3 W R (Cr Let) 16 He cannot if he likes release the accused on taking bond under section 562

307 (1) If in any such case the Judge disagrees with the

Procedure where verdict of the jurors or of a majority of the jurors, on all or any of the charges of which any accused person has been tried, and is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case in respect of such accused person to the High Court, he shall submit the case accordingly, recording the grounds of his opinion, and, when the verdict is one of acquittal, stating the offence which he considers to have been committed, and in such case, if the accused is further charged under the provisions of Section 310, shall proceed to try him on such charge, as if such verdict has been one of conviction

(2) Whenever the Judge submits a case under this section, he shall not record judgment of acquittal or of conviction on any of the charges on which such accused has been tried but he may either remand such accused to custody or admit him to bail

(3) In dealing with the case so submitted the High Court may exercise any of the powers which it may exercise on an appeal and subject thereto it shall after considering the entire evidence and after giving due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury acquit or convict such accused of any offence of which the jury could have convicted him upon the charge framed and placed before it and if it convicts him may pass such sentence as might have been passed by the Court of Session

Change —This section has been amended by sec 81 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The main changes are the following —first in subsection (1) the words any accused person have been substituted for the words the accused and the words in respect of such accused person have been added in subsection (2) and (3) the words such accused have been substituted for the words the accused. The reasons are thus stated. This amendment prescribes that when a Judge accepts the verdict of the jury in respect of some of the accused but not of others he need only refer the case of the latter to the High Court. —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Secondly the italicised words at the end of subsection (1) have also been newly added. We think however that a further amendment is required in section 307 to provide for the case of a person who is also charged with a previous conviction under section 310. It seems obvious that if the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jury on the principal charge and submits the case to the High Court it is desirable that the record should be complete. We propose therefore to insert at the end of section 307 (1) a provision for the trial of the further charge under section 310. —Report of the Select Committee of 1916. Under the old law it was held that if a case was referred to the High Court under sec 307 there was no conviction or acquittal in the Court of Session. It was the High Court which could convict or acquit the accused and it was only after such conviction by the High Court that the accused could be asked under sec 310 to plead to a previous conviction—30 Mad 134. Under the present amendment provision is made for trial as to the charge of previous conviction in the Sessions Court itself.

933 Scope of Section —Assessor case tried with jury —Where the Sessions Judge tried the accused with jury for an offence triable by jury and with the jurors as assessors for an offence triable with assessors.

and differing from them in their verdict and opinion referred both matters to the High Court it was held that as to the matter triable with assessors the Judge should not have included it in the reference but should have disposed of it according to law—8 Bom L R 599 9 Bom L R 1057, Ratanlal 600 In re Kambala Narayana 36 M I J 452 But if the Judge tries the assessor case with the aid of the jurors as jurors and not as assessors and disagrees with their verdict (not opinion), he can refer the case to the High Court—23 Bom 696 25 Cal 555

Who can refer—The reference under this section must be made by the Judge who held the trial and heard the evidence and not by the officer who succeeds him as Judge—2 C L J 48 But see section 559

High Court—Since the High Court in this section does not include a Judicial Commissioner's Court (see sec 266) a Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind sitting in Sessions has no power to differ from the verdict of the jury and refer this case under this section to the J C Court in its High Court jurisdiction—K E v Mithoo 25 Cr L J 428 A I R 1925 Sind 34

934 Disagreement—The Judge can refer the case to the High Court if he disagrees with the verdict of the jury If he once accepts the verdict he cannot subsequently reconsider it, and disagreeing with the verdict refer the case to the High Court—4 C W N 683 The disagreement may be on questions of law as well as of fact—20 W R 1

It is not in every case of doubt nor in every case in which the Judge entertains a view different from that of the jury that a reference can be made under this section but the verdict of the jury must be manifestly wrong before such reference can be made—Emp v Swarnamoyee, 41 Cal 621 Where the jury misunderstands the law as explained by the Judge and delivers a wrong verdict the Judge should refer the case to the High Court under this section and not ask the jury to reconsider their verdict—28 Bom 412

Where the Judge in his direction to the jury himself expressed the opinion that the prosecution evidence was open to hostile criticism and the jury regarding the evidence with suspicion delivered a verdict of not guilty the Judge was not justified in referring the case to the High Court because there could not be said to have been a disagreement between the Judge and the jury but rather agreement—7 C W N 135

A reference should not be made where the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is merely on a technical point of law Thus where the Judge considered the offence to be under sec 366 I P C but left to the jury to decide whether the offence was under sec 363 or sec 361 I P C and the jury found that the offence was under sec 363 I P C, held that there was only a technical difference between the two sections, and the Judge should in view of his own summing up have accepted the verdict of the jury and should not have made a reference to the High Court—Emp v Ah Raza 28 O C 69 26 Cr L J 310

A reference can be made to the High Court only on the ground of disagreement between the Judge and the jury and on no other grounds. Where the jury returned a verdict of not guilty the mere fact that in a similar case upon similar evidence the High Court had convicted some other persons is no ground for referring the case to the High Court—6 Bom L R 599

935 Necessary for the ends of justice —This section leaves the referring of a case to the High Court entirely to the discretion of the Judge for it is only where he disagrees with the verdict of the jury so completely that he considers it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court that he should do so. This discretion should however always be exercised when the Judge thinks that the verdict is not supported by evidence. It is the only way in which the miscarriage of justice by a perverse verdict of a jury can be remedied by the High Court—13 Mad 343 Saroda Charan v Emp 41 C L J 370 26 Cr L J 1006. When the Judge points out to the jury the weak links in the prosecution and they do not consider them it is proper for the Judge to refer the case to the High Court because such a reference is really necessary for the ends of justice—9 C L J 432

A reference should be made under this section when the Judge is clearly of opinion that such a reference is necessary for the ends of justice—25 Cal 555 that is when the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is such a complete dissent as to lead the Judge to consider it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court—2 Bom 525 20 Bom 215. The mere fact that the Sessions Judge does not agree with the unanimous verdict of the jury does not make it obligatory on the Sessions Judge to make a reference to the High Court. Section 307 clearly gives to the Sessions Judge a discretion in the matter and it is only when he is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court that he shall so submit it. If he is not clearly of that opinion his failure to submit the case is not a subject for interference by the High Court—Eran Khan v Emperor 50 Cal 658. Where a Sessions Judge made a reference on the ground that the question involved was a matter of importance but he did not state that it was necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court or that he disagreed with the verdict of the jury the High Court sent back the case, directing the Judge to make a proper reference should he think it necessary for the ends of justice to do so—9 C W N 1xvi

It is no longer the law that before making a reference the Judge must be satisfied that the verdict is perverse. It is sufficient that he should clearly of opinion that a reference is necessary for the ends of justice — Ismail v Emp 23 C W N 747 Saroda Charan v Emp 41 C L J 320 26 Cr L J 1006

936 Submit the case — Whether whole case should be referred — It is not intended that when the Sessions Judge is not prepared to accept the verdict of the jury in its entirety but is prepared to accept it as regards some of the accused the whole case is to be referred to the High Court Where the Judge agrees with the jury in respect of a particular accused the Judge ought to convict or acquit him as the case may be and it is only with reference to those accused in respect of whom he declines to accept the verdict of the jury that he should make the reference—42 Cal 789 This is now expressly made clear by the present amendment But where the disagreement between the Judge and the jury is as to some of the charges it is necessary that the whole case should be referred When the accused was tried on several charges and the Sessions Judge accepted the verdict of the jury as to some and disagreed as to the other charges and referred the case to the High Court only as to these latter it was held that by this limited form of reference the High Court was precluded from considering the entire evidence on record and that the Sessions Judge should have referred the whole case leaving it to the High Court to consider the whole of the evidence that was placed before the jury — K E v Ananda Charan 21 C W N 435

Recording the grounds of his opinion — In referring the case under this section the Sessions Judge should state what material portions of the evidence he believes to be true and his reasons for arriving at his conclusions so as to enable the High Court to appreciate them and to give due weight to them—K E v Punit 3 P L T 413 6 Bom L R 519 Where the Judge merely said that the verdict was against the weight of evidence and expressed no other opinion in his reference it was held that he ought to have set out on what portions of the evidence or on what facts the accused should have been convicted—7 C W N 345 So also where the Sessions Judge merely stated in his reference that the verdict of the jury was erroneous and inconsistent and could not be accepted and that if the evidence had been believed all the accused should have been found guilty held that the reference was not a proper reference as it did not state the grounds of his opinion The reference should be so complete and self contained that it ought not to be necessary to refer to the order sheet—25 C W N 682 He should state with some fulness his view of the evidence and the credibility of the more important witnesses because the High Court has to attach more or less weight to the opinion of the Judge who saw and heard the witnesses—10 Bom L R 173

Reflections on jurors — The reference of the Sessions Judge should not contain any extra judicial observations e g any reflections on the conduct of the jurors which are not supported by any material on the record. The 'opinion' of the Sessions Judge is his opinion on the merits of the case and does not include his speculations as to the conduct of jurors. Such an imputation is not fair to the jurors—Emp v Dhananjay 51 Cal 347 (350 351) 38 C L J 384 Mamfru v Emp 51 Cal 418 (430) 38 C L J 397. It would be most unfortunate if persons of respectability called upon to discharge the responsible duty of jurors were exposed to the risk of aspersions upon their conduct. If the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jury it is open to him to do so and to refer the case to the High Court if he is clearly of opinion that such a course is necessary for the ends of justice but this does not require that he should make reflections upon the conduct of the jurors which are not supported by evidence on the record. Such an imputation is unfair to the jurors unfair to the Judge himself unfair to the accused and unfair to the High Court also—Mamfru v Emp 51 Cal 418 (429 431) 38 C L J 397.

Recording evidence —The Judge should state in his reference the evidence for the prosecution and for the defence the facts which in his opinion are proved upon the evidence recorded in the case and the conclusions to which these facts led him—6 Bom L R 599.

Stating the offence —In case of an acquittal by the jury the Sessions Judge should state in his reference what offence the accused has in his opinion committed and on what grounds he differs from the jury—10 Bom L R 173 3 Cal 623 25 C W N 682.

If Judge refuses to refer —Where a jury convicted the accused against the opinion and advice of the Sessions Judge and the latter declined to refer the case to the High Court under this section it was held on appeal by the accused that the High Court had no power to interfere however wrong or absurd the verdict might have been in as much as there was no misdirection by the Sessions Judge and as there was evidence against the accused which was open to the jury to believe—14 Mad 36 4 M L T 483.

Notice to accused —Where the Judge differed from the verdict of the jury and made a reference under this section the High Court before proceeding with the case gave notice to the accused as in appeal to bring forward any objections to the Sessions Judge's recommendations—19 W R 38.

937 Opinion of the jury —The opinion of the jury in subsec (3) means nothing more than the verdict of the jury it does not mean the reasons on which the verdict is founded—36 Cal 629 Emp v Tarapada 18 C W N 615 Emp v Dhananjay 51 Cal 347 (352) 38 C L J 384, 3 P L T 413 29 Mad 91. What the Judge has to record in his reference is the conclusion (i.e. verdict) of the jury and not the reasons on which that conclusion is based And the circumstance that no such reason has been ascertained does not warrant the High Court to decline to go into the evidence and arrive at its own judgment as to the guilt or innocence of the accused—29 Mad 91 But the Judge should do well to take the reasons of the jury for the view taken by them, especially when there is some inconsistency in their verdict—36 Cal 629, 6 P. L. J. 264 Even where the jury are unanimous in their verdict, the Judge should ask for specific findings on the particular facts on which he himself relies This would enable the High Court to understand the particular grounds on which the jury proceeded, and it will then only be necessary to consider the propriety of those grounds—2 Weir 388 Where in a trial by jury the case depends entirely on circumstantial evidence, and the jurors are divided in opinion, the Judge ought, if he intends to make a reference to the High Court under this section, to ascertain from the jurors the reasons for their opinion—1 P. L. T. 657, K. E. v. Punt, 3 P. L. T. 413.

938. When High Court will interfere —The High Court will exercise its discretionary powers with great caution and care The mere fact that upon a consideration of all the evidence before the Sessions Court the High Court would have arrived at a conclusion different from that arrived at by the jury, would not justify the High Court in interfering with their unanimous verdict—Emp v Chirkua 2 A. L. J. 475 Emp v Nriha Gopal, 38 C. L. J. 1 Emp v Panna Lal, 46 All 265 (267) Emp v Ali Hyder, 4 P. L. T. 425 The High Court upon a reference under this section is reluctant to interfere with the unanimous verdict of a jury and if that verdict is honest and not unreasonable and can upon the evidence be supported, the High Court will accept the verdict even though it may not wholly agree therewith—K. E. v. Pramathanath, 30 C. L. J. 503. Emp v Premananda, 52 Cal 987 29 C. W. N. 738; 42 C. L. J. 247; Emp v Panna Lal, 46 All 265 (268) The High Court which has not the opportunity to see the witnesses must act with great caution on a reference under this section, and therefore it will not ordinarily interfere with the unanimous verdict of the jury, which has been accepted by the Judge with regard to some of the accused—Emp. v Akbar, 51 Cal 271 (277) If the High Court is to interfere in every case of doubt, or in every case in which the evidence would have warranted a different verdict, then the real trial by jury would be at an end and the verdict of the jury would have no more weight than the opinions of assessors—Q. v Sham Bagdi, 20 W. R. 73

The High Court will not exercise its vast discretionary powers vested under this section in setting aside the unanimous verdict of a jury, unless it is perverse or patently wrong or may have been induced by an error of the Judge—Emp v Dhunum, 9 Cal 53; Rig v Khanderav, 1 Bom. 10 (13). Emp v Panna Lal, 46 All 265 (267); 22 A. The answer must depend upon the circumstances of each case But the trend of judicial opinion has been in favour of preference of the unanimous verdict of the jury If the verdict is not unanimous, the weight to be attached to it is necessarily diminished but if the verdict is unanimous, the High Court should not interfere with it unless it is clearly wrong—Emp v Dhananjay, 51 Cal 347 (353) Emp v Jamalddi, 51 Cal 160 (165) 28 C W N 536 25 Cr L J 1000 Although the High Court has very full powers under Section 307 to reopen all matters in connection with the verdict of the jury it does not follow that the High Court should feel justified in using those powers to the full If the verdict of the jury is unanimous and is neither perverse nor clearly and manifestly wrong the High Court should not reopen the matter ab initio and proceed to try it de novo For, if the case is reopened ab initio, it is difficult to see what useful function is performed by a jury—Emp v Panna Lal, 46 All 265 (267) 22 A L J 162 25 Cr L J 981 The High Court will not interfere upon any mere preponderance of evidence unless it is satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the verdict is so distinctly against the evidence that it may be termed a perverse verdict—2 Weir 388, 22 C W N 811 Emp v Mofizul 29 C W N 842 26 Cr L J 1298, or unless it were established that the jury were wholly miscarried in their conclusion upon the case—Q v Ram Churn 20 W R 33 or unless the guilt of the accused is proved beyond reasonable doubt—22 C W N 1028 The High Court will not disturb the unanimous verdict of acquittal in a case where there is a substantial gap in the chain of evidence—K E v Sukhu Bewa 38 C L J 155 In dealing with an unanimous verdict of acquittal the High Court will have to consider whether the jury were entirely unreasonable in giving the benefit of doubt to the accused, and whether it was impossible for the jury to arrive at any other reasonable conclusion than that the guilt of the accused had been brought home to them—Emp v Golam Kadir, 28 C W N 876 25 Cr L J 1284

Where in a criminal trial the jury found the accused not guilty, and on being asked by the Judge to give reasons for their verdict they said that they gave the benefit of doubt and could give no other reason held that from the mere fact that the jury were unable to give their reasons beyond saying that they gave the accused the benefit of doubt, it could not be said that the jury had no adequate reasons for returning a verdict of not guilty, and that the verdict was wrong, and the High Court would not interfere with the verdict. Even trained intellects often find it difficult to formulate and put before the Court the reasons for an opinion which they hold or which they wish to propound—Emp v Nishi Kantu, 41 C L J. 35 26 Cr L J 805 A I R 1925 Cal 525

939 Power of High Court.—In case of a reference under this section the High Court is to give due weight not only to the opinion of the jury but to that of the Judge as well—Emp v Neamatulla, 17 C W N. 1077, 6 P. L. J. 264, 3 P. L. T 413, 41 Cal 754, 29 Cal 128, 15 Cal 269. But although the High Court is bound in dealing with a reference under this section to give due weight to the opinions of the Judge and the jury, still it is not bound in any way by these opinions, and the question whether the decision in the case is to be for acquittal or for conviction is entirely open to the High Court and left open to it to decide after consideration of the evidence and the opinions of the Judge and the jury—In re Nanni Audumbani, 45 M L J 406 25 Cr L J 145, 11 C W N 715, 15 Bom 452, 36 Cal 629 9 C L J 432. When once a reference is made to the High Court, the language of the Code does not justify any undue preference being given to the opinion of the jury over that of the Judge. The High Court has to weigh both the opinions and consider the entire evidence on the record just as it would consider in any other criminal matter coming before it for decision—K E v Ramoharan, 27 O C 29 11 O L J. 210 25 Cr L J 785. The whole case is open to the High Court when hearing a reference, and in dealing with the reference the High Court exercises all the powers which it exercises on appeal—Emperor v. Shankar Balkrishna, 47 Bom 31 (32).

The High Court cannot consider any question on which the Judge and the jury are agreed—41 Cal 662. So also, the High Court cannot consider any question on which the Judge had accepted the verdict of the jury, although he did not agree with them—Emperor v. Profulla, 50 Cal 41. Although the High Court can consider the entire evidence, still it should not ignore the verdict of the jury on a question of fact. Unless there is an astounding reason for it, the verdict of the jury on a question of fact will not be set aside. The mere fact that another view of the evidence might be taken is not enough—K. E v Punil Chaitan, 3 P L T 413.

Power to convict for offence not charged—Ordinarily the High Court cannot convict the accused for any offence with which he was not charged—41 Cal 662. But the combined effect of this section read with sec 238 is that the High Court may, in dealing with a case coming before it under this section, convict an accused for a minor offence, although he was not charged with such offence—22 Cal 1006. And a Sessions Judge accepting the jury's finding on the graver charges can make a reference to the High Court with the object of having some of the accused convicted on minor charges—Emp. v Hari, 37 C L J 34 But where in a case of offence under sec 147 I P C the common object assigned in the charge as framed to support the case has not been sustained the High Court on a reference under sec 307 of this Code cannot invent another common object in order to support the conviction—Emp v Akbar, 51 Cal 271 (275)

939A An appeal from High Court —A High Court in dealing with a reference under this section is not acting in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction but only as a Court of reference in a criminal matter—29 Cal 286, and therefore no appeal lies from its own judgment passed under this section—Ratanlal 691

Trial when ends —When a case is referred to under this section the trial cannot be deemed to be concluded until the High Court either convicts or acquits the prisoner—9 All 420

G—Retrial of Accused after Discharge of Jury.

308 Whenever the jury is discharged, the accused shall be detained in custody or on bail (as the case may be), and shall be tried by another jury unless the Judge considers that he should not be re tried, in which case the Judge shall make an entry to that effect on the charge, and such entry shall operate as an acquittal

940 If a jury is discharged in the course of a trial for misconduct the Judge should hold a fresh trial before another jury newly empanelled—Rahim Sheshh v Emperor 50 Cal 872 (cited under sec 282)

This section does not affect the construction of sec 403 An accused who is re tried under this section is not tried again within the meaning of sec 403 but is being tried on the original indictment and on his original plea of not guilty Sec 403 therefore does not bar the retrial held under this section—Emp v Normal 41 Cal 1072

H—Conclusion of Trial in Cases tried with Assessors.

309 (1) When in a case tried with the aid of assessors, the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply (if any) are concluded, the Court may sum up the evidence for the prosecution and defence and shall then require each of the assessors to state his opinion orally on all the charges on which the accused

Delivery of opinions

has been tried, and shall record such opinion, and for that purpose may ask the assessors such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their opinions are. All such questions and the answers to them shall be recorded

(3) The Judge shall then give judgment, but in doing so shall not be bound to conform to the opinions of the assessors.

Judgment

(3) If the accused is convicted, the Judge shall, unless he proceeds in accordance with the provisions of Section 562, pass sentence on him according to law.

Change —This section has been amended by sec. 82 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The following changes have been made —(1) The italicised words have been newly added in sub section (1). This amendment assimilates the procedure by which assessors give their opinion to that adopted for ascertaining the verdict of the jury, namely by question and answer —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). (2) The italicised words have been added in subsection (3). This amendment is merely verbal, and is the same as that made in sec. 306 (2).

941. Summing up —The object of summing-up the evidence is to enable the Sessions Judge, in long and intricate cases, to place the evidence in an intelligible form, so as to assist the assessors in arriving at a reasonable conclusion, and not to give the Judge an opportunity of expressing his opinion in emphatic terms on every single matter put in evidence—9 Cal 875. In summing up the evidence to the assessors, the Judge should not, as he may do in charging the jury, express any opinion upon any question of facts arising in the case—24 Mad 523, 22 Cal 805. He should not obtrude on the assessors his own opinion on the worthlessness or other wise of the evidence, because the assessors might become embarrassed in coming to an independent opinion of their own in the face of the very decided opinion expressed by him—9 Cal 875. But a discussion and statement of points by a Judge with the assessors with the object of getting the best assistance for the proper adjudication of the case are not improper, as the real object of appointing assessors is to assist the Court—15 W. R. 25. In a case of rioting where the dispute arises over the possession of a piece of land and the Crown admits the possession of the accused, and the accused themselves urge the plea of private defence, it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to explain to the assessors the legal aspect of the plea put forward by the accused, and to direct their attention to it by putting specific questions to them on the point—Sunder Bahsh v. Emp., 3 P. L. J. 653 19 Cr. L. J. 983.

Record of summing up —The Sessions Judge should not ask the pleader for the prosecution to record his summing up to the assessors. If the Judge himself is incapable of recording the heads of the summing up, he should avail himself of the services of some Court Officer or direct it to be done by some independent person—9 Cal 875.

942. Opinions of assessors —A trial is altogether bad if the assessors are not asked and are apparently not allowed to give their opinions in the case—40 Cal 163. If a Sessions Judge decides a case without inviting the opinions of the assessors, he virtually holds the trial without the aid of assessors, and his finding or sentence will be without jurisdiction—22 W. R. 34, 24 Mad 523 (535). Even if he considers the evidence untrustworthy or unsatisfactory or inconsistent, he is bound to consult the opinions of the assessors, otherwise he acts without jurisdiction—10 All, 414. Where in a Sessions trial the accused first pleaded not guilty, but in the course of her examination after the completion of the prosecution evidence, she pleaded guilty, and thereupon the Judge without taking the opinions of the assessors found her guilty and sentenced her, held that it was the duty of the Judge to proceed with the trial as provided by this section and hear the defence and then take the opinions of the assessors—7 Bom L. R. 731. Where a trial was held for two offences, one with jury and the other with the jurors as assessors, and with regard to the latter offence the Judge convicted the accused without taking the opinions of the jurors as assessors, the conviction was held to be bad—2 Weir 334.

'The opinions of the assessors should be recorded separately. It is not, in the Court's opinion, sufficient that this record should contain a mere verdict of guilty or not guilty, or proven or not proven. What the Court requires is not only the result arrived at by each assessor sitting on a Sessions trial, but if possible, the reasons by which each assessor arrived at the result—that is, the grounds of his opinion. While avoiding prolixity, a Sessions Judge should be careful to be intelligible and precise in recording such opinions'—Cal G. R. & C. O., p. 26.

The opinions of all the assessors should be taken. Where the Judge took the opinions of two only of the assessors, the trial was illegal and not merely irregular—26 Mad 398. The opinion of each assessor is to be recorded in his own words—Fatu Santal v K E, 6 P. L. J. 147. Each assessor should be required to state his opinion individually. The Judge should not receive the joint opinion of all the assessors, delivered through one of them—9 Cal 875, 1887 P. R. 41.

Where the accused is being tried on several charges, the assessors shall be required to give their opinions on each of the charges—22 W. R. 34. This is now made clear by the present amendment.

The assessors are to give their opinions orally, and not in writing, or in the form of a judgment—39 Cal 119.

Consultation between assessors —There is no provision in this Code authorizing a Judge to allow or forbidding him to allow consultation between the assessors aiding him in trying a case. Though a Judge may allow one assessor to consult his co-assessors before giving his opinion yet a refusal to allow such a course does not amount to any irregularity and the Judge is entitled to have before him each assessor's individual and independent opinion—2 L. W. 933

Grounds of opinion —It is very desirable that the assessors should be invited and encouraged by Judges to state briefly the grounds of their opinions as well as the result—2 Bom. L. R. 322 2 Bom. L. R. 373. Assessors are appointed to aid the Judge in the trial and to give their opinions. When the opinion formed by the Judge differs from the opinions formed by the assessors he should always ascertain the grounds of the assessors' opinions—3 W. R. 6 3 W. R. 21 1905 P. R. 48

When opinion may be dispensed with —When there is absolutely no evidence to show that the offence has been committed by the accused the Judge can abstain from taking the opinions of the assessors—2 Weir 388 See sec. 289. But the Judge cannot do so simply because he considers the evidence unsatisfactory or untrustworthy—10 All. 414. When the case is withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor with the consent of the Court an acquittal should be recorded without taking the opinions of the assessors or whatever may be their opinions—Ratanlal 307

Reconsidering opinion —After once summing up the case to the assessors and after taking their opinions the Judge has no power to reopen the matter and press upon the attention of the assessors a part of the accused's confession in order to induce them to change their opinions—1886 A. W. N. 22

Taking fresh evidence after opinion —When the opinions of the assessors have been taken the trial is at an end except for the purpose of giving judgment. The Judge has no legal authority to reopen a trial or recall witnesses and cause fresh evidence to be summoned and take a second and third opinion from the assessors—1888 P. R. 29 15 All. 136. Where after the assessors had given their opinions and had been discharged the Judge sitting alone took some further evidence in the case before writing judgment the trial was held to be illegal and was set aside—43 All. 25. It is the Judge together with the assessors that constitutes the Court and not the Judge sitting alone and all evidence must be recorded by the Judge in the presence of the assessors—Ibid. In a trial for murder in which the soundness of the accused's mind was at issue the Judge after taking the opinions of the assessors reserved judgment and had a private interview with the Civil Surgeon as to the state of mind of the accused. It was held that the procedure was extremely illegal. Instead of discussing with the Civil Surgeon out of Court the Judge ought to have examined him as a witness in the presence of the assessors, and the accused ought to have been given an opportunity of cross examining him—1889 A. W. N. 181.

943. Questions to assessors —Prior to the present amendment, the section did not expressly authorise the Judge to put any questions to the assessors, but it was laid down in some cases that if there was anything obscure in their opinions it was open to the Judge to put to them such questions as were necessary to elucidate or supplement their opinions—40 Cal. 163, 41 Cal. 350 This is now expressly provided by the present section as amended. But the questions can be asked only after the delivery of the opinion and not before, and for no other purpose except to clear up any obscurity in the verdict. The Judge cannot put questions to the assessors by way of cross examination—40 Cal. 163, 41 Cal. 350.

944. Judgment —In passing judgment the Judge is not bound to conform to the opinions of the assessors. Although the assessors no doubt assist the Judge and regard must be paid to their opinions, 24 Mad. 523, still it is the Judge who has to decide the case on the facts as well as the law, and he is not bound by the assessors' opinions—Emp v Shanker, 14 Bom L R 710. But the Judge cannot convict the accused for an offence in respect of which the opinions of the assessors were not taken. Thus, the accused was charged with and tried for abetment of murder. The opinion of the assessors was that he was not guilty of the offence charged. The Sessions Judge accepted the opinion, but convicted the accused of causing evidence of murder to disappear under sec 201 I P C. Held that it was imperative on the Judge to have taken the opinions of the assessors on the charge relating to sec 201 I P C. The conviction and sentence must be set aside—Emp v Appayya, 25 Bom L R 1318.

The Judge should form his opinion on the evidence at the trial, and not merely upon the views of the committing Magistrate—22 Cal. 805.

The judgment must be recorded. But failure to record judgment does not invalidate the trial, but is only an irregularity curable by sec 537—2 Weir 397.

The judgment must contain all the particulars specified in sec 367, even though the trial is held with the aid of jurors as assessors. A reference to the heads of the charges to the jury is not sufficient—Ratanlal 426.

The judgment must be recorded by the Judge who held the trial. Where after the assessors had given their opinions, the Judge left the district without recording his judgment, and his successor, after considering the evidence recorded at the trial, convicted and sentenced the accused, the conviction was set aside and a retrial ordered—21 W R 47.

Cancellation of trial.—The accused were committed to the Sessions on a certain charge. At the commencement of the trial, two more charg were added. The trial then proceeded up to the point where the assessors' opinions were taken. The Judge reserved judgment but in writing it he was of opinion that one of the charges was improperly added and he therefore cancelled the trial and held a fresh trial. It was held that the second trial was invalid because the trial Judge had no authority to cancel or set aside the trial which had been originally held and the assessors' opinions having been recorded he had no option but to give his judgment in accordance with this section—Emp v Nathu 17 Bom L R 1074

I—Procedure in Case of Previous Conviction

310 In the case of a trial by a jury or with the aid of assessors, when the accused is charged with an offence and further charged that he is by reason of a previous conviction liable to enhanced punishment or to punishment of a different kind for such subsequent offence, the procedure prescribed by the foregoing provisions of this Chapter shall be modified as follows, namely—

- (a) Such further charge shall not be read out in Court and the accused shall not be asked to plead thereto, nor shall the same be referred to by the prosecution, or any evidence adduced thereon, unless and until—
 - (i) he has been convicted of the subsequent offence, or
 - (ii) the jury have delivered their verdict, or the opinions of the assessors have been recorded on the charge of the subsequent offence
- (b) In the case of a trial held with the aid of assessors the Court may, in its discretion, proceed or refrain from proceeding with the trial of the accused on the charge of the previous conviction

Change—The whole section has been redrafted by the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The old section stood as follows—

310 In the case of a trial by jury or with the aid of assessors where the accused is charged with an offence committed after previous conviction for any offence the procedure laid down in sections 271, 286, 305, 306 and 309 shall be modified as follows

- (a) The part of the charge stating the previous conviction shall not be read out in Court nor shall the accused be asked whether he has been previously convicted as alleged in the charge, unless and until he has either pleaded guilty to, or been convicted of the subsequent offence

(b) If he pleads guilty to, or is convicted of, the subsequent offence, he shall then be asked whether he has been previously convicted as alleged in the charge

(c) If he answers that he has been so previously convicted, the Judge may proceed to pass sentence on him accordingly, but, if he denies that he has been so previously convicted, or refuses to or does not, answer such question, the jury or the Court and the assessors (as the case may be) shall then hear evidence concerning such previous conviction, and in such case (where the trial is by jury), it shall not be necessary to swear the jurors again "

It should be noted that clause (b) of the present section is entirely new. This clause has been added in order to avoid the inconvenience which may at present arise in cases tried by assessors whose opinion is not binding on the Judge. Under the amendment in any trial held with the aid of assessors the Court is given a discretion to proceed or refrain from proceeding with the trial of the accused on the charge of the previous conviction—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

945 Scope and object of section.—This section applies to trials before a Court of Session and not to trials before a Magistrate—50 Cal 367. The law as to the taking of evidence of previous conviction in a trial before a Magistrate has been enacted in the new section 255A.

The object of this section in prohibiting the proof of previous conviction to be put in until the accused is convicted, is to prevent the accused from being prejudiced at the trial—Maung E Gyi v Emp, 1 Rang 520. Therefore, where in the course of a trial a witness was allowed to say that he had heard that the accused was an old offender the verdict was set aside, because the improper statement of the witness might have influenced the verdict of the jury—1890 A W N. 12. Where the charge in regard to the previous convictions and the portion of the statement of the accused before the committing Magistrate admitting such previous convictions were read to the assessors before the conclusion of the trial for the substantive offence, the trial was vitiated—Teka Ahir v King Emp, 5 P L. J 706. A Judge's direction to the jury to consider proof of previous conviction as evidence regarding the character of the prisoner amounts to a misdirection—5 Cal 768. But where no failure of justice was caused i.e. where the accused was not prejudiced (e.g. in a prima facie case theft), the High Court refused to interfere in a case in which the

was called upon to plead simultaneously to a charge of theft and previous conviction—13 C L R 110

946 Previous conviction—The previous conviction referred to in this section must be a conviction within British India. A conviction outside British India (e g in Berar) does not fall within the purview of this section and cannot be taken into account for the purpose of affecting the punishment on a second conviction in British India. But it is not absolutely improper however to take such conviction into consideration—7 C P L R 24

The charge alleging the previous conviction need not show the amount of the former punishment—4 M H C R App 11

When previous conviction can be proved—It is most essential that the rules laid down in this section should be followed with precision and regularity and close attention—1890 A W N 12 and proof of previous conviction should be put in only after the trial is concluded—3 W R 38 1886 A W N 47 The jury ought to be informed that the accused is charged with previous conviction only after their verdict is taken and never before—2 Weir 393 And the record should invariably show that no reference to previous conviction has been made until the subsequent offence has been found proved against the accused—12 C L R 555

How to prove—If the accused admits that he had been previously convicted the Judge is justified under this section in passing sentence upon such admission—28 Cal 689 1916 M W N 327 especially when the Magistrate passes a sentence which is legal even without proof of the previous conviction—1916 M W N 327 But if he does not plead to the charge of previous conviction it cannot be proved by an extract from the record of previous conviction without proof of identity—2 Weir 393 15 W R 53 See also notes under section 511

tion, evidence of the previous conviction may be given at the trial for the subsequent offence if the fact of the previous conviction is relevant under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act 1872

In a trial of offences under secs 395 and 407 J P C the evidence of previous conviction is not permissible under sec 54 of the Evidence Act no evidence having been previously offered of the accused's good character. Nor does sec 6 or 14 of the Evidence Act justify the admission of such evidence—Teka Akir v A E 5 P L J 706

J—List of Jurors for High Court, and summoning, Jurors for that Court

312 The names of not more than four hundred persons shall at any one time be entered in the special jurors list	312 The High Court may prescribe the number of persons whose names shall be entered at any one time in the special jurors' list, provided that no definite number of Europeans or of Americans or of Indians shall be so prescribed

This section has been redrafted by sec 18 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923. The reason of this amendment is thus stated:

The High Court special jury list should in our opinion be revised and it should no longer be limited to 200 Europeans and 200 non Europeans. It should include all who are qualified to whatever nationality they may be long. This revision will probably increase the proportion of non Europeans in the list. This proposal involves the amendment of section 312 of the Code.—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee Para 25

313 (1) The Clerk of the Crown shall before the first day of April in each year and subject to such rules as the High Court from time to time prescribes prepare—

Lists of common and special jurors

(a) a list of all persons liable to serve as common jurors, and

(b) a list of persons liable to serve as special jurors only

(2) Regard shall be had in the preparation of the latter list, to the property, character and education of the persons whose names are entered therein

(3) No person shall be entitled to have his name entered in the special jurors' list merely because he may have been entered in the special jurors' list for a previous year

(4) The Governor General in Council or the Local Commission in the case of the High Court at Fort William in P and in the case of other High Courts the Local G.

may exempt any salaried officer of Government from serving as a juror

(5) The Clerk of the Crown shall subject to such rules as aforesaid have full discretion to prepare the said list as seems to him to be proper and there shall be no appeal from or review of his decision

Discretion of officer preparing lists

The drawing up of the list of special jurors is entirely in the discretion of the Clerk of the Crown and the High Court will not interfere—Ind Jur (N S) 106

314 (1) Preliminary lists of persons liable to serve as common jurors and as special jurors respectively signed by the Clerk of the Crown shall be published once in the local official Gazette before the fifteenth day of April next after their preparation

Publication of lists preliminary and revised

(2) Revised lists of persons liable to serve as common jurors and special jurors respectively signed as aforesaid shall be published once in the local official Gazette before the first day of May next after their preparation

(3) Copies of the said lists shall be affixed to some conspicuous part of the Court house

315 (1) Out of the persons named in the revised lists aforesaid there shall be summoned for each session in the town which is the usual place of sitting of each High Court as many of those who are liable to serve on special or common juries respectively as the Clerk of the Crown considers necessary

Number of jurors to be summoned in presidency towns

(2) No person shall be so summoned more than once in six months unless the number cannot be made up without him

(3) If during the continuance of any sessions it appears that the number of persons so summoned is not sufficient such number as may be necessary of other persons liable to serve as aforesaid shall be summoned for such sessions

Supplementary summons

The words in the town High Court have been substituted for the words in each Presidency town A similar amendment has been made in sec 316 and in the third proviso of section 276

316 Whenever a High Court has given notice of its intention to hold sittings at any place outside the town which is the usual place of sitting of such High Court for the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction the Court of Session at such place shall subject to any direction which may be given by the High Court summon a sufficient number of jurors from its own list in the manner hereinafter prescribed for summoning jurors to the Court of Session

The italicised words have been substituted for the words Presidency town Similar amendment occurs in secs 276 and 315

317 (1) In addition to the persons so summoned as jurors the said Court of Session shall if it thinks needful after communication with the commanding officer cause to be summoned such number of commissioned and non commissioned officers in Her Majesty's Army resident within ten miles of its place of sitting as the Court considers to be necessary to make up the juries required for the trial of persons charged with offences before the High Court as aforesaid

(2) All officers so summoned shall be liable to serve on such juries notwithstanding anything contained in this Code but no such officer shall be summoned whom his Commanding Officer desires to have excused on the ground of urgent military duty or for any other special military reason

318 Any person summoned under S 315 S 316 or S 317 who without lawful excuse fails to attend as required by the summons or if he has attended departs without leave or the permission of the Judge or fails to attend the Court after being ordered to attend shall be guilty of a contempt and be liable by order of the Court such fine as he thinks fit, and in default of payment of such fine, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months in the civil jail until the fine is paid

Provided that the Court may in its discretion remit any fine or imprisonment so imposed

K —List of Jurors and Assessors for Court of Session, and summoning Jurors and Assessors for that Court

319 All male persons between the ages of twenty one and sixty shall except as next herein after mentioned, be liable to serve as jurors or assessors at any trial held within the district in which they reside, or, if the Local Government on consideration of local circumstances has fixed any smaller area in this behalf, within the area so fixed

Where the Sessions Judge of Kanara asked the High Court for special permission to hold his Court at Sirsi instead of at Karwar the High Court declined to permit it as no assessors could be called upon to attend at Sirsi which was outside the area fixed —Ratanlal 304

Exemptions 320 The following persons are exempt from liability to serve as jurors or assessors namely —

- (a) officers in civil employ superior in rank to a District Magistrate,
- (aa) members of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature and members of a Legislative Council constituted under the Government of India Act,
- (b) salaried Judges,
- (c) Commissioners and Collectors of Revenue or Customs
- (d) police officers and persons engaged in the Preventive Service in the Customs Department,
- (e) persons engaged in the collection of the revenue whom the Collector thinks fit to exempt on the ground of official duty,

- (f) persons actually officiating as priests or ministers of their respective religions ;
- (g) persons in Her Majesty's Army, except when, by the law in force for the time being they are specially made liable to serve as jurors or assessors
- (h) surgeons and others who openly and constantly practise the medical profession ,
- (i) legal practitioners (as defined by the Legal Practitioners Act 1879), in actual practice
- (j) persons employed in the Post Office and Telegraph Departments ,
- (k) persons exempted from personal appearance in Court under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882 Sections 640 and 641
- (l) other persons exempted by the Local Government from liability to serve as jurors or assessors

Change —Clause (aa) has been added by the Legislative Members Exemption Act XXIII of 1925 on the recommendation of the Reforms Inquiry Committee (contained in Para 91 of their Report) that members of the legislatures in India should be exempt from sitting as jurors or assessors in criminal trials—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India 1925 Part V p 180)

321 (r) The Sessions Judge, and the Collector of the district or such other officer as the Local Government appoints in this behalf shall prepare and make out in alphabetical order a list of persons liable to serve as jurors or assessors and qualified in the judgment of the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid to serve as such and not likely to be successfully objected to under Section 278, clauses (b) to (h), both inclusive

(2) The list shall contain the name, place of abode and quality of business of every such person and if the person is an European or an American the list shall mention the race to which he belongs

In selecting jurors and assessors the Sessions Judge should choose persons of an independent condition in life men of judgment and experience—23 W R 35 But persons of high social position e.g. a hereditary Raja should not be placed on the list or if put upon the list ought not to be summoned to serve as juror or assessor unless it were known that he would be willing to act as such—1897 A W N 167

Assessors can only be chosen from the list prepared under this section—Ratanlal 304

It is not open to the Sessions Judge or Deputy Commissioner to arbitrarily exclude from the list any person who is liable and qualified to serve as a juror or assessor and who is not likely to be successfully objected to under Sec 278 clis (b) to (h) both inclusive Special exemption from liability to serve can be granted only by the Local Government under cl (l) of Sec 320—C P Cr Cir Pt II No 33

322. Copies of such list shall be stuck up in the office of the Collector or other officer as aforesaid and in the court houses of the District Magistrate and of the District Court and extracts therefrom in some conspicuous place in the town or towns in or near which the persons named in the extract reside

323 To every such copy or extract shall be sub joined a notice stating that objections to the list will be heard and determined by the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid at the sessions court-house and at a time to be mentioned in the notice

324 (1) For the hearing of such objections the Sessions Judge shall sit with the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, and shall, at the time and place mentioned in the notice revise the list and hear the objections (if any) of persons interested in the amendment thereof, and shall strike out the name of any person not suitable in their judgment to serve as a juror, or as an assessor, or who may establish his right to any exemption from service given by S 320, and insert the name of any person omitted from the list whom they deem qualified for such service

(2) In the event of a difference of opinion between the Sessions Judge and the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, the name of the proposed juror or assessor shall be omitted from the list

(3) A copy of the revised list shall be signed by the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid and sent to the Court of Session

(4) Any order of the Sessions Judge and Collector or other officer as aforesaid in preparing and revising the list shall be final

(5) Any exemption not claimed under this section shall be deemed to be waived until the list is next revised

Annual revision of (6) The list so prepared and revised shall be again revised once in every year

(7) The list so revised shall be deemed a new list and shall be subject to all the rules hereinbefore contained as to the list originally prepared

All Collectors should exercise great care in the revision of the jurors list so as to include all qualified persons of intelligence who are liable to serve and to exclude unfit persons—Mad G O No 474 dated 16th March 1889 The list should show against each person the language or languages understood by him—C P Cr Cir Pt II No 33

325 In the case of any district for which the Local Government has declared that the trial of certain offences shall if the Judge so direct, be by special jury the Sessions Judge and the Collector of such district or other officer as aforesaid shall prepare in addition to the revised list hereinbefore prescribed a special list containing the names of such jurors as are borne on the revised list and are, in the opinion of such Sessions Judge and Collector or other Officer as aforesaid, by reason of their possessing superior qualifications in respect of property, character or education, fit persons to serve as special jurors Provided always that the inclusion of the name of any person in such special list shall not involve the removal of his name from the revised list, nor relieve him of his liability to serve as an ordinary juror in cases not tried by special jury

326. (1) The Sessions Judge shall ordinarily, seven days at least before the day which he may
 District Magistrate to summon jurors and assessors from time to time fix for holding the sessions, send a letter to the District Magistrate requesting him to summon as many persons named in the said revised list or the said special list as seem to the Sessions Judge to be needed for trials by jury and trials with the aid of assessors at the said sessions, the number to be summoned not being less than double the number required for any such trial, and including, where any accused person is an European or an American, as many Europeans or Americans as may be required for the purpose of choosing jurors or assessors for the trial

(2) The names of the persons to be summoned shall be drawn by lot in open Court, excluding those who have served within six months unless the number cannot be made up without them, and the names so drawn shall be specified in the said letter

(3) Where the accused requires and is entitled to be tried under the provisions of Section 275, there shall be chosen by lot, in the manner prescribed by or under Section 276, from the whole number of persons returned the jurors who are to constitute the jury until a jury containing the proper number of Europeans or Europeans and Americans or of Indians as the case may be, has been obtained

Provided that, in any case in which the proper number of Europeans or Americans cannot otherwise be obtained, the Court may, in its discretion for the purpose of constituting the jury, summon any person excluded from the list on the ground of his being exempted under Section 320

(4) Where under the proviso to subsection (3), the Court proposes to summon as a juror any person in His Majesty's Army, the provisions of Section 317 shall apply in like manner as they apply for the purpose of the summoning of military jurors for a trial under Section 316

The italicised words have been added by sec 19 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923

947 Sections 326 and 327 Cr P C contemplate as the ordinary or normal procedure that all assessors should be summoned on the first day on which a criminal Session commences however many trials it may be proposed to hold in the course of that Session—17 Cr L J 17 (All)

The duty of issuing a precept to the District Magistrate to summon jurors and assessors is imposed upon the Sessions Judge himself it can not be performed by a Subordinate Judge in temporary charge of the current duties of the Court of Session—Ratanlal 148

Where owing to the fact that only three jurors attended the Court, the Judge summoned jurors from among the residents of the town on the day fixed for the trial held that the jury as constituted was not a proper jury and the fact that the Judge instead of selecting jurors from among those who were summoned in accordance with the provisions of Sec 326, chose persons specially selected (a thing which the Legislature has taken special pains to render impossible) was a serious irregularity which could not be cured by Sec 537—7 C W N 188

327 The Court of Session may direct jurors or assessors to be summoned at other periods than the period specified in S 326 when the number of trials before the Court renders the attendance of one set of jurors or assessors for a whole session oppressive or whenever for other reasons such direction is found to be necessary

328 Every summons to a juror or assessor shall be in writing, and shall require his attendance as a juror or assessor as the case may be at a time and place to be therein specified

329 When any person summoned to serve as a juror or assessor is in service of Government or of a Railway Company, the Court to serve in which he is so summoned may excuse his attendance if it appears on the representation of the head of the office in which he is employed that he cannot serve as a juror or assessor, as the case may be, without inconvenience to the public

330 (1) The Court of Session may for reasonable cause excuse any juror or assessor, from attendance at any particular session

(2) The Court of Session may, if it shall think fit, at the conclusion of any trial by special jury, direct that the jurors who have served on such jury shall not be summoned to serve again as jurors for a period of twelve months

331 (1) At each session the said Court shall cause to be made a list of the names of those who have attended as jurors and assessors at such session

(2) Such list shall be kept with the list of the jurors and assessors as revised under Section 324

(3) A reference shall be made in the margin of the said revised list to each of the names which are mentioned in the list prepared under this section

332 (1) Any person summoned to attend as a juror or as an assessor who, without lawful excuse fails to attend as required by the summons or who having attended departs without having obtained the permission of the Court, or fails to attend after an adjournment of the Court after being ordered to attend shall be liable by order of the Court of Session to a fine not exceeding one hundred rupees

(2) Such fine shall be levied by the District Magistrate by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to such juror or assessor within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court making the order

(3) For good cause shown, the Court may remit or reduce any fine so imposed

(4) In default of recovery of the fine by attachment and sale such juror or assessor may, by order of the Court of Session be imprisoned in the civil jail for the term of fifteen days, unless such fine is paid before the end of the said term

948 Gentlemen on the jury list are under no obligation to notify their change of address to the Court before leaving their usual place of residence or to make any arrangement for the acceptance of notice and for the giving of information to the Court that he would be unable to attend. Therefore where summons was served by affixing the duplicate on the door of the dwelling house of a juror who at the time was living away from home and had no knowledge of such service held that he was not liable to fine for non attendance—6 C W N 887

The issue of summons to a juror by a registered letter is illegal and no fine can be imposed for non attendance in such a case—1 C W N cxvi

The order of a Sessions Judge under this section fining an assessor is not appealable—8 W R 83

L—Special Provisions for High Courts

333 At any stage of any trial before a High Court under this Code before the return of the verdict, the Advocate General may if he thinks fit inform the Court on behalf of Her Majesty that he will not further prosecute the defendant upon the charge, and thereupon all proceedings on such charge against the defendant shall be stayed and he shall be discharged of and from the same. But such discharge shall not amount to an acquittal unless the presiding Judge otherwise directs.

949 Nolle prosequi.—After the trial had commenced and the evidence partly gone into the Judge retired from the case under sec 550 as he was a share holder of the prosecuting Bank and the case was adjourned without the jury being discharged. The Chief Justice purporting to act under Cl 13 of the Charter Act appointed another Judge to preside at the trial of the accused. In answer to a question by the Judge the Standing Counsel intimated that he intended proceeding with the trial from the point where it had been left whereupon it was contended on behalf of the accused that the presiding Judge could not proceed with the trial as the previous Judge and the jury empanelled before him had still the session of the case. The Advocate General thereupon in order to get rid of the many difficulties arising out of the case entered a nolle prosequi, and the accused was discharged—C W N 481. In another Calcutta case the jury in the first trial returned an unanimous verdict of not guilty on the main charge of murder and were divided in the proportion of 5 to 4 on other counts. In the second trial on the remaining counts (ordered under S 308 Cr P C) the jury returned a verdict of not guilty by a majority of seven to two. The Judge disagreed with the verdict. The case was brought up again before the learned Judge to be dealt with.

to law" The Advocate General thereupon appeared and entered a nolle prosequi—Emp v Nirmal Kanta Roy, 41 Cal 1072

After the close of the case for the prosecution and just as the counsel for the defence was going to call his witnesses, the foreman of the jury suddenly informed the Court that they had come to an unanimous verdict as to the guilt of the accused and did not desire to hear anything more. Upon this, the Counsel for the accused said that it was a misbehaviour on the part of the jury to give a verdict without hearing the evidence for the defence, he therefore asked the Court to discharge the jury and to empanel a fresh jury. But the Advocate General entered a nolle prosequi—Emperor v Olu Muhammad 7 C W N xxxi

Discharge—Acquittal—In 8 C W N xlviii, the Judge ordered that the discharge amounted to an acquittal but in 41 Cal 1072 and 7 C W N xxxi the Judge simply discharged the accused but did not acquit him.

An order of discharge under this section is no bar to fresh proceedings being taken before a competent Magistrate upon complaint or upon a Police report or under section 190 (c) of this Code. In spite of an order of discharge passed under sec 333 the accused may be sent up for trial upon the same charges, and the order of discharge does not require to be set aside for initiation of fresh proceedings on the same charge—Emp v Sheskh Idoo, 40 Cal 71. But in a recent case the same High Court has held that an order of discharge passed on a nolle prosequi entered under this section puts an end to the indictment on which the prisoner is brought before the Court, and he cannot be subsequently proceeded against on the same charge—Emp v Jitendra Nath 52 Cal 590 26 Cr L J 1397 A I R 1925 Cal 902. It is curious that no reference was made in this case to the earlier case of 40 Cal 71.

334 For the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction

every High Court shall hold sittings on such days and at such convenient intervals as the Chief Justice of such Court from time to time appoints

335. (1) The High Court shall hold its sittings at the place at which it now holds them, or at such other place (if any) as the Governor-General in Council in the case of the High Court at Fort William, or the Local Government in the case of the other High Court, may direct.

(2) But it may, from time to time, in the case of the High Court at Fort William with the consent of the Governor-General in Council, and in all other cases with the consent of the Local Government, hold sittings at such other places within the local limits of its appellate jurisdiction as the High Court appoints

(3) Such officer as the Chief Justice directs shall give notice before-hand in the local official Gazette of all sittings intended to be held for the exercise of the original criminal jurisdiction of the High Court

336 (Repealed)

This section which dealt with the place of trial of European British subjects has been repealed by sec 20 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923

CHAPTER XXIV.

GENERAL PROVISIONS AS TO INQUIRIES AND TRIALS

337 (1) In the case of any offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session or High Court the District Magistrate a Presidency Magistrate any Magistrate of the first class inquiring into the offence or with the sanction of the District Magistrate any other Magistrate, may with the view of obtaining the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to the offence under inquiry, tender a pardon to such person on condition of his making a full and true disclosure of the	337 (1) In the case of any offence triable exclusively by the High Court or Court of Session or any offence punishable with imprisonment which may extend to ten years or any offence punishable under S 211 of the Indian Penal Code with imprisonment which may extend to seven years or any offence under any of the following Sections of the Indian Penal Code namely Ss 216A, 369, 401 435 and 477A, the District Magistrate, a Presidency Magistrate a Sub divisional Magistrate or any Magistrate of the first class may, at any whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relative to such offence, and to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof stage of the investigation or inquiry into, or the trial of, the offence, with a view to obtaining the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to the offence, tender a pardon to such person on condition of his making a full and true disclosure of the whole circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence and to every other person concerned, whether as principal or abettor, in the commission thereof

Provided that, where the offence is under inquiry or trial, no Magistrate of the first class other than the District Magistrate shall exercise the power hereby conferred unless he is the Magistrate making the inquiry or holding the trial and, where the offence is under investigation, no such Magistrate shall exercise the said power unless he is a Magistrate having jurisdiction in a place where the offence might be inquired into or tried and the sanction of the District Magistrate has been obtained to the exercise thereof

(4) Every Magistrate other than a Presidency Ma- (1A) Every Magistrate * * who tenders a pardon under

Magistrate, who tenders a pardon under this section, shall record his reasons for so doing and when any Magistrate has made such tender and examined the person to whom it has been made he shall not try the case himself although the offence which the accused appears to have committed may be triable by such Magistrate

(2) Every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the case subsection (1) shall record his reason for so doing, and shall, on application made by the accused, furnish him with a copy of such record

Provided that the accused shall pay for the same unless the Magistrate for some special reason thinks fit to furnish it free of cost

(2) Every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial if any

(2A) In every case where a person has accepted a tender of pardon and has been examined under sub section (2) the Magistrate before whom the proceedings are pending shall, if he is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty of an offence, commit him for trial to the Court of Session or High Court as the case may be.

(3) Such person, if not on bail, shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial by the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be.

(3) Such person unless he is already on bail shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial * *

Change —This section has been amended by section 86 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act (XVIII of 1923) The principal changes introduced are the following —

(a) The old section was restricted to offences triable by the High Court or the Court of Session the new section includes several other offences

(b) A change has been made as regards the Magistrates who can tender pardon The Magistrates who should be allowed to tender a pardon should in our opinion be Magistrates of the first class who are inquiring into the offence and any District Magistrate Presidency Magistrate Sub-divisional Magistrate or with the sanction of the District Magistrate a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction in any place where the offence might be inquired into or tried —Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

(c) The power to tender a pardon should be exercisable during an investigation as well as after a magisterial inquiry has begun —Ibid

(d) Subsection (4) of the section has been omitted The first part of that sub-section has now been re enacted as sub-section (1A) and the latter part has been omitted as unnecessary in view of the new sub-section (2A) See the Report of the Select Committee of 1916

950 Offences —The old section applied only to offences triable exclusively by the Court of Session—3 B H C R 59 73 Mad 61 10 Bom 190 1 Lah 102 7 P L T 125 72 Cr I J 676 These cases are now rendered obsolete by reason of the change made in this section

But where several offences are being inquired together the fact that some of the offences do not fall under this section will not debar the Magistrate from granting pardon in respect of the offences which fall under it All that the Section requires is that the offence in respect of which pardon is tendered must be an offence described herein—Hartmal v Crown 9 S L R 43 1915 P R 17 Ismail v Emp 26 Cr L J 1045 (Nag)

951 Pardon —When can be tendered —Under the old section a pardon could be tendered only in an inquiry (see the words offence under inquiry) but not during an investigation—Emp v Motilal Hirajal 46 Bom 61 But the Lahore High Court held that the word inquiry in the section included everything done by the Magistrate whether the case was eballed or not and therefore pardon could be tendered where the offence was only under investigation by the police—Sher Afuhan mad v Crown 3 Lah 431 This was also the view in Sind—Crown v Andal 5 S L R 174 This conflict of opinion has now been removed by the present amendment and under the present section it can be tendered at any stage of the investigation as well

All that this section requires is that there should be an investigation in progress regarding the offence If at the date of the pardon proceedings were going on against the accused for an offence mentioned in this section

the pardon is perfectly legal and the approver is a competent witness against the accused—Ismail Panju v Emp, 26 Cr L J 1115 (Nag) A pardon may be tendered to a person even after a charge has been framed against him—22 Cr L J 255 (Lah) A pardon can be tendered to an approver during the course of an inquiry even though the principal offender has absconded and the trial cannot therefore proceed In such a case the approver's statement will be recorded under Sec 512 of the Code—46 Bom 120

Who can grant pardon —See notes under Change above Where the offence is under investigation the Magistrate (other than the District Magistrate) tendering pardon must have jurisdiction over the offence A Magistrate of one district cannot tender pardon to a person implicated in an offence committed in another district and inquired into in the latter district The pardon so tendered is illegal and cannot be validated by the operation of Sec 529—20 All 40

Where the offence is under investigation the Magistrate can grant pardon only with the sanction of the District Magistrate This sanction should be a written sanction but an oral sanction though irregular would be valid—5 A L J 691

A Deputy Commissioner trying a case triable exclusively by the Sessions Court under the powers conferred by Sec 30 can offer a conditional pardon to an accused under this section—Pabon Singh v Emp 10 C W N 847

Power of Local Government —The Local Government has no power to offer a conditional pardon to an accused for the purpose of giving evidence against the other accused under this section—10 C W N 847 33 Cal 1353 But the Local Government as an executive authority has power to refrain from prosecution independently of this section—Emp v Har Prosad Bhargawa 45 All 226 (29) 21 A L J 42 This section is addressed to certain Courts of justice and has nothing to do with the powers or discretion of an executive authority such as the Local Government in the matter of instituting or refraining from instituting any prosecution The Local Government can grant pardon even though the case is not triable exclusively by the Court of Session or High Court It can examine an accomplice as a witness even though no formal tender of pardon has been granted to him Thus where the Government of C P having before it the case of a Subordinate Judge who was suspected of receiving bribes issued a notification to the effect that no prosecution would be instituted by the Government against any person who would come forward with evidence that he had paid or offered bribe to the accused (Sub Judge) and in consequence of the notification two men came forward and gave evidence against the Sub-Judge held that the evidence of two persons as witnesses was admissible on the principle of subsection of this section although no pardon was formally tendered to them under sec 337 and although the offence (sec 161 I P C) was not triable exclusively by a Court of Session or High Court—Emp v Har Prosad Bhargava 45 All 226

To whom pardon can be tendered —Pardon can be tendered to any person who is supposed to be directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to the offence. The word supposed must be taken as intended to exclude merely the case of a man who has actually been convicted of the crime and not the case of a man who though admitted to be a party to the crime is unconvicted therefore where pardon was tendered to a person who pleaded guilty but was not convicted it was held that the pardon was properly granted and that his evidence was admissible—7 All 160 Ratanlal 750

It is not necessary that the person to whom a pardon is tendered should himself be charged with an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session it is not even necessary that he should be an accused in the case all that is required by this section is that he should be supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to such offence with which another person is charged—Ashim v Emp 24 Cr L J 566 6 N L J 144

Pardon cannot be tendered to a person whose complicity in the crime is not admitted by himself such a person cannot be considered to be an approver and his evidence cannot be taken as that of an approver—Sant Ram v Emp 24 Cr L J 799

Condition of pardon —The only condition on which pardon can be tendered to an accused person is the one specified in this section. By the tender of pardon there should be no temptation offered to deviate from the truth. A tender of pardon on condition that the approver should testify to having been present at the scene of the offence and to have personal knowledge of the circumstances under which the offence was committed is illegal—Ratanlal 612

952 Effect of Pardon —A person who has been granted pardon under this section and who has fulfilled the conditions of pardon must be released and cannot be re-arrested in respect of the same offence or for any offence inseparably connected with it. Thus in a dacoity case an accused was tendered pardon under this section. He made a full statement implicating himself and others pointed out the place where he had a carbine and ammunition concealed gave them up to the Police and in all respects complied with the conditions of the pardon. At the close of the case he was released. He was then re-arrested and tried under section 20 of the Arms Act in respect of the possession of the carbine and ammunition which he had given up to the Police. Held that the possession of carbine and ammunition being an offence in connection with the matter of the dacoity and inseparable from his guilt as a dacoit his prosecution for such an offence, after he had fulfilled his condition of pardon in the dacoity case, was improper and must be set aside—Sham Sundar v Emp, 19 A L J 717

A pardon tendered to a person in respect of one offence is no bar to his trial and conviction for an entirely different offence—Emp v Sardara, 46 All 236 (240) 12 A L J 35 25 Cr L J 956 But it will bar his trial and conviction in respect of offences which are so closely connected with the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered that they may be said to be covered by the terms of the pardon—Q E v Ganga Charan 11 All 79

953 Sub-section (1A)—Recording reasons —Although sub-section (1A) requires the Magistrate, who tenders pardon to record his reasons for so doing still the recording of the reasons is not a condition precedent to the tender of pardon and its acceptance by the approver, and the pardon cannot be set aside merely because the reasons are not recorded—13 Cr L J 388 (All) When the facts which led up to the tender of pardon appear on the record the omission to state the reasons is not an illegality which vitiates the proceedings—36 Cal 629 Crown v Warjam, 5 Lab L J 408 nor even can it be a ground for excluding the approver's evidence as inadmissible—5 C L J 224

954 Sub-section (2) —Approver as witness —According to sub-section (2) the approver shall be examined as a witness in the case The expression in the case (see the old section) includes the preliminary inquiry, and does not refer to the trial alone—24 Mad 321 11 N L R 59 This is now made clear by the present amendment of this sub section

If the approver when examined as a witness in the committing Magistrate's Court did not comply with the conditions of pardon it was not necessary that he should be examined as a witness before the Court of Session—5 S L R 174

It is not compulsory to examine the approver in the Sessions Court if he has shown by his evidence in the Magistrate's Court that he is an untrustworthy witness—42 Cal 856

Where an approver when examined in the preliminary inquiry keeps back material evidence within his knowledge the Magistrate can withdraw the pardon, and the prosecution is not bound to put him forward as a witness in the sessions trial—24 Mad 321 A person who has not satisfied the conditions of pardon at the commitment, need not be examined at the trial in the Sessions Court the evidence given by him before the committing Magistrate can be used as evidence in proceedings taken against him—1907 U B R 4th Cr (Cr P C) 7 1905 P R 41 See notes under Sec 339

An approver cannot be examined as a witness unless and until has been discharged by a written order a mere promise of immunity from prosecution given by the Local Government does not amount to an order of discharge Unless he is formally discharged he does not cease to be an accused person and cannot be examined as a witness and he does not cease to be an accused person by reason of the mere fact that the police did not send him up for trial—Mahandu v Crown 1 Lah 10 (dissenting from 1904 P R 21)

955 Accused illegality pardoned —It is illegal for a Magistrate to convert an accused into a witness (approver) except when a pardon has been lawfully granted under Sec 337—1 Bom 610 Therefore where a Magistrate tenders pardon to one of the accused persons in a case not exclusively triable by the Court of Session and examines him as a witness the statement made by that accused is irrelevant and inadmissible even as confession of a co accused—2 All 260 10 Bom 190 Contra—25 Mad 61

956 Conviction based on approver's evidence —Though a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds on the uncorroborated testimony of an approver (Sec 133 Evidence Act) 7 All 160 5 W R 80 1 Mad 394 yet it is unsafe to convict a person upon such testimony—19 W R 68 20 W R 19 The evidence of an approver should not be believed without material corroboration and in order to see whether there is such a corroboration it is the duty of the Court to scrutinize and marshall out very carefully the proof relating thereto Where this duty has not been properly performed by the lower Court the High Court will interfere in revision and set aside the conviction—Mama v Emp 1911 P W R 3 12 Cr L J 35 A conviction is bad in law if the accused has been convicted on a retracted statement made by him under promise of pardon which so far from being corroborated by any other evidence whatsoever has been contradicted in important particulars by other prosecution evidence—1916 P W R 6 And the Judge in his charge to the jury should take care to point out that although a conviction based on the uncorroborated testimony of the approver is not illegal yet it is not the practice of the Court so to convict and should state also that the evidence of the approver was given on conditional pardon—10 W R 17 29 Cal 782 But when the Judge had warned the jury of the danger of convicting the accused on the uncorroborated testimony of the approver and the jury notwithstanding the Judge's remarks convicted the accused it was held that the conviction was valid in law and could not be questioned by the High Court—15 W R 37 6 B L R 108

As to the amount of corroboration necessary no hard and fast rule can be laid down it depends upon the nature of the crime on the extent of the complicity of the accused and the nature of the corroborative facts

—28 Cal 339 It is sufficient if the approver's evidence is corroborated in some of the leading circumstances of the story, so that the Court may be able to presume that he had told the truth as to the rest—11 W R 21. The evidence of the approver should be corroborated not only as to the circumstances of the case, but also as to the identity of the prisoner—3 B H C R 57 1 Bom 475, 10 Bom 319 and also in material particulars in respect to that person having committed the offence—21 W R 69, 18 C W N 550 The corroboration should be such as to support that portion of the approver's testimony which makes out that the prisoner was present at the scene of the offence and participated in the acts of commission—19 W R 16

957. Sub-section (2A)—Magistrate cannot try the case —Sub section (2A) lays down that the Magistrate tendering the pardon must commit the case to the Sessions and is not competent to try it himself Thus, where in a case of robbery, the Magistrate grants a conditional pardon to an approver and is satisfied that there is a prima facie case, he has no jurisdiction to dispose of the case himself but is bound under the provisions of this clause to commit the case to the sessions—Nagakin v Emp, 4 Bur L J 11 26 Cr L J 829 The Magistrate before whom the suspected person is brought face to face, and who attempts to induce him by promise of pardon to make a full and true disclosure, assumes to a certain extent the function of a police officer and identifies himself with the prosecution, and it is doubtless on that reason that it is considered proper to disqualify him from trying the case—Queen Empress v Batera, 1898 P R 3 A Deputy Commissioner trying a case under the special powers conferred by sec 30, does so as a Magistrate, and if he tenders pardon to one of the accused, he cannot try the case himself—Pabon Singh v Emp, 10 C W N 847, Kishar v Emp, 25 Cr L J 1341 (Nag)

This sub section debars only the Magistrate tendering the pardon from trying the case, but a District Magistrate sanctioning the tender of pardon to an approver is not precluded from trying the case—Akbar v Crown, 1919 P R 30

'Examined' —In 1898 P R 3 it was held that the examination referred to in the old sub section (4) referred to an examination made by the pardon-tendering Magistrate on the tender of the pardon and directly resulting from it, and not the examination made by any other Magistrate in the course of the trial But the examination referred to in the new sub-section (2A) is the examination made under sub-section (2) which speaks of an examination made in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence as well as the examination in the subsequent trial, if any

detained until the termination of the trial—8 L B R 357 and nothing can be done against an approver who has not complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made to him until after the case in the Court of Session has been finished then his trial should be commenced de novo—23 Bom 493 13 C P L R 123 See notes under sec. 339

The meaning of this sub section is that the approver shall not be set at large until the judicial proceedings pending against the accused person are finished It is immaterial for the purpose of this sub section whether the proceedings are finished by a Magisterial order of discharge (under sec 409) before trial or by a Judge's order of acquittal after trial In the case of the Magisterial discharge the sub section will be satisfied if the approver is detained in custody or is on bail until the order of discharge is made—37 Bom 146

338 At any time after commitment, but before judgment is passed, the Court to which the commitment is made may with the view of obtaining on the trial the evidence of any person supposed to have been directly or indirectly concerned in, or privy to any such offence tender, or order the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender, a pardon on the same condition to such person

Power to direct tender of pardon
959 Who can tender pardon —After the commitment of the case to the Sessions either the Court of Session can itself tender pardon or it can direct the Committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender pardon The Local Government cannot tender a pardon under this or the previous section but it can withdraw the prosecution under sec 494—33 Cal 1353 10 C W N 847

The Sessions Court can direct only the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender pardon but it cannot direct a Police Officer to do so—6 W R (Cr Let) 5

To whom pardon can be tendered —Pardon can be tendered under this section to an accused There is no ground for the suggestion that the words any person in this section do not include a person accused before the Sessions Judge—9 S L R 43 A pardon can be tendered to an accused person provided he is not convicted The words supposed offence in this section exclude those who have been actually convicted but a tender of pardon to a person who has pleaded guilty but has not been convicted is not prohibited by this section and the evidence of such person examined as a witness is admissible—7 All 160 Ratanlal 750

When pardon may be tendered —Pardon can be tendered at any time after commitment and before judgment is pronounced but it is extremely improper though not illegal to grant pardon at a late stage of the trial after the close of the prosecution and the defence and after the opinion of the assessors has been given though judgment has not yet been pronounced—1884 A W N 147

339 (1) Where a pardon has been tendered under S 337 or S 338, and the Public Prosecutor certifies that in his opinion any person who has accepted such tender has, either by wilfully concealing anything essential or by giving false evidence not complied with the condition on which the tender was made such person may be tried for the offence in respect of which the pardon was so tendered, or for any other offence of which he appears to have been guilty in connection with the same matter

Provided that such person shall not be tried jointly with any of the other accused, and that he shall be entitled to plead at such trial that he has complied with the conditions upon which such tender was made in which case it shall be for the prosecution to prove that such conditions have not been complied with

960 Certificate of Public Prosecutor — We would make a certificate by the Public Prosecutor as the basis of the prosecution of a person who has accepted a tender of pardon —Report of the Joint Committee (1922) Under the old law it was the trying Court which had the authority to determine whether the pardon had been forfeited so as to necessitate the trial of the approver—1889 P R 6 1904 P R 31 42 Cal 856 Emp v Kachri 7 N L R 65 Under the present law no such determination by the trying Court is necessary but the certificate of the Public Prosecutor is sufficient

The certificate of the Public Prosecutor is an essential requisite under this section and the absence of the certificate vitiates the trial of the approver—Ali v Crown 5 Lah 379 (381) 6 Cr L J 237 The certificate of the Public Prosecutor is the sole basis of the prosecution of an approver and therefore an approver cannot be prosecuted merely at the instance of a suggestion by the presiding Judge that he should be so dealt with—Emp v Maria Basappa 26 Bom L R 1740 26 Cr L J 469 Where there was no certificate of the Public Prosecutor at the time of the commitment of the approver to the Sessions but the certificate was subsequently filed in the Court of the Sessions Judge after he noticed the absence of the certificate and before the trial proceeded held that the proceedings before the committing Magistrate were merely irregular and not invalid and the trial was in order as the provisions of sec 330 as regards the requirement of the certificate were complied with before the trial began and especially as no objection had been taken either before the committing Magistrate or before the Sessions Court even after the point was brought prominently to notice—Nga Wa Gyi v Emp 3 Rang 55 4 Bur L J 23 A I R 195 Rang 219

96r. Forfeiture of pardon.—The approver will be said to have broken the conditions of pardon, if he wilfully conceals anything essential or gives false evidence—8 L B R 357, 30 Bom 6rr. If after accepting the tender of pardon the approver refuses to make any statement, saying that he knows nothing, his pardon will be revoked and he will be committed for trial—29 All. 24. The prosecution may proceed against the approver if he breaks the condition of his pardon by giving a false evidence under section 512 of the Code (in a case where the principal offender has absconded)—46 Bom 120. But the absconding of the approver before the conclusion of cross examination does not amount to a wilful concealment of facts—Maung Po v K E, 8 L B R 357. 17 Cr L J 391.

It is a matter of great importance that strictest faith should be kept with the approver and his mere failure to secure the conviction of his accomplices does not justify the withdrawal of pardon—1895 P R 15. But the approver will forfeit his pardon if he screens one of the offenders, although he helps to secure the conviction of the other offenders—Suraj Bhan v. Crown, 1918 P R 24. An approver should be allowed to go free if he makes a fair, full and true disclosure of all the circumstances within his knowledge relative to the commission of the crime. When the approver made such a full disclosure, and the whole of the evidence showed that the crimes were in all probability exactly as he said they were, and there was no ground for supposing that he had concealed the name of any person concerned in the crime or had concealed the part which he himself took in the crime, it was held that he had complied with the conditions of the pardon and the fact that there were slight inconsistencies upon immaterial points with a previous statement made by him would not justify a forfeiture of pardon—12 C I R 226. An approver who makes a full and true disclosure of facts both before the Committing Magistrate and the Sessions Court, but in the cross examination resiles from the statement^s made by him in his examination in chief, sufficiently fulfils the conditions of his pardon, and his pardon cannot be forfeited—30 Bom 611. Any trifling discrepancies elicited in cross examination do not justify the forfeiture of pardon—1902 P R 34. But where the approver gave true evidence regarding the offence before the committing Magistrate but resiled from that evidence before the Sessions Judge, held that he must be deemed to have forfeited his pardon—Local Government v Mulhu, 11 N L R 59.

No 'withdrawal' of pardon necessary. — The word forfeited has been substituted in the 1895 Code for the word 'withdrawn' occurring in the 1882 Code. Under the present Code no formal withdrawal of a pardon and no formal declaration that the pardon has been forfeited are necessary—42 Cal 856. 42 Cal 756. 39 All 305. 32 Mad 173. 30 Bom. 6. 1918 P R 24. 7 L B R. 1. 7 N L R 65. the forfeiture is incurfacto by the act of the approver—37 Cal 845 The substitution of the word 'forfeited' for 'withdrawn' indicates that a pardon cannot be withdrawn but can only be forfeited on the ground of the breach of the conditions Under the present law, the question is whether the accused has forfeited his pardon by some act of his own and not whether the Magistrate has validly withdrawn it—25 Bom 675 And no question can arise at all as to its validity, if the pardon has been withdrawn by an unauthorised Magistrate—Suraj Bhan v Crown, 1918 P R 24 Under the old law, the pardon remained in force until it was formally withdrawn, under the present law, the result of a failure to observe the conditions is that the approver may be put on his trial without any formal order of withdrawal or cancellation The act terminating the pardon was, under the old law, the withdrawal of pardon by the authority who granted it, under the present Act, it is the forfeiture by the approver—42 Cal 856

Therefore, where an approver was tendered pardon by the District Magistrate but in the Court of Session he did not fulfil the condition of pardon whereupon the Sessions Judge directed the commitment of the approver held that the order of the Sessions Judge was not illegal It was not necessary that the pardon granted by the District Magistrate must be withdrawn by the Magistrate before the approver could be committed to the Sessions The Sessions Judge was competent to order the approver to be committed to the Court of Session when he was of opinion that the approver had forfeited the pardon—Crown v Kadu 1904 P R 31 Chanan v Crown 1 Lah 218

962 Trial of the Approver —Commitment or trial along with other accused illegal —Sub section (3) of section 337 lays down that the approver shall be detained in custody until the termination of the trial of the other accused persons by the Court of Session The effect of that section read with this section is that action can be taken against an approver who has forfeited his pardon after the trial of the other accused in the Court of Session is finished, and then his trial should be commenced de novo If he has forfeited his pardon during the preliminary inquiry he cannot be committed to the Sessions along with the other accused—23 Bom 493 4 Bom L R 825, 24 Mad 321 31 Mad 272, 1907 U B R 4th Qr 7 5 N L R 134 (Contra—42 Cal 856, 20 All 529, 29 All 24, 5 A L J 691 25 Bom 675 in these cases it is held that the commitment of the approver along with the other accused is not illegal)

We consider that it is desirable to lay down some procedure with regard to the plea contemplated by the proviso to sub-section (1) of section 339. The Bill contains no indication as to when this plea is to be raised and what is to be the effect of it and difficulties of procedure may obviously arise with reference to sections 275 271 (2) and 272. We therefore propose a new section to be added after section 339 which lays down that when a person to whom a pardon is tendered is being tried under that section he shall at the commencement of the proceedings, be asked whether he raises the plea that he has complied with the conditions on which the pardon was granted and if he does so plead the Court shall record a finding on the point and if it finds that the conditions have been complied with shall acquit the accused. — Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

It is the duty of the Sessions Judge to ask the approver whether he relies on the pardon granted to him and to come to a finding whether the pardon has been forfeited. It is not enough that the committing Magistrate has found that the pardon has been forfeited—16 Cr I J 234 (Mad). The approver should be asked not simply whether he has fulfilled the conditions on which the pardon was granted but he should be asked whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made. The terms of this section should be clearly explained to him and it should be made clear to him that he can plead the pardon as a bar to his trial—Ali v Crown 5 Lah 379 (381) 26 Cr L J 237 instituted under this Code in any such Court, may of right be defended by a pleader.

(2) Any person against whom proceedings are instituted in any such Court under Section 107, Chapter X, Chapter XI, Chapter XII or Chapter XXXVI or under section 552, may offer himself as a witness in such proceedings.

Change—This section has been re drafted by sec 89 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

"The expression person accused in section 340 may be read as referring only to persons accused of any offence. it is proposed to make it clear that any person against whom proceedings are instituted under this Code is entitled to be defended by a pleader. It is also laid down that persons against whom proceedings under Chapters X, XI, XII XXXVI, or under Section 552 of the Code are pending do not labour under the ordinary disability of an accused person to be sworn, and that they may be examined as witnesses in such proceedings"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

966. Persons against whom proceedings are instituted under Chapters VIII and X are in the position of 'accused' persons within the meaning of this section and are entitled to be defended by a pleader—23 Cal. 493; Crown v Ida, 1900 P R 15, 25 All 375, 4 C W N 797, Nakhi Lal v. Q E, 27 Cal 656. The Legislature has now added the words 'person against whom proceedings are instituted' which would expressly include persons proceeded against under Chapters VIII and X, and it will no longer be necessary to enter into the much vexed question as to whether such persons are in the position of accused persons.

Where an inquiry under sec 476 is started against any person, the Court should hear the pleader appearing on behalf of such person—Ram Nihore v K E, 8 A L J 237.

But a person against whom no process has been issued is neither an 'accused' person nor a 'person against whom any proceedings have been instituted', such a person has no right to attend, much less to be represented by a pleader, during a preliminary inquiry held under section 202 before issue of process. If he chooses to attend he may do so like any other member of the public, but he has no locus standi as a party—Shakh Chand v Mahomed Hanif, 4 N L R 81 8 Cr L J. 20, 33 Cal. 880

Private Pleader—Under sec 4 (r) an accused person cannot claim as of right to be represented by a private person, but he may be represented by such person with the permission of the Court But in permitting or disallowing the appearance of private persons as pleaders, a Magistrate should exercise a discretion in each case—2 Weir 400, and a general order that no person will be allowed to practise as a private pleader is illegal—In re Nagasami 31 M L T 458 An order excluding any particular individual in any particular case would be within the discretion of the Magistrate and therefore legal—2 Weir 401

968 Mukhtars —Under the Code of 1872 the accused had a right to appear and be heard by a Mukhtar—6 Bom 14 But under sec 4 (r) of the Code of 1898 (before it was amended in 1923) a Mukhtar could appear only with the permission of the Court—4 S L R 193 But still it was held to be improper for a Magistrate to shut up the defence of the accused merely because he was represented by a Mukhtar and a general order prohibiting Mukhtars to appear in Sessions Courts was held to be illegal—Ishan Chandra v Emp 38 Cal 488 Magistrates should not by the indiscriminate exclusion of persons who are invested by law a distinct professional status in criminal trials deprive parties of legal aid which they can frequently obtain at a moderate cost —Col G R & C O p 20 38 Cal 488

Under section 4 clause (r) as now amended by Act XXXV of 1923 Mukhtars have now been placed on the same footing as pleaders and are entitled as of right to appear in all criminal Courts without requiring any special permission

969 Subsection (2) —A person against whom proceedings are instituted under sec 488 may give evidence on his own behalf as such person is not an accused person and the proceedings are not criminal proceedings —Nur Mahomed v Bismella 16 Cal 781 Bachai v Jamuna 25 Cr L J 1091 (Cal) A person against whom proceedings are started under Chapter V may be examined on oath as a witness—Hironanda v Emp 9 C W N 983

341 If the accused though not insane, cannot be made to understand the proceedings, the Court may proceed with the inquiry or trial, and in the case of a Court other than a High Court, if such inquiry results in a commitment or if such trial results in a conviction the proceedings shall be forwarded to the High Court with a report of the circumstances of the case, and the High Court shall pass thereon such order as it thinks fit

Procedure where accused does not understand proceedings

970 Scope of Section —This section is intended to provide for cases where the accused is unable to understand the proceedings through deafness, or dumbness or through ignorance of the language of the country and the want of an interpreter In such cases the High Court will order the detention of the prisoner during His Majesty's pleasure—5 Bom 62, Ratanlal 151

This section is inapplicable where the inability to understand the proceedings arises from unsoundness of mind. In such cases the procedure prescribed by Chapter XXXIV should be followed—5 Bom 262 Ratanlal 832. But if after inquiry under that Chapter, it appears that the prisoner is not a lunatic the Magistrate should proceed under this section—In re Adala 11 M L T 24 13 Cr L J 24.

If however the accused is able to understand the proceedings though he is deaf and dumb the provisions of this section do not apply and the case should be dealt with as in the ordinary way—19 W R 37 3 Bom L R 371 1900 A W N 47 4 Bur L T 150 22 W R 35 22 W R 72. In modern practice want of speech and hearing does not imply want of capacity either in the understanding or in memory but only a difficulty in the means of communicating knowledge. The law in India certainly does not expressly provide for a sane deaf mute being exempted from punishment. If his mind is sound his inability to hear and speak will not excuse him—A L v Nga San Myin 4 Bur L T 150. If it be shown that the deaf and dumb person had sufficient intelligence to understand the character of his criminal act he is liable to punishment—40 Bom 598.

971 Duty of Magistrate—Where the accused is deaf and dumb some means of communication with him should be adopted. The Magistrate should try and get into communication with him with the assistance of his relations. The Magistrate should make enquiry as to whether he has any friends or relatives who are accustomed to communicate with him and the manner in which he is communicated with in the ordinary affairs of his life—8 Bom I R 849 1910 U B R 1st Qr 57 Ratanlal 696 2 Weir 402. Where the Magistrate omitted to attempt to communicate with the deaf and dumb accused the conviction was set aside as the accused was certainly prejudiced by such omission—6 M H C R App 7.

Magistrate cannot pass sentence—The Magistrate can convict the accused and upon conviction can refer the case to the High Court but cannot pass sentence—2 Weir 403 U B R (1910) 1st Qr 57. In 1889 P R 37 where the Magistrate passed sentence upon the accused the High Court set aside the sentence and passed such order as it thought proper.

Summary Trial—Where the accused is a deaf mute it is highly inconvenient to conduct the trial summarily even though the offence is summarily triable—8 Bom I R 849.

972 Reference to High Court—Reference can be made under this section to the High Court, if the inquiry or trial results in a committal or conviction—Ratanlal 180. The Judge should proceed to the end of the trial and then refer the case if a conviction follows—2 Weir 403 and should not refer the case in the midst of the trial before any conviction.

or committal takes place—4 Bom L R 825 Where during the course of a trial it appeared that the accused was a deaf and dumb person and the Magistrate therefore referred the case to the High Court expressing his opinion that the prisoner was guilty it was held that the Magistrate ought to have proceeded to the end of the trial by convicting the accused and the mere expression of opinion that the accused was guilty did not amount to a conviction The High Court returned the case to the Magistrate and directed him to proceed with the trial and if the same resulted in a conviction to forward the proceedings again to the High Court—Ratanlal 271 Ratanlal 836

In making a reference under this section the Magistrate should state his view of the conduct of the accused and must take some evidence regarding the previous history and habits of the accused—Ratanlal 696

Orders which High Court may pass—The High Court may treat the proceedings before the Lower Court as amounting to a sufficient trial and pass sentence upon the accused according to the facts established in the case—27 W R 35 or may give him a further opportunity of being heard in the matter of the charge—22 W R 35 22 W R 72 or may direct a re trial if the Magistrate's trial was defective—8 Bom J R 849 The Court may upon a consideration of the tender age of the accused direct him to be made over to his father to be looked after by him—7 N W P H C R 131 The High Court may in a proper case discharge the accused with an admonition—27 W R 35 1885 P R 35 4 Bom L R 296 The High Court may if it is of opinion that the accused was by reason of unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing that what he did was contrary to law and that no benefit will be likely to result to the accused by his being tried by the Court of Session direct him to be kept in jail pending the order of the Local Government—27 Cal 368 The High Court may also treat the accused as a lunatic and report the matter to the Local Government under Sec 471 of the Code—1901 P R 13

In serious cases it is the practice of the High Court to refer the matter to the Local Government In the case of a minor offence the High Court itself can pass an appropriate sentence or discharge the accused—1 Lah 260 Where a deaf and dumb accused was found guilty of attempt to commit suicide and at the trial he made certain signs indicating his guilt the High Court affirmed his conviction and sentenced the accused to one day's simple imprisonment—Emp v Alashaba, 25 Bom L R 43

342 (1) For the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Court may, at any stage of any inquiry or trial, without previously warning the accused, put such questions to him as the Court considers necessary, and shall, for the purpose aforesaid, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence

(2) The accused shall not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer such questions, or by giving false answers to them but the Court and the jury (if any) may draw such inference from such refusal or answers as it thinks just

(3) The answers given by the accused may be taken into consideration in such inquiry or trial, and put in evidence for or against him in any other inquiry into, or trial for, any other offence which such answers may tend to show he has committed

(4) No oath shall be administered to the accused

973 Scope—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether this section applies to trials of summons cases. According to the Bombay, Calcutta Patna and Lahore High Courts and the Sind J C Court the Magistrate is bound in a summons case to examine the accused under this section—Emp v Fernandez 45 Bom 672 22 Bom L R 1040 22 Cr L J 17 Emp v Golabjan 46 Bom, 441 23 Bom L R 1203 23 Cr L J 45 Gul ar v Emp 49 Cal 1075 Gulam Rasul v King Emp, 6 P L J 174 2 P I T 390 22 Cr L J 427 Raghu v Emp, 1 P I T 241 21 Cr L J 705 Parameshwar v Emp 3 P L T 347 23 Cr L J 440 Muhammad Baksh v Emp 4 Lah L J 230 23 Cr L J 154 Emp v Nahu 26 Cr L J 1554 (Sind). But according to the Madras High Court this section does not apply to trials in summons cases. The use of the expression "before the accused is called on for his defence" in section 342 itself as well as in section 256 relating to trials in warrant cases and in section 289 relating to trials in sessions cases and the absence of such an expression in the sections relating to trials in summons cases under chapter XX of the Code show that the provisions of section 342 are not intended to apply to summons cases—Ponnuasamy v Ramasamy 46 Mad 758 (F B)

This section applies to summary trials of warrant cases and the accused must be examined in such trial—Mahomed Hussain v Emp, 41 Cal 743 Paraneswar Lal v Emp 3 P L T 347 According to the Sind Court this section applies to summary trials of summons cases, and examination of the accused in such a trial is imperative—Emp v Nahu 26 Cr L J 1554 (Sind). See Note 867 under sec 263. But according to the Madras High Court this section does not apply to summary trials of summons cases as there is no distinction between the summary trials of summons cases and the ordinary trials of summons cases—Dharma Singh v King Emp, 46 Mad 766 (F B)

This section does not apply to an inquiry under section 117 because the person called upon to give security is not in the position of an accused person within the meaning of section 342. Therefore the omission to examine the person called upon to give security is a mere irregularity curable under section 537 and not an illegality vitiating the conviction—Benode Behari v Emp 50 Cal 985. So also a person proceeded against under sec 488 is not looked upon as an accused person and omission to examine him does not vitiate the proceedings—Bachai v Jamuna 75 Cr L J 1091 (Cal)

Where an accused is examined by the Court before any evidence for the prosecution has been taken and before the commencement of the preliminary inquiry his examination cannot be said to be under sec 342 because at that stage there was no evidence for the prosecution recorded against him and no circumstances which he could be called upon to explain. The statement must be taken to have been recorded under sec 164—Balaaula v Crown 6 Lah 183 26 P L R 331 26 Cr L J 1238

974 Object and mode of examination.—The real object of the examination is to enable a Judge to ascertain from time to time from a prisoner particularly if he is undefended what explanation he may desire to offer regarding any fact stated by a witness or after the close of the case how he can meet what the Judge may consider to be damning evidence against him—6 Cal 96 36 C I J 417 20 Cr L J 12 (Nag). And in order that the accused may explain all the facts appearing in evidence against him it is necessary that his attention should be directed to all the vital parts of the evidence against him specially if he is an ignorant person who cannot be expected to know or understand what particular parts of the evidence are or are likely to be considered by the Court to be against him—Tani v Emp 20 Cr L J 12 (Nag). The Court should not only point out to the accused the circumstances appearing in the evidence which requires explanation but it must out of fairness to the accused exercise that power in such a way that the accused may know what points in the opinion of the Court require explanation and failure or refusal on the part of the accused to give the explanation will entitle the Court to draw an inference against him—K E v Alimuddin 52 Cal 522 29 C W N 231 26 Cr L J 631

The object of this section is to enable the accused to explain each and every circumstance appearing in evidence against him this cannot be done by such a general question as 'what have you to say?' or 'What is defence?' The specific point or points which weigh against the accused must be mentioned for if this is not done he cannot be expected to be able to explain those points—Maung Hman v. K

There is a difference in the wording of the first and the second portions of subsection (1) of sec 342, the former being discretionary ("may put questions") and the latter mandatory ("shall question him") If the Court has put questions to the accused under the first part of subsection (1) it would be a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the second portion if the Court gives to the accused an opportunity, by putting to him one general question (e g "Have you got to say anything else?"), to explain the circumstances appearing in the case against him, and in this connection the examination of the accused under the first portion of this subsection may be usefully looked into—Md Nasiruddin v Emp 4 Pat 459 61 L T 588 26 Cr L J 954

The witness however did not add materially to the evidence which had been already given for the prosecution and which the accused had had an opportunity of explaining. The accused was not again examined after the examination of the witness. Held that although the witness for the prosecution ought to have been examined before the examination of the accused under the imperative provisions of section 342, still as the accused in this particular case was not prejudiced by the error in procedure the High Court applying the provisions of section 537 did not set aside the trial but warned the Magistrate to be careful to avoid the error in future—Emperor v Bechu Chande 45 All 124

The examination of the accused after all the prosecution witnesses as well as the witnesses for the defence are examined vitiates the conviction and sentence and the trial must be taken up again from the close of the prosecution case, and the accused must be examined before he has entered upon his defence—Surendra v Isamuddi 51 Cal 933 (934) 26 Cr L J 761 Ram Charan v Emp 7 P L T 759 26 Cr L J 1289

Although the Magistrate may under the first part of sub-section (1) examine an accused person before the case for the prosecution is concluded still this would not absolve the Magistrate from the obligation imposed upon him by the latter part of sub-section (1) to examine the accused after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence—2 P L T 540 2 P L T 455 Bhokari v Emp 5 P L T 445 Harud Ali v Sri Aissen 29 C W N 118

The accused must be examined after the examination cross examination and re-examination of all the prosecution witnesses are over. It is not enough that the accused has been examined after the examination in chief of the prosecution witnesses and before their cross-examination and re-examination. Until the prosecution witnesses have been cross examined and re-examined it cannot be said what the exact case that the accused will have to meet is and if he is forced to disclose his defence before cross examination it might very well be that the prosecution will witnesses would be on their guard and the value of the cross examination destroyed. The provision in Sec 342 is for the benefit of the accused and to enable him to obtain the full benefit of the section it is clear that he must be examined after the cross examination and re examination of the prosecution witnesses are over—Ustajit Singh v A E 6 P L J 644 • P L T 520 22 Cr L J 697 Kashi Pramanik v Disu Paramanik 27 C W \ 28 Jummon v Emp 50 Cal 308 50 Cal 223 Gulzari Lal v Emp 49 Cal 1075 45 Bom 672 Emp v Nathu Kasturchand 27 Bom L R 105 26 Cr L J 690 Pramatha Nath Mukerjee v Emp, 50 Cal 518 (Servant Defamation Case) Dibakanta v Gour Gopal 50 Cal 939 Local Govt v Maria 20 N L R 174 Therefore where after seven of the prosecution witnesses were examined in chief the Magistrate examined the accused and then two more prosecution witnesses were examined and all the nine prosecution witnesses were cross examined held that there was no substantial compliance with the provisions of this section—Sailendra v A E 38 C L J 175 Krish nappa v Emp 25 Cr L J 713 (Nag) Md Sadiq v Emp 26 P L R 533 26 Cr L J 1370 Where the prosecution witnesses are first examined in-chief then the accused are examined under this section and afterwards the prosecution witnesses are cross examined the procedure is illegal and the trial is vitiated—38 C L J 181 Such non compliance with the provisions of this section is not an irregularity curable by sec 537—Ibid 50 Cal 273 But the Madras High Court holds that the words after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined mean when the prosecution has finished calling evidence and do not include the cross examination and re examination of the prosecution witnesses. Therefore where the accused does not cross examine the prosecution witnesses after their examination in chief and then the Magistrate examines the accused and frames a charge and afterwards at a later stage the accused cross examines the prosecution witnesses and then the prosecution re examines them held that the omission to further examine the accused after the cross examination and re examination of the prosecution witnesses does not vitiate the trial—Varisai Roather v King Emperor 46 Mad 449 F B (over ruling Modura Muthu Iannian In re 45 Mad 80) This is also the view of the Rangoon High Court—Aga Hla v Emp 3 Rang 139 76 Cr L J 1336 (following 46 Mad 449) This seems to be the view of the Allahabad High Court also See Lmp v Bechu Chaube 45 All 124 where the witnesses for the prosecution were examined in-chief and on the same day the accused were questioned under sec 342 and afterwards the witnesses for the prosecution were cross examined, the High Court made no objection to this procedure. The Oudh Chief Court also holds that if the accused has been examined before the framing of the charge the omission to re examine him after the frame of charge and the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses does not vitiate the trial, if the cross examination of the prosecution witnesses adds nothing on which it is necessary to further examine the accused—Emp v Brij Behari, 28 O C 130 12 O L J. 182 2 O W N 327 26 Cr L J 1301, Khuman v Emp, 2 O W. N 378 26 Cr L J 1374

Where the accused has been examined after the prosecution has finished its evidence under sec 252, but a new and material matter in support of the prosecution case is elicited in cross examination or re-examination of the prosecution witnesses under sec 256, it is desirable that the accused should again be questioned on the case under sec 342 and asked generally to explain the circumstances. So also if the accused has already been examined before the framing of the charge, and the prosecution calls fresh evidence after the formulation of the charge, the accused must again be examined under sec 342 on the termination of that evidence—Larisa Rowther v A G, 40 Mad 449 at p 457 (F B)

The accused was examined by the Magistrate under this section before the charge was framed and after all the witnesses for the prosecution had been examined and cross examined at considerable length. After the charge was framed under sec 254 most of the witnesses were recalled by the accused (under sec 256) for a further lengthy cross examination, at the termination of which the Magistrate proceeded to record the defence evidence without questioning the accused again. Held that although it may often be desirable that the accused should be again examined after the further cross examination of the prosecution witnesses recalled after the framing of the charge, in order to ascertain whether the accused wishes to give any additional explanation still in the present case, since the witnesses for the prosecution had been once cross examined at great length, it would be unnecessary for the Court to examine the accused again after the further cross examination, when no fresh circumstances were discovered after the recall and re cross examination of the prosecution witnesses—Byrne v Crown, 4 Lah 61, In re Thachroth, 45 M L J 279, Fazl Karim v Emp, 26 Cr L J 1418 (Lah)

After the examination in chief of the prosecution witnesses the accused was examined and afterwards the prosecution witnesses were cross examined and re examined and the accused was asked as to whether he had anything to say and then he filed a written statement, held that the omission to examine the accused again after the cross-examination and re examination of the prosecution witnesses did not vitiate the trial, since the accused was asked whether he had anything to say and the filing of the written statement relieved the Magistrate of the necessity of re-examining him orally in reference to the matters elicited in the cross examination and re examination of the prosecution witnesses—Mohiuddin v Emp, 4 Pat 488 6 P L R 154 26 Cr L J 811 A I R 1925 Pat 414

Where an accused person has been examined under this section after the close of the prosecution case and the Court examines a person under sec 540 (whether such person be a prosecution witness or another person) not as regards the occurrence of the offence but as to some matter in relation to the title of the lands in respect of which the offence (rioting) was committed it is not necessary to examine the accused again—Prajog Gope v King Emp 3 Pat 1015 (1017) 5 P L T 571 25 Cr L J 1276 Fa l Karim v Emp 26 Cr L J 1418 (Lah)

978 Who can examine —Only the Court conducting the trial or inquiry can examine the accused Neither the complainant nor the counsel for the prosecution nor any other person is authorised to put questions to the accused—10 Mad 121

979 Improper questions —(1) It is objectionable to put questions to the accused in regard to the matter which he had previously mentioned in his confession and which he had repudiated as untrue—7 C W N 345 The Magistrate cannot put him any question with the object of trapping him into some sort of admission after he has recoiled from his confession—Umar Din v Emp 3 Lah 129

(2) It is improper to examine an accused about a confession which is inadmissible, and if he is examined about such a confession the questions and the answers to them are not admissible in evidence against the accused—4 L B R 244

(3) The object of examination under this section is to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him, but where the prosecution has adduced no evidence implicating the accused in the offence with which he is charged the Magistrate has no right to put questions to the accused or to invite him to make a statement and the answers given by him to such questions are inadmissible in evidence against him—39 Mad 770 Dev Dayal v Crown 4 Lah 55 9 Mad 274

(4) It is improper to ask questions to supplement the case for the prosecution or to fill up gaps in the evidence for the prosecution See Note 974 under heading Object of Examination

(5) It is improper to put questions to the accused to ascertain what witnesses the accused intends to call at the trial or what evidence they will give or what his defence is—14 All 74 13 All 345 27 Mad 238

(6) It is improper for a Magistrate to put questions to the accused before his conviction in the present trial about his previous convictions either with a view to take them into consideration for the purpose of conviction or with a view to dispense with formal evidence as to the alleged previous convictions and as to the identity of the accused in the even

981 Sub Section (2) —Refusal to answer questions —The practice of refusing to answer questions in the Sessions Court and of putting written statements is a very pernicious one The refusal to answer questions may be attended with great risk to the accused for the Court may draw from such refusal an inference adverse to the accused—19 C W N 1043

False answers —The immunity from prosecution for perjury is limited to answers to questions put by the Court during the examination The accused cannot escape liability if he makes false statements in an affidavit presented to the Court along with an application for transfer of the case—Alh Ibrahim v Emp 26 Cr L J 1369 (Lab) Ghulam Md v Crown 3 Lah 46 Emp v Mir Qadir Hakeem 6 Lah 34 C P I R 158 But the contrary view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court in Emp v Bindeshari 28 All 331 In re Barkat 11 All 200 and Emp v Matar 33 All 163 where it has been held that the accused cannot be prosecuted in respect of false or defamatory statements contained in an affidavit presented with an application for transfer. See also 12 Mad 451 where an accused who made a false statement in his petition of appeal was held to be protected by this section since a criminal appeal was a continuation of the criminal case and the appellant would get all the privileges of an accused person.

In a recent case the Allahabad High Court has held however that the immunity conferred by sec 342 (2) does not extend to a written statement filed by the accused and he can be prosecuted in respect of a defamatory matter contained in such statement—Champa v Pirbhu Lal 24 A L J 329 2 Cr L J 253. The same view is taken by the Bombay High Court—Bai Shaila v Umrao 50 Bom 162 (F B) 28 Bom L R 1.

982 Sub section (3) When an accused person has been examined under this section the answers given by him may be taken into consideration at the trial and proper inferences drawn therefrom and even in a subsequent trial for any other offence they may be used for or against him—6 P L J 41. The meaning of the expression may be taken into consideration is not very clear but it means at all events that the statements made by the accused persons are not to have the force of sworn evidence—1900 A W N 109 and a conviction based on such a confession alone cannot be maintained—15 Bom 66.

In cases of circumstantial evidence the accused's statement must be taken into consideration—Emp v Abdul 49 Bom 878 27 Bom L R 1373.

983 Sub section (4) —No oath can be administered to an accused person and therefore he cannot be examined as a witness. Thus where several accused are tried jointly one accused cannot be sworn and therefore cannot be examined as a witness against his other co-accused till he is convicted or discharged—1 Bom 610 2 All 260 45 Cal 720, 10 Bom 190 1906 P R 9 1902 P R 12 U B R (1918) 4th Qr 115. But if they are tried separately the prohibition would not apply and one accused can be examined on oath as a witness against his co-accused—45 Cal 720 22 C W N 405 Banu Singh v Emp 33 Cal 1353 (1357) Emp v Durant 13 Bom 213 10 All 426 1906 U B R (Evidence) 6 Joseph v Emp, 3 Rang 11 3 Bur L J 265. The reason is that where the trial is separate the accused in one case is examined in the other case not as an accused person but as a witness and therefore he can be sworn otherwise no man while he stood charged with a criminal offence could possibly be examined as a witness in any criminal trial whatsoever. This is not the intention of the Legislature—20 All 426.

Where in a joint trial of several accused two of them pleaded guilty and were convicted but the Judge postponed their sentence and then on oath as witnesses against the other accused it was held by "

J that as soon as they were convicted (though not sentenced) they ceased to be accused persons and could be examined on oath as witnesses but Fulton J held that the conviction did not put an end to their trial and therefore they were still accused persons and their examination on oath was illegal—3 Bom L R 437

The provision in sub section (4) that no oath can be administered to the accused has reference only to the statement made by him in answers to questions put to him by the Court under this section. It has no reference to any other act of the accused and therefore the accused can make an affidavit on oath in support of an application for transfer of the case under section 526—Ghulam Md v Emp 3 Lah 46 23 Cr L J 399

984 Accused—The word accused in this section means a person over whom the Magistrate or other Court is exercising jurisdiction therefore a person who has been discharged by the Police without being brought before a Magistrate is not an accused person and he can give evidence on oath in a trial of his accomplices—16 Bom 661 4 L B R 36

The term accused means a person under trial a person called upon to show cause under Section 133 is not an accused person within the meaning of this section and oath can be administered to him—2 C L J 149 The parties to a proceeding under sec 145 are not accused persons and they can be examined on oath—Md Ayub v Sarfara 26 Cr L J 70 (Oudh) So also a person against whom the Public Prosecutor has withdrawn the case can be administered oath and examined as a witness—18 Bom L R 266 An informer is not an accused person and this section does not prevent oath being administered to him—1887 P R 38

343 Except as provided in Sections 337 and 338, no influence, by means of any promise or other
 No influence to be used to induce disclosures wise, shall be used to an accused person to induce him to disclose or withhold any matter within his knowledge

985 See Sec 24 of the Evidence Act and compare section 163 &c Where the case against an accused is withdrawn and he is examined as a witness any inducement offered to such person should be deemed as offered to him as a witness and not as an accused and does not make his evidence inadmissible though the credit to be attached to such witness is diminished—18 Bom L R 266 For instances of inducement threat and promise see notes under section 163

344 (1) If from the absence of a witness or any other reasonable cause it becomes necessary or advisable to postpone the commencement of, or adjourn any inquiry or trial

the Court may if it thinks fit by order in writing stating the reasons therefor from time to time postpone or adjourn the same on such terms as it thinks fit for such time as it considers reasonable and may by a warrant remand the accused if in custody

Provided that no Magistrate shall remand an accused person to custody under this section for a term exceeding fifteen days at a time

(2) Every order made under this section by a Court other than a High Court shall be in writing signed by the presiding Judge or Magistrate

Explanation —If sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by a remand this is a reasonable cause for a remand

986 Scope of section —This section relates to proceedings in inquiries or trials and has nothing to do with Police investigations and it contemplates a remand to jail not to Police custody—3 Bom 32 The custody mentioned in this section is quite different from the custody under section 167 The power of remand under sec 167 is given to detain prisoners in custody while the police make the investigation and in a proper case to commence the inquiry But the custody under sec 344 is intended for undertrial prisoners—In re Nagendra Nath 51 Cal 40 (412)

This section is applicable to cases even before the issue of process under sec 204 and the Magistrate is entitled under sec 344 if there be a reasonable cause for doing so to postpone any inquiry or trial and to postpone the issue of process even if the case be a warrant case—Ram Saran v Nikhad Narain 6 P L T 477 76 Cr L J 1179

957 Adjournment —A Court of Justice has inherent jurisdiction to stay proceedings in a case pending before it and this section empowers a Criminal Court to adjourn an inquiry or trial for any reasonable cause—1916 P W R 4 Adjournments should not be made except upon strong and reasonable grounds It is most inexpedient for a sessions trial to be adjourned The trial before a Court of Session should proceed and be dealt with continuously from its inception to its finish Occasions may arise when it is necessary to grant adjournments but such adjournments should be granted only on the strongest possible ground and for the shortest possible period—10 A L J 473 The evidence of witnesses should invariably be recorded as soon as possible after their attendance If from unavoidable causes an adjournment is indispensable there should be unnecessary delay. Witnesses remaining over from day to-day should, as a rule, be examined at the first sitting of the Court on the following day, and every effort should be made to minimise the inconvenience to which they may be put. After the examination of witnesses has commenced, the trial or preliminary inquiry should be proceeded with until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, those for the prosecution being first examined and if any witness be detained for a longer period than two days the Magistrate should be careful to record the reason for each detention in the order sheet of the case.—Cal G R & C O p 30 Where a trial is adjourned to a particular date it is not competent for the Magistrate to accelerate the date of hearing against the wishes of the accused or his pleader. The trial should not be concluded nor judgment pronounced without waiting till that date.—1898 P R 14

It is discretionary with the Court to adjourn the inquiry or trial under this section. But this discretion is to be exercised only in cases which come really within the terms of this section. It should be exercised carefully and according to rule, and not arbitrarily. If this power is used improperly and arbitrarily the High Court will interfere under section 15 of the Charter Act.—17 W R 55 Ram Saran v Nikhad, 6 P L T 477 26 Cr L J 1179 When a Magistrate is of opinion that a party before him is unnecessarily wasting time and protracting the case, he has a discretion to refuse an adjournment for bringing fresh witnesses.—Ah Sher v Mir Md, 26 Cr L J 958 (Sind)

The Magistrate should take some evidence before granting adjournment. On an application for adjournment by the prosecution on the ground that it would not be advisable to proceed with the case in the absence of an accused whose appearance had up to the date of the application not been secured the Magistrate should, before granting the application require the production of some evidence. But the omission to do this in a case in which the Magistrate had recorded some evidence before the issue of warrant would not by itself entitle the accused to claim to be discharged.—40 Cal 152

The Court which adjourns the inquiry or trial and remands the accused is bound to record clearly the grounds of adjournment and remand.—6 Mad 63

988 Grounds of Adjournment.—The Magistrate may adjourn a trial for the purpose of allowing the accused to secure the attendance of his witnesses.—10 W R 21 11 W R 15 The fact that the accused's advocate has gone to another place where he is detained in a lengthy criminal case is a reasonable ground for adjournment.—4 Bur L T 213 If the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the prosecution has not laid a basis for the reception of the depositions taken before the committing Magistrate in the absence of the accused he should adjourn the trial under this section and under section 540 summon such witnesses as he may deem material—12 C L R 120 A Magistrate is justified in adjourning a case till the disposal of a counter case where a point of law raised in the former case can be conveniently decided after the disposal of the latter case—Ram Saran v Niskhad 6 P L T 477 26 Cr L J 1179 Where the counsel for the accused in a capital case applied for permission to cross examine the witnesses on the day following as he was not prepared to cross examine them that day the Court should grant the application—41 Cal 299 According to the provisions of secs 256 and 257 the accused is entitled as a matter of right to ask for an adjournment, after a charge has been framed against him to enable him to adduce evidence in support of his defence—1 C W N 313 If a witness not examined before the committing Magistrate is tendered at the trial as a witness for the prosecution, and the accused objects on the ground that the examination of that witness will be a surprise to him, this may be a good ground for adjournment or postponement—1889 P R 1 Where a Magistrate has once issued process for the attendance of a defence witness he is bound to enforce his attendance and can not refuse an adjournment which is asked for by the accused in order that the witness's attendance may be secured—Mishir Lal v Emp 24 Cr L J 370 (Cal) Where it is notified to the Court that an application is intended to be made to the High Court for transfer of the case, the Court is bound to give the party making the application a reasonable time for obtaining the order of the High Court and if necessary, to postpone the hearing—19 Mad 375 The pendency of an appeal against the conviction of the accused in a case is a good ground for adjourning the trial of the same accused in a subsequent case—6 M L T 90 The accused is entitled to have an adjournment of his case so as to enable him to secure the services of a pleader whom he wants to engage for the purpose of cross examining the prosecution-witnesses—1916 P W R 14

What are not good grounds for adjournment—The Magistrate cannot postpone an inquiry for a reason not contemplated by this section, for instance his being busy with executive work—17 W R 55 The fact that the accused wants time to engage an advocate and prepare his defence is not a sufficient cause for adjourning a trial in ordinary cases though in complicated and difficult cases an adjournment may be granted on that ground—1 L B R 270 But see 1916 P W R 14 cited above Where the proceedings have been completed against a prisoner, the decision of case should not be deferred on the ground that the principal offenders not been apprehended—3 W R (Cr Let) 21 Where a are accused of having committed an offence, the is not a reasonable cause for adjourning the inquiry rest who have appeared before the Magistrate—1 L T of a co accused and the desirability of a joint trial are not sufficient reasons for the further postponement of proceedings—Blinghurst v Meek 49 Cal 182

Where two cross cases are filed one on a complaint and the other on a police challan and the complainant in one case is the accused in the other the postponement of the complaint case till after the disposal of the police challan case is not justified by the provisions of this section. The two cases must be tried simultaneously but each case must be dealt with separately and on its own merits and the judgments in both the cases should be pronounced after both the trials are finished—Sk Batahar v Nobadali 28 C W N 487 26 Cr L J 65

989 Stay of criminal proceedings pending civil suit.—This section empowers the criminal Court to adjourn an inquiry or trial for 'any reasonable cause' and the institution of a civil suit between the same parties and in respect of the same property is certainly a reasonable cause for which criminal proceedings should be stayed—Pars Ram v Jalal Din 1916 P W R 4 See also 18 L W 236 24 Cr L J 640 and In re Periasami 20 L W 544 35 M L T 99. It is true that there is no hard and fast rule that a criminal case should be stayed pending the disposal of a civil suit from which the criminal case has arisen or with which it is intimately connected—Weir 415 and that the institution of a civil suit is not always a valid ground for adjourning a criminal prosecution although the issues and evidence in the two cases are practically the same—Mathura v Durga 2 A L J 747. But each case should be dealt with according to its own particular circumstances and to avoid a regrettable conflict of decisions between the Civil and Criminal Courts, the criminal proceedings should be stayed pending the decision of the civil suit—Nur Din v Crown 1916 P W R 8 Kankajalal v Bhagwan 23 A L J 956 26 Cr L J 1485. Although a decision of the Civil Court is not technically binding upon the Criminal Court still if the Civil Court decision is in favour of the accused it creates such a doubt in his guilt that it would almost become impossible for the latter Court not to give him its benefit. Therefore it is proper for a Criminal Court to adjourn the proceedings till the decision of the civil suit—Pars Ram v Jalal Din 1916 P W R 4. If the object of prosecuting the criminal proceedings while a civil suit in relation to the same matter is pending be in reality to prejudice the trial of the civil suit or to coerce the accused into a compromise of the civil suit on terms to be practically dictated by the complainant, the Magistrate should as a general rule postpone the criminal proceedings till the disposal of the civil suit—Weir 415. An order staying a criminal trial, on a complaint of rioting and mischief in which questions of possession will have to go into until a civil suit on a question of title has been disposed of is not a proper order—Nambia v Sudalai Muthu 44 M L J 642 A I R (1923) Mad 595

The Magistrate has a discretion in such cases to adjourn or continue the criminal proceedings. If the Magistrate, on a consideration of all the circumstances exercises his discretion and either stays proceedings in the criminal case pending the disposal of the suit, or declines to do so, the High Court as a Court of Revision will not, as a general rule, interfere with the exercise of such discretion—2 Weir 415 1 M H C R 66

990 Costs of adjournment.—The words on such terms as it thinks fit empower the Criminal Courts to allow the costs of an adjournment—1904 P R 20 Sannasi v. Sivasubramania, 33 M L J 366, 2 P L W. 218 This section clearly entitles a Court to award costs of adjournment to a party who has been put to unnecessary expenses by an adjournment on the application of the other party. A judicious exercise of this power would have the effect of preventing many useless adjournments—Mathura Prasad v. Basant, 28 All 207 Where the accused asks for an adjournment to which he is not entitled, the Court may make an order of adjournment conditionally on his paying the costs of the other side—Sew Prasad v. Corporation of Calcutta, 9 C W N 18 But it is improper to direct the accused to pay the costs of adjournment when he applies under Section 526 for a transfer—Fatta v. Crown, 1911 P W. R 8

An order for costs will be made only in those cases where the circumstances are exceptional and where for some reason or other the ordinary everyday method of conducting criminal cases must be departed from—42 Bom 254 No order for costs should be made where the adjournment is inevitable and there is no other alternative. Thus, where the accused person being absent, the Court cannot proceed with the case, and is bound to adjourn the hearing, it would be entirely opposed to the spirit of this section if the Magistrate under such circumstances passes orders awarding the costs of adjournment against the accused—Broune v. Chandra Singh, 1906 P R 6, Beedha v. Emp., 20 A L J 280

This Section does not apply to proceedings in appeal, and therefore an order requiring the appellant to pay the costs of adjournment is improper and ultra vires—Suraj Bhan v. Crown, 1919 P R 29

Against whom costs may be awarded—The costs are to be paid by the party applying for the adjournment, where a criminal case is taken up on a Police charge-sheet filed on information given by a private person and such person engages a Vakil and moves the Court for an adjournment owing to the absence of the Vakil, held that an order for costs can be validly made against that person on granting the adjournment prayed for, even though he may not be a complainant under sec. 200, since an informant is a person recognised in the Code as initiating criminal proceedings as much as a complainant acting under Section 190—33 M L J 366 But where the prosecution is wholly conducted by the Police and the adjournment is asked for only for the convenience of the Police, the complainant cannot be dered to bear the costs of the adjournment—Emp v Laxman 24 Bom L R 380 If an adjournment takes place for which the complainant is solely to blame then of course an order can be made that the complainant should pay any costs which may have been incurred by the accused for the adjournment—Ibid

991 Remand —Remands to custody should not ordinarily be ordered under this section without first recording some evidence to show that good grounds exist for believing that the accused has committed a non bailable offence—Ahmed Ali v Emp 11 N L R 162 if the offence is bailable the accused should be admitted to bail and not remanded to custody—8 C W N 779

When the accused is at first brought before a Magistrate and remand is desired it is not necessary to go fully into the charge it is ordinarily sufficient to show by the evidence of a Police officer that they believe that the accused is concerned in the commission of an offence and on such proof the accused will be remanded to custody If the accused is again brought up after a remand and further remand is asked for some direct evidence of the guilt of the accused should be required to justify the Magistrate in ordering for further remand and with each remand the necessity for the production of evidence of guilt becomes more strong—Ponnusami v Q, 6 Mad 69 36 Cal 174 11 N L R 162

An order of remand cannot be passed in the absence of the accused To remand is to re commit to custody The commitment requires the presence of the accused the re commitment also requires his presence—2 Weir 409

Grounds of remand —The Magistrate can remand the accused if sufficient evidence has been obtained to raise a suspicion that the accused may have committed an offence and it appears likely that further evidence may be obtained by such remand—36 Cal 166 But a Magistrate is not justified in postponing an inquiry and remanding the accused when there is no evidence at all which could be the foundation of a charge and merely on the expectation that after some time on some inquiry being made some evidence might be obtained—17 W R 55 Where the accused person had already made a confession and had produced an article stolen from a person and there was ample evidence before the Magistrate it was held that the remand of the accused in order to get from him a confessional statement is most improper—7 Weir 414

Remand to police custody —This section does not empower the Magistrate to remand an accused person who is in the custody of the Magistrate to Police custody for the purpose of obtaining information with regard to the offences which the accused may be alleged to have committed—4 Bom L R 878 23 Bom 32

Period of detention —Fifteen days is the longest period for which an accused person may be remanded at a time by an order of the Magistrate—5 B H C R 31. An accused person has the right to have the evidence against him recorded at as early a period as possible, and the fact that there is or may be a great deal of evidence forthcoming is not a sufficient ground for detention for an inordinate period—Mansukh v. Q, 6 Mad 63.

If a Magistrate without reasonable cause delays proceedings with the trials of persons whom he keeps in jail he would be liable, notwithstanding the provisions of Act XVII of 1850 (Protection of Judicial Officers), to an action for damages if the prisoners are eventually acquitted—11 W R 19.

345 (1) The offences punishable under the sections of the Indian Penal Code specified in the first two columns of the table next following may be compounded by the persons mentioned in the third column of that table.

Offence	Sections of Indian Penal Code applicable	Persons by whom offence may be compounded

Knowing selling or exposing or possessing for sale or for trade or manufacturing purpose goods marked with a counterfeit trade or property mark	486	Ditto
Marrying again during the lifetime of a husband or wife	494	The husband or wife of the person so marrying.
Uttering words or sounds or making gestures or exhibiting any object intending to insult the modesty of a woman or intruding upon the privacy of a woman	509	The woman whom it is intended to insult or whose privacy is intruded upon.

(3) When any offence is compoundable under this section the abetment of such offence or an attempt to commit such offence (when such attempt is itself an offence) may be compounded in like manner

(4) When the person who would otherwise be competent to compound an offence under this section is under the age of eighteen years or is an idiot or lunatic any person competent to contract on his behalf may with the permission of the Court compound such offence

(5) When the accused has been committed for trial or when he has been convicted and an appeal is pending no composition for the offence shall be allowed without the leave of the Court to which he is committed, or as the case may be before which the appeal is to be heard

(5A) A High Court acting in the exercise of its powers of revision under Section 439 may allow any person to compound any offence which he is competent to compound under this section

(6) The composition of an offence under this section shall have the effect of an acquittal of the accused with whom the offence has been compounded

(7) No offence shall be compounded except as provided by this section

Change —In subsection (1) the offence under section 503 I P Code has been added in sub section (2) the offences under Secs 343 346 357 403 417 418 419 420 430 451 482 483 486 494 and 509 I P Code have been added Sub section (5A) has been newly inserted and the italicised words in sub sections (4) and (6) have also been added The changes are of minor character and no reasons have been particularly stated in the Bill

992 Withdrawal and composition —A withdrawal (Sec 48) must be by intimation to the Magistrate holding the trial whereas in many cases composition can be effected without the permission of the Court A withdrawal is permissible in a summons case whereas most of the compoundable cases are warrant cases A withdrawal is the result of act of one party only namely the complainant without the consent of the accused whereas a composition presupposes an arrangement between both parties and implies a consent of the accused—21 Cal 103 20 C W N 109 Permission to withdraw can be given only to the complainant whereas the right to compound an offence does not always belong to the complainant

—14 Mad 379 On the withdrawal of the complaint the Magistrate can award compensation to the accused (1883 P R 24) but compensation cannot be awarded when a case is compounded—1888 P R 19

A Magistrate has the option to permit the complainant to withdraw or not but if the offence is compoundable without the leave of the Court, and a petition of compromise is put in, the Magistrate is bound to give effect to it Whether a petition (e g. a petition praying that the case be struck off the file) is one for withdrawal or compromise is to be judged from the fact whether the accused consented to it or not Where it appeared that the accused had never consented to the compromise of the case, the petition was not a petition of compromise under this section, but one of withdrawal and the Magistrate's refusal to permit withdrawal, and the subsequent proceeding resulting in the trial and conviction of the accused were not illegal—30 C W N 1209

A Railway guard abused and assaulted a passenger, whereupon the latter made a complaint to the police, who instituted a case against the accused A few days later, the accused offered an apology to the complainant, who thereupon gave a letter to the accused in which he wrote 'Mr John (the accused) come to me and offered an unconditional apology I beg to withdraw the case against him' This letter was signed, dated and given to the accused, who produced it in Court The trying Magistrate treated the letter as a withdrawal and not as a compromise, and as withdrawal could only be made in Court by intimation to the Magistrate, he treated the withdrawal as invalid and proceeded with the trial and convicted the accused Held that the Magistrate was misled by the word 'withdraw' used in the letter, that the case was one of composition and not of withdrawal, because a withdrawal could be made only by the prosecuting authority (police) in this case, that the offence having been compounded, the Magistrate ought to have acquitted the accused, and that the conviction and sentence must therefore be set aside—Emp v John, 45 All 145 (146 148)

993 Requisites of composition.—In order to amount to a composition, the arrangement must be one by which the parties have settled their differences and not a mere arrangement to settle the disputes in future as the result of some action either by themselves or by third parties Therefore where the parties signed a muchilika referring their dispute to arbitrators but no arbitration took place and no award was passed, held that the mere signing of the muchilika did not amount to a composition of the offence—Ramalinga v Varadarajulu, 49 M L J 44 22 L W 390 26 Cr L J 1591 A mere agreement between the parties to refer the case to arbitration is not a final settlement of the dispute and does not amount to a composition Where the parties filed a petition of compromise agreeing to be bound by the decision of arbitrators named therein and asked an adjournment for settlement of their disputes but after the arbitrators made the award the complainant refused to abide by that award held that there was no composition and the Magistrate could proceed with the trial—Sriish Chandra v Abani Nath 42 C L J 139 26 Cr L J 1584

Although a composition also signifies that the person against whom the offence has been committed has received some gratification (whether of a pecuniary character or otherwise) as an inducement for his desiring to abstain from a prosecution (Murray v Q E 21 Cal 103), still the passing of such consideration or gratification is not absolutely necessary to effect a valid composition—1896 P R 9 And it is not necessary that the consideration should be of a monetary character—39 Mad 946 An apology is a sufficient consideration in cases of defamation or abuse—Emp v John, 45 All 143 (146)

To constitute a valid composition it must appear that the parties were free from influence of any kind and were fully aware of their respective rights—21 Cal 103

The composition may be effected in Court or out of Court The composition contemplated by this section is not limited to acts done in Court—Mahomed v Pattani 39 Mad 946 The offences enumerated in sub section (2) can be compounded out of Court and in such cases if a composition is proved the Magistrate must give effect to it and cannot proceed with the trial—Lmp v Mulo 6 S L R 284

The offence must be compoundable —Before allowing a composition it is the duty of the Magistrate to find upon the evidence that a compoundable offence has been committed If the evidence discloses a non compoundable offence the Magistrate upon a petition of compromise cannot treat the case as a compoundable one and allow composition—Ratanlal 699 4 Bom L R 718 20 Cr L J 552 (Pat) So also, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to allow composition of a non compoundable offence on the ground that it would be better for the complainant to compromise and that the accused also desires to compromise and that it is probable that the case might in the end turn out to be a compoundable offence—1907 P W R 34

994 When offence can be compounded —Under this section a case may be compounded at any time before the sentence is pronounced therefore a petition of compromise filed by the parties when the judgment was actually being written should be accepted—45 Cal 816

An offence can be compounded even before a charge of the offence is laid in Court by the person injured It can be compounded apart from the question whether a charge or complaint has been laid before the Court or not and there is nothing in this section to suggest that a composition of an offence to be valid must be effected only after the accused is brought before the Court. A composition made to prevent a case coming into Court is just as much a lawful composition under this section as one made after the case has come into Court. There are certain offences however (sub-section) which can be compounded only with the permission of the Court and the operation of the composition is necessarily suspended in those cases until the Court sanctions it—41 Mad 685

A Magistrate cannot allow composition after the records of the case have been called for by the High Court under sec 435 with a view to transfer the case. When the records of the case were called for by the High Court the case was no longer on the file of the Magistrate and his jurisdiction was suspended. But the parties may compound the offence before the Magistrate to whom the case may be transferred by the High Court—In re Maruti 49 Bom 533 27 Bom L R 350 26 Cr L J 996

995 Proof.—Although the provisions of the Contract Act may not apply the proof of the arrangement must be similar to that which the Court requires for the proof of any agreement which is in issue—21 Cal 103. The burden of proving that the offence has been validly compounded lies upon the accused—21 Cal 103

Proof as to factum of composition—Where one party to a compoundable criminal case alleges that the case has been compromised and the other resiles from the compromise and denies the same it is competent to the Court before which the case is pending to take evidence concerning the factum of the alleged compromise and to decide whether a compromise has in fact been arrived at or not—39 Mad 946 41 Mad 685

996 Magistrate when bound to allow composition.—If the offence is compoundable without the permission of the Court and a petition of compromise is put in the Court is bound to allow composition and has no option but to allow the offence to be compounded—1884 A W N 256. He is not at liberty to call upon the parties to adduce further evidence that the case has been compounded—Emp v Ganakrishna 16 Bom L R 939. It is his duty to accept the compromise and to dismiss the case and acquit the accused. He is wrong in ordering the petition to be put up on the record—3 C W N 322. Where the complainant and the accused are willing to compromise a composition can not be refused on the ground that the master in whose quarrel the servant (complainant) was injured refuses to give his permission—Lala v A E 17 O C 9

If a charge is framed in respect of a compoundable offence and the proper person files a petition of compromise the Magistrate cannot alter the charge into one of a non compoundable offence to prevent composition. He must give effect to the petition and acquit the accused—1914 P R 29. If the offence in respect of which the complaint was made be an offence compoundable without the leave of the Court and a petition of compromise is made the Magistrate is bound to give effect to the petition and acquit the accused even though by mistake he had a non compoundable offence in the summons served upon the accused—

P L T 602

If the offence is compoundable it may be compromised even though the case has been sent up by the Police—10 Cal 551 See also 45 All 145

997 Who can compound —The offence of hurt can be compounded only by the person to whom the hurt is caused—15 A L J 467 The widow or other relations of such person (that person dying in consequence of the hurt) cannot compound—2 Weir 418 37 All 419 Crown v Ramzan 7 S L R 700 Where hurt was caused to three persons and one of them died subsequently the remaining two cannot compromise the offence as regards the deceased—31 All 606 In other words where there are several complainants one complainant can compound the offence committed against himself but not the offence committed against others—Shib Chandra v Rabbani 7 C W N 168

The offence of defamation can be compounded only by the person defamed and not by another person aggrieved by the defamation Thus where a charge of defamation for imputing unchastity to a woman is instituted on the complaint of the husband the husband cannot compound the offence—25 Bom 151 In such a case the wife is the only person who can compound the offence and she can do so without the consent or even against the will of her husband But if the defamatory matter was published with the intention of injuring the reputation of both husband and wife and the husband instituted the complaint then no one except the husband could compound—14 Mad 379 An offence under section 498 I P C can be compounded only by the husband of the woman Though a complaint of that offence may be made by any person having the care of the woman during her husband's absence (section 199) still such person cannot compound the offence and an acquittal based upon such composition is illegal—Mahabat Ali v Emp 4 Lah L J 488 Harnam v Sam Das 24 Cr L J 120 (Lah) Mir Alam v Emp 5 Lah L J 183 A charge of criminal trespass can be compounded by the person who is in actual possession of the property trespassed upon and he (and not the juridical possessor) is the person who can bring the complaint in respect of the offence

Otherwise we might have the juridical possessor (e g a trustee) prosecuting for criminal trespass and the actual possessor compounding the offence a result which could never have been contemplated by the Legislature —8 L B R 425

A minor cannot compound an offence—1891 P R 17 but under subsection (4) it can be compounded with the permission of the Court by the person competent to contract on behalf of the minor

998 Permission of Court —In respect of the offences mentioned in subsection (1) no permission of the Court is necessary for compromise and no petition is therefore required to be presented to the Court for its permission—39 Mad 946 except under the circumstances mentioned in subsection (5)—1883 A W N 245 1886 A W N 167 In respect of offences referred to in subsection (7) the permission of the Court is absolutely necessary and such permission can be granted only by the Court and not by a police officer Granting permission to withdraw is a judicial act and can be exercised only by the Magistrate a Police officer is not competent to entertain an application for the withdrawal of a complaint—Ratanlal 91

In cases falling under sub section (2) it is the duty of the Magistrate to decide whether he will or will not allow a compromise and the responsibility rests entirely with him Unless the offence is so serious that punishment is absolutely necessary the Magistrate would do well to exercise his discretion in allowing a composition Where the Magistrate refused to allow composition without sufficient reason the High Court in revision allowed the compromise—Sera Singh v Crown 1912 P W R 7 73 Cr L J 85 In cases falling under subsection (7) if the parties who are nearly related to one another are willing to patch up their quarrels the Magistrate should not refuse to allow composition—Aminulla v Emp 26 C W N 536

Under sub section (5) when an appeal is pending in respect of the offence it is the Appellate Court alone which can allow the composition the ruling in 2 All 339 (under the 1872 Code) which held that no offence could be compounded at the Appellate stage is no longer good law When an appeal is pending the permission of the Appellate Court is necessary even in respect of offences which are ordinarily compoundable without the sanction of the Court

Permission by High Court in revision—In Emp v Ram Piyari 32 All 153 Emp v Shiboo 45 All 17 1904 P L R 252 Lalla v K E 17 O C 92 and Cholai v Emp 24 Cr L J 590 (Oudh) it has been held that the High Court as a Court of Revision can exercise all the powers of an appellate Court and can grant permission to compound an offence But in 15 A L J 467 37 All 127 11 A L J 13 42 All 474 1918 P R 35 43 Cal 1143 3 P L T 458 18 C W N 1212 and 39 Mad 604 it was laid down that an offence could not be allowed to be compounded when the case came before the High Court in Revision when the High Court was sitting neither as a Court of Original Jurisdiction nor as a Court of Appeal This latter view has now been rendered obsolete by the new subsection (5A) of this section which expressly gives the High Court the power to allow composition in revision

Composition on Retrial—When the accused was charged with and convicted of an offence compoundable without the leave of Court but on appeal the conviction was set aside and a retrial ordered and the complainant then offered to compound the case it was held that it was open to the parties to compound the case in the same manner in which it could be compounded before conviction by the Magistrate and that no permission of the Court was necessary for the composition—Unrat v Makhulan 3 A L J 523

Recording reason—When allowing composition under sub-section (2) the Magistrate should briefly record his reason for granting sanction so that if an appeal is preferred the Appellate Court may be in a position to judge whether the discretion has been properly exercised—L B R 349

999 Compromise cannot be withdrawn—When the parties have filed a petition of compromise they cannot afterwards be allowed to withdraw the petition and to insist upon the case being tried—39 Mad 946 41 Mad 685 3 C W N 322 Hem Chandra v Girindra 33 C L J 226 Ram Richpal v Mata Din 25 Cr L J 810 (Lah) A composition arrived at between the parties is complete as soon as it is made and the accused is entitled to be acquitted even though one of the parties later on resiles from the compromise—33 C I J 226

1000 Subsection (6)—Acquittal—When the petition of composition is put in the Magistrate's sole remaining duty is to record a formal order of acquittal and set the accused person at liberty—1914 P R 29 The Magistrate is bound to acquit the accused he acts illegally if he proceeds with the trial and convicts the accused—2 Weir 418 45 All 145 Any sentence that he may pass subsequently is illegal for the composition of an offence has the effect of an acquittal—1884 A W N 256

The High Court in revision can set aside an order of acquittal passed on a petition of compromise if there has been any material irregularity—7 S L R 200

Compensation can be awarded under Section 250 only when the Magistrate himself acquits the accused after trial But a composition of an offence has in itself the effect of acquittal and no trial is held and therefore no compensation can be awarded where the offence is compounded under this section—1888 P R 19 Ratanlal 957 Proceedings under Section 250 are inapplicable to a case where the accused person himself has by an agreement with the prosecutor arrived at a settlement and been a party to the compounding of the offence—10 Bom L R 1056

When an offence is compounded the accused must be acquitted The conviction of the accused after composition is illegal and must be set aside—Emp v John 45 All 145 (148) A composition has the effect of an acquittal and not of discharge and is therefore a complete bar to the prosecution of the accused for the same offence—6 S L R 284 1910 P L R 22 The Magistrate cannot after composition institute proceedings against the accused under Section 437 (now 436)—1884 A W N 13 A composition has the effect of barring not only a prosecution for the same offence but also for a cognate offence based on the same facts—Ratanlal 310 or for an offence involved in the former offence which has been compounded—Sialil Bauraddir v. Shakkh Akbarat Ali 17 C W N 94^R. But the compounding of an original charge is not a conclusive answer to a charge made against the complainant under Section 211 I P C—11 Cal 70.

Where there are several accused persons the composition of an offence with one of them has not the effect of acquittal of all the accused persons but only of the particular accused with whom the composition took place—Jaffar v. A. E. 41 Mad. 334; Bom 346; Anantia v. Crowe 5 Lah. 234; 23, Cr. L. J. 679; 1 Lah. 109; Chandan v. Emp 19 A. L. J. 374. This is now made clear by the words with whom the offence has been compounded newly added in subsection (6). In Calcutta and Patna cases it was held that if a compoundable offence was committed by a number of persons, and the complainant compounded the offence with only one of them, the effect of such composition was to compound the complaint not only in respect of the persons with whom it was actually compounded, but also in respect of the other persons, and the composition operated as an acquittal of all the accused—Chander Kumar v. Emp 7 C W N 105; Shyam B. Bari v. Sagar 20 Cr. L. J. 54; 1 P. L. T. 37; 2 P. L. T. 584; Surya Kumar v. Emp 4 P. L. T. 107. This view is no longer correct.

Where an accused is charged with two offences and one offence is compounded, the charge for the other offence does not ipso facto lapse and the accused is not necessarily acquitted in respect of that offence—Emp v. Jaffar 26 Cr. L. J. 656 (Lah.).

The composition effected under this section would be a complete bar to a civil suit for damages—6 S. L. P. 84.

commit the accused under the provisions hereinbefore contained

(2) If such Magistrate is not empowered to commit for trial, he shall proceed under Section 346

1003 Change —The words stop further proceedings and occurring in the old section between the words shall and commit have been omitted by Sec 91 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amen

Act XVIII of 1931. This amendment is designed to bring Section 34 into line with Section 65—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1931)

Under the old law there was a conflict of opinion as to the meaning of the words 'stop further proceedings'. In Ratanlal 9, 15 Cr L J 404 (Mad) and 36 Cal 48 a very restricted meaning was assigned to these words. The words were interpreted to mean that as soon as the Magistrate considered that the case was one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session he should at once stop all proceedings and then and there pass an order of commitment to the Sessions even though neither the witnesses for the prosecution had been cross-examined nor the defence witnesses examined. In other words the power of a Magistrate to make commitment under this section was not subject to the provisions of Chapter XVIII and the Magistrate could commit even though all the evidence on either side had not been taken—Ratanlal 9-5.

But a more reasonable construction has been given to the words in some other cases. Thus in another Madras case and other cases the words 'stop further proceedings' have been interpreted to mean that the Magistrate should stop proceeding with the case as a trial and instead commit the case to the Sessions and in thus committing he should adopt the procedure laid down in Chapter XVIII. These words do not enable the Magistrate to shorten the proceedings and then and there pass an order of commitment—36 Mad 31; 6 L B R 19 (F B). Uttam Singh 1st S L R 183; 6 Cr L J 148. The words under the provisions hereinbefore contained show that the Magistrate must make his proceedings conform to the provisions of Chapter XVIII and that before he writes and signs a committal order the provisions of that Chapter must be followed and he must not conform to the mere passing of the committal order under section 13—Emp v Chakras 5 Indol 6 L B R 19 (F B). It was not intended by this section to enable the Magistrate to deprive the accused of any of the rights conferred on him by Chapter XVIII—15 Cr L J 366 (Mad) and an order of commitment made without taking all such evidence as the accused was prepared to produce before the Magistrate is invalid—6 All 177; 6 All 64. In a recent case the Calcutta High Court has also laid down that though the Magistrate decides to commit the case to the Sessions under sec. 34 he should still follow the procedure of Chapter XVIII and allow the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses (sec. 65) where the application to cross-examine was made before the charge was framed and before the Magistrate decided to commit the case to the Court of Session—Jyotsna Bai v Emp 51 Cal 44 (1915); 6 Cr L J 63; A I R 104 Cal 450.

This latter view will now prevail as a result of the present amendment which has deleted the above ambiguous words in order to remove the conflict of opinion.

1004 Procedure —It is not intended by this section that if the Magistrate finds that an order of commitment is to be made under this section proceedings under Chapter XVIII are to be commenced de novo—15 Cr L J 366 (Mad) All 910 therefore if the Magistrate has already completed the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses it is not necessary for him to take that evidence afresh Only in respect of the remaining proceedings the provisions of Chapter XVIII should be followed — All 910

Ought to be tried —See notes to section 207 for the meaning of these words This section is couched in general terms and gives the Magistrate very wide powers to commit if he is of opinion that the case is one which ought to be tried by the Court of Session The discretion vested in the Magistrate under this section cannot be limited by the provisions of sec 254 that is there is no suggestion in this section that the only possible reason for a competent Magistrate to commit a case is that he will not be able to pass a sufficiently severe sentence—A E v Ishakal 3 Rang 42 26 Cr L J 1389 A I R 1925 Rang 207 Crown Prosecutor v Bhagnath 42 Mad 83 But a contrary view has been taken in some cases See Note 695 under sec 207

If in a case some of the accused persons are charged with an offence which ought to be tried by the Court of Session and the case against the other accused is a summons case which the Magistrate can try and adequately punish it is not illegal for the Magistrate to commit all the accused to the Sessions—21 Cr L J 791 (Sind)

Provided that, if any Magistrate in the district has been invested with powers under section 30, the case may be transferred to him instead of being committed to the Court of Session

Change --The italicised words have been added by Sec 91 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

If the Magistrate committing the accused — This amendment has been made on the lines of section 200 (1) — Report of the Select Committee of 1916

Is competent to try the case — We have introduced this amendment to make it clear that the section does not empower the Magistrate to pass sentence in a case which he is not competent to try — Report of the Joint Committee of 1912

In the proviso the words any Magistrate in the district have been substituted for the words the District Magistrate occurring in the old section The amendment is merely verbal

Sub section (2) — This clause provides that when any person is committed to the Court of Session under sec 348 any other person accused jointly whom the Magistrate believes to be guilty shall be similarly committed Identical treatment will thus be accorded to all the accused — Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Sections 348 and 349 — If the accused is an old offender the Magistrate should act under this section and not refer the case to a superior Magistrate under section 349—2 Weir 423 That section does not apply to a case where the accused is an old offender—4 L B R 281 If a Magistrate instead of proceeding under this section erroneously sends up a case under section 349 it is open to the District Magistrate to take the case on his own file or to transfer it to some other first class Magistrate—2 Weir 422.

1005 Procedure —The Magistrate must first of all determine either as a preliminary matter or at any rate before framing a charge whether there has been a previous conviction if a previous conviction is proved the Magistrate will then have to consider whether in the circumstances of the case his powers enable him to try and pass adequate sentence If he thinks they do not permit he should not try but commit the case to the Sessions (but he should not discharge the accused) if they do permit he may try the case himself. If he commits the case to the Sessions, he ought not to find the accused guilty, but should merely frame a charge under section 10 and commit the case for trial under Chapter XVIII—38 Mad 552.

Commitment not imperative. The words "unless convicted" did not exist in the Code of 1882, or in the earlier Codes, and therefore it was imperative on the Magistrate to commit if a previous conviction was proved, and he could not try the case himself—Ratanlal 704. But the 1895 Code gives a discretion to the Magistrate to try the case himself if he is competent to pass adequate sentence—2 Weir 422.

1006 Powers of District Magistrate.—Under the proviso to this section, if the District Magistrate is invested with powers under sec 30, the case may be transferred to him instead of being committed to the Sessions. In such a case the District Magistrate need not try the case de novo. He can under section 350 act on the evidence already recorded by the Magistrate who transferred the case. See notes under sub-section (3) of section 350.

If the District Magistrate considers that the case should be committed to the Sessions, he should himself commit and not send back the case to the Subordinate Magistrate with a direction to commit—9 Mad 377. If the District Magistrate commits the case, instead of trying it, he can it seems act upon the evidence recorded by the subordinate Magistrate and need not commence the inquiry de novo. See Ratanlal 472 and 12^o C. W. N. 136 cited under sec 346.

punishment different in kind from, or more severe than, that which such Magistrate is empowered to inflict, or that he ought to be required to execute a bond under Section 106, he may record the opinion and submit his proceedings, and forward the accused, to the District Magistrate or Sub-divisional Magistrate to whom he is subordinate.

(1A) When more accused than one are being tried together and the Magistrate considers it necessary to proceed under sub-section (1) in regard to any of such accused, he shall forward all accused who are in his opinion guilty to the District Mag or Sub-divisional Magistrate.

(2) The Magistrate to whom the proceedings are submitted may, if he thinks fit, examine the parties and recall and examine any witness who has already given evidence in the case, and may call for and take any further evidence, and shall pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit, and as is according to law

Provided that he shall not inflict a punishment more severe than he is empowered to inflict under Sections 32 and 33

Change —Sub section (1 A) has been added by sec 93 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 19-3 This is similar to sub section (-) of section 348

1007 Application of section —The provisions of this section are subject to the express provision of sec 348 Therefore where the accused is an old offender a second class Magistrate should commit him to the Sessions under sec 348 and not submit the case to the superior Magistrate under this section—Weir 423 41 B R 282

The procedure prescribed by this section is unsuited to cases tried summarily—4 L B R -77

1008 Reference to Superior Magistrate —Who can refer—Only the second or third class Magistrate can refer A first class Magistrate is not competent to submit the case under this section—7 All 414

This section does not authorise any Bench of Magistrates to refer a case for higher punishment—4 L B R -77

Reference discretionary —Whether a case ought to be referred to the superior Magistrate or not is within the discretion of the subordinate Magistrate and the District Magistrate cannot direct the subordinate Magistrate to send up the case under this section If he so directs his order is ultra vires—2 Weir 427

To whom case can be referred —The case can be referred to the District Magistrate or the Magistrate to whom the referring Magistrate is subordinate and to no other Magistrate—38 Bom 719

When reference can be made —This section authorises a reference to the superior Magistrate when the subordinate Magistrate considers that the accused should receive a severer sentence than he himself is competent to inflict If the punishment which the subordinate Magistrate proposed was one which he himself could inflict the reference was improper and the Magistrate should himself try the case—1851 A W N 99 When a case was sent to the District Magistrate not because the referring Magistrate was not competent to pass a severe sentence but on the ground that it was advisable that the matter should be dealt with by the District Magistrate it was held that the transfer was neither under sec 349 nor under sec 19-and therefore the conviction made by the District Magistrate was illegal and must be set aside—1 All 66

Under this section the Magistrate can make a reference to a superior Magistrate if he considers that the accused should receive a severer punishment than he can inflict it does not apply where the Magistrate thinks that the accused should be dealt with under section 562 because an order under sec 562 directing release upon probation of good conduct is not a punishment—Baba v Emp 4 Cr L J 738 (Nag)

1009 Powers and duties of referring Magistrate —If the subordinate Magistrate sends the case to the higher Magistrate for severer punishment, he cannot convict the accused the conviction and sentence are reserved for the higher Magistrate The referring Magistrate is required to state his opinion only but he cannot convict—Ratanlal 387 Pyavag Gope v King Emp 3 Pat 1015 (1017) 5 P L T 571 25 Cr I J 1276 He can frame a charge if he likes and the framing of charge is not illegal—Emp v Po Yin 17 Cr I J 91 (Bur) - L B R 85 Ratanlal 948

If the subordinate Magistrate sends the case for the purpose of binding down the accused under sec 106 the Magistrate should neither convict nor pass sentence himself The conviction sentence and the order for security are all to be passed by the superior Magistrate—1 Cal 622 35 Cal 1093

Forward the accused —The reason of forwarding the accused is that the accused has a right to be present at the proceedings held before the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred such proceedings being a continuation of the proceedings before the referring Magistrate—7 W R 38 The right exists even though the superior Magistrate does not examine the parties or recall and re examine the witnesses and the accused will be at liberty to contend before that Magistrate that there is no sufficient case made out against him and the Magistrate if he thinks so may discharge or acquit him—7 B H C R 31

Sub section (1A) —It has been held, under the old law that if there are several accused charged before the subordinate Magistrate, the Magistrate can convict some of them and send up the others under section 11 to the superior Magistrate such a procedure is not now any longer the conviction illegal but in such a case it is more advisable to send all the accused to the superior Magistrate instead of convicting some of the accused—2 Weir 428 2 Weir 429 The new sub section 11A makes it imperative on the Magistrate under such circumstances to send all the accused to the superior Magistrate See A F v Emp 13 Cr L R 216 26 Cr L J 1363

But if there are several accused and the Magistrate thinks that all of them to be guilty he should not send all the accused to the superior Magistrate but should acquit the accused whom he finds not guilty that accused alone whom he considers guilty—Sultan Md v Lmp, 24 A L J 80, 26 Cr L J 1630.

1010 Sub section (2) —Powers and duties of the Superior Magistrate —When a case is referred to a superior Magistrate, the whole case is opened up for him to deal with it according to his own discretion—Ratanlal 350 In dealing with the case, he should not confine himself to considering whether the decision of the subordinate Magistrate was plainly and manifestly opposed to the evidence but he should find on the evidence the facts which he considers proved and pass judgment accordingly—Ratanlal 636 5 M H C R App 43 If the superior Magistrate convicts the accused for an aggravated form of the offence, he must commence the trial afresh for such offence and cannot act on the evidence already recorded—2 Weir 421, 2 Weir 426 So also, if the offence is one which is beyond the jurisdiction of the subordinate Magistrate to try, the superior Magistrate cannot act upon the evidence already recorded by the subordinate Magistrate—1 Bom L R 27 The Magistrate to whom a case is transferred is competent to pass such judgment sentence or order as he thinks fit' He is free to deal with the case according to his own discretion and he can, if he thinks fit, order a commitment to the Court of Session—Ratanlal 945 2 Mad 289, 9 Mad 377 13 Cal 303, 4 Bom 240 He has to make up his mind whether the accused are guilty or not and exercise his own independent judgment in the case and to write a judgment conformable to the requirements of section 367 He cannot simply pass sentence on the accused without writing any judgment—Karuppa v Lmp, (1920) M W N 120

The superior Magistrate to whom the case is referred has no power to send back the case to the subordinate Magistrate upon any ground whatsoever He must dispose of it himself by acquitting or convicting the accused or by committing him for trial—26 All 344 Ratanlal 943, 6 C L R 276 and even if the case is sent back to the subordinate Magistrate, the latter cannot take up the case, after he has referred the case his jurisdiction over it ceases, and any order passed by him would be illegal—6 C L R 276, 10 Bom 196 If the superior Magistrate thinks that a commitment to the Sessions is necessary, he himself should make the commitment he cannot send back the case to the referring Magistrate with direction to commit the case to the Sessions—9 Mad 377 If however, the reference is defective e g if the referring Magistrate has omitted to record in writing the statement of the accused as required by section 364 the superior Magistrate can return the case with a direction to supply the defect and the subordinate Magistrate in such a case is also competent to come to a fresh and different conclusion as to the guilt of the accused and acquit some of them—2 Weir 426

The superior Magistrate can act upon the evidence already recorded by the subordinate Magistrate and is not bound to hold a de novo trial under sec 350—2 Weir 4-8 This is now made clear by the amendment made in subsection (2) of sec 350 which lays down that that section does not apply to a transfer of proceedings under section 340 See A E v Dodo 18 S L R 216

(3) When a case is transferred under the provisions of this Code from one Magistrate to another, the former shall be deemed to cease to exercise jurisdiction therein and to be succeeded by the latter within the meaning of sub section (1)

Change.—The italicised words have been added by section 94 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below in their proper places

1011 Object and scope of section.—The general principle is that a case must be decided by the Magistrate who heard the evidence. But if this principle has to be strictly observed it will follow that in every case of transfer the succeeding Magistrate will have to try from the beginning all cases which have been partly heard by his predecessor in office and there will be endless delay in trials. And this section is obviously intended to meet such cases.—6 Cal 370 19 Cr L J 657 (Nag). In view of the frequent changes in the office of Magistrates the Code provides specially that a Magistrate may pronounce judgment on evidence recorded by his predecessor or on evidence partly recorded by his predecessor and partly by himself.—3 Mad 11

This section applies not only where one Magistrate is succeeded by another but also where the second Magistrate is in his turn succeeded by another Magistrate. The third Magistrate can act on evidence recorded by his two predecessors. This section is not confined to a case where there is only a single occurrence of one Magistrate succeeding another.—Gowindan v. Krishnam 45 M L J 808

This section gives the succeeding Magistrate jurisdiction to decide the case on evidence recorded by his predecessor but it cannot give him jurisdiction to deliver a judgment written by his predecessor. Where the Magistrate who heard the evidence and tried the case was transferred to another district and from that place he sent a written judgment which was pronounced by his successor at the place where the case was tried held that there was no jurisdiction to do so and the conviction and sentence so passed were illegal and that the accused must be retried.—Baisnab Charan v. Amin 41 50 Cal 664 38 C L J 6. 24 Cr L J 489. Id. Rafique v. A. L. 43 C L J 100 27 Cr L J 406. But the Madras High Court and the Oudh Chief Court hold that the succeeding Magistrate can sign and pronounce the judgment written by his predecessor and thus adopt it as his own.—In re Sarimull 4 40 Mad 108 37 M L J 81. Chandka v. Emp. 80 C 109 11 O L J 75. In re Sankara Pillai 15 M L J 117 7 Cr L J 451

1012 Application of Section —(1) This section applies to an inquiry under Chap VIII therefore where a Magistrate holding an inquiry under section 107 is transferred after the examination of some prosecution witnesses and is succeeded by another the person called upon to shew cause why he should not give security may under proviso (a) insist upon the re summoning and re examination of those witnesses—4 C L R 452 43 Mad 511

(2) This section is applicable to proceedings under section 145 Where in the course of such proceedings one Magistrate is transferred the succeeding Magistrate can act upon the evidence already recorded—13 C W N 420 37 Cal 812 Sondi Singh v Gobind Singh, 5 P L T 237 25 Cr L J 81 Syed Sadek v Sachindra, 37 C L J 128 24 Cr L J 569

(3) This section applies to inquiries preliminary to commitments The succeeding Magistrate can commit the case to the Sessions on evidence recorded by his predecessor in office—31 Mad 40 36 All 315

(4) This section would enable a Magistrate to try a case in which his predecessor has issued a process and granted adjournment but has recorded no evidence—Ratanlal 65

(5) This section does not apply to cases tried by Benches of Magistrates—3 Cal 194 18 Mad 394 20 Cal 870 2 Lah 237, 22 Cr L J 511 9 Bur L T 203 Even the new section 350A does not apply where one Magistrate of a Bench is replaced by another that section contemplates cases wherein all the Magistrates constituting the Bench have heard the proceedings throughout See notes under that section

(6) This section applies only to Magistrates but not to Sessions Judges A Sessions Judge is not competent to pronounce judgment on evidence recorded by his predecessor, or on evidence partly recorded by his predecessor and partly by himself—21 W R 47 1864 W R 32 8 C L J 59, 3 Mad 112 7 C P L R 1 35 All 63 Even the consent of the accused would not enable the Sessions Judge to do so and validate such procedure—26 Bom 50 1890 P R 1 23 W R 59

(7) This section refers to cases where one Magistrate is succeeded by another Magistrate, and does not apply where the Magistrate remains the same and his official designation is merely changed Thus where a Head Assistant Magistrate having almost completed the trial of a criminal case, was appointed to the office of a Deputy Magistrate in another place in the same District and the case was brought on to his file to the latter place by order of the District Magistrate he could proceed to try the case from the point at which he had arrived as Head Assistant Magistrate prior to his transfer to the post of Deputy Magistrate and the accused cannot demand under proviso (a) that the trial must be commenced de novo—22 Mad 47

(8) This section does not apply where the District Magistrate holds further inquiry into a case under section 437 (now 436). In such a case he must hold the inquiry de novo and cannot rely on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate who previously tried the case—6 All 367, 7 Bur L R 198.

1013 Succeeded —A liberal construction should be put upon the provisions of section 350. Where on the death of a Magistrate empowered under section 30 the District Magistrate being the only remaining Magistrate in the district having powers under that section, took upon his file a case which was being tried by the deceased it was held that the District Magistrate must be regarded as having succeeded the deceased Magistrate within the meaning of this section—Gorelal v. Emp. 19 Cr L J 705 (Nag.). When a case is transferred from one Magistrate to another the former Magistrate is said to be succeeded by the latter. See subsection (3) and notes thereunder.

1014 Recommence the inquiry or trial —If the succeeding Magistrate chooses to recommence the trial he must recommence by resuming and re-examining the witnesses. But he cannot go to any stage previous to that. He cannot dismiss the complaint under section 203—7 C P L R 36 or refer the case to the Police under section 6 for inquiry and report—9 Mad 38.

If a charge has already been framed by the preceding Magistrate the succeeding Magistrate cannot cancel the charge—38 Mad 385, 1903 P R 14, L W 1244. The principle is that if the proceedings before the preceding Magistrate have developed into the stage of a trial by the frame of a charge the succeeding Magistrate cannot go beyond the stage of trial and transform the trial proceedings into an inquiry by cancellation of the charge—38 Mad 385. And since the succeeding Magistrate cannot cancel the charge an order subsequently passed letting off the accused is one of acquittal and not one of discharge—Simhadri v. Sitarani 2 L W 1244, 38 Mad 385.

If a trial is commenced de novo by the succeeding Magistrate he must observe all the procedure of the trial and cannot omit any part of the procedure. Where in a de novo trial the Magistrate omitted to examine the prosecution witnesses (who had already been examined by the preceding Magistrate) but allowed them to be cross-examined by the defence it was held that the trial was not in due compliance with this section and ought to be set aside—12 C W N 138. A de novo trial means the trial from the beginning of the case. The object of granting a de novo trial is to enable the Magistrate who hears the case to see the way in which the witnesses give evidence before him to mark their demeanour and thereby to be in a position to judge of their credibility. This object is lost if the witnesses are not examined ab initio but are only allowed to be cross-examined by the accused. Such a procedure is not a de novo trial and the conviction of the accused must be set aside—Narayana v. Bojanna 49 M L J 473 26 Cr L J 1596. Similarly, where the Magistrate holding the de novo trial merely read over to the accused the deposition of the prosecution witnesses (recorded by the preceding Magistrate) though he allowed them to be cross examined the procedure was held to be illegal—9 L B R 92 Mangal Singh v. Crown 1919 P W R 16 22 Cr L J 119 (Fah).

Transfer of Magistrate to his original place—Before the conclusion of the trial the trying Magistrate was transferred. Thereupon the case was transferred to the file of a superior Magistrate who began to try it de novo. Afterwards the original Magistrate was re-transferred to his original place and the superior Magistrate transferred the case to him with a direction to proceed from where he had originally left it. It was held that the inferior Magistrate must try the case de novo and could not proceed from where he had originally left the case because all that had taken place before the inferior Magistrate originally had been superseded—Daroga Choudhury v. Emp., 20 Cr L J 638 (Pat) Jago Singh v. Emp. 20 Cr L J 920 (Pat) 3 All 563.

Transfer of case to the transferred Magistrate—A Magistrate was transferred after he had finished the major portion of the trial of a case. The succeeding Magistrate granted a de novo trial. But the District Magistrate was of opinion that as only a small amount of work remained to be done in the case it could be best done by the Magistrate who had tried the case and so he (Dt. Magistrate) transferred the case to the original Magistrate. Held that even the original Magistrate to whom the case was thus transferred could not take up the case from the point at which he had left it but that he must start the case de novo because as soon as he was transferred all the proceedings which had previously taken place before him were wiped out—Sardar Khan Sahib v. Atanulla 47 M L J 926 26 Cr L J 510.

1015 Proviso (a)—Right of Accused—Under the proviso (a) the accused has a right to demand that the witnesses or any of them shall be resummoned or reheard. The policy of the law is that an accused should be able to claim a right not to be convicted by a Magistrate who has not himself heard the whole evidence—3 Lah 115. The accused can exercise his right under the proviso (a) in case of a trial only where a preliminary inquiry before commitment is transferred before frame of charge the accused is not as of right entitled to an inquiry de novo—3 Mad 18 1903 P R 14. Proceedings in a warrant case before a charge is framed are merely an inquiry and not a trial and if a case is transferred at that stage, the accused cannot demand a fresh examination of witnesses to be made by the succeeding Magistrate—Ramanathan v. King Emp. 46 Mad 719. But the accused is not altogether without a remedy because as soon as the charge is framed by the succeeding Magistrate he can under sec 56 recall all the prosecution witnesses whose evidence has been taken and thus he has a right equivalent to that of demanding a de novo trial—Palaniandy v Emperor 32 Mad 218 (219). But according to the Calcutta High Court a trial commences as soon as the case is called on with the Magistrate on the Bench the accused on the dock and the representatives of the prosecution and for the defence are present in Court for the hearing of the case. The proper time for the accused to ask for resummoning and rehearing of the witnesses is as soon as the trial commences before the second Magistrate—Gomar Sirdar v Q E 25 Cal 863. In trials of summons cases and in summary trials the time when the accused is to demand that the witnesses shall be resummoned and reheard is when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings—Sahib Din v Crown 3 Lah 115.

According to the Calcutta High Court this proviso applies only to a trial and does not apply to an inquiry under section 145 consequently a Magistrate has power to proceed with the inquiry of a case under sec. 145 where a portion of the evidence has been recorded by his predecessor and he is not bound to start the proceeding de novo on the application of the accused—Syed Sadek v Sachindra 37 C L J 128. Sandi Singh v Govind 5 P L T 237 25 Cr L J 39. But a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has laid down that the proviso (a) applies to an inquiry under sec 117 because such inquiry according to sub section (2) of sec 117 is made in the manner prescribed for conducting trials in summons or warrant cases and in fact has all the features of a trial—Venkata Chinnaya v King Emp 43 Mad 511 (F B). This is also the view of the Oudh Court—Basu Nath v Emp 27 O C 323 25 Cr L J 1380.

The accused person must himself claim or waive the right. Where a case was transferred from one Magistrate to another and during the arguments on the transfer application the pleader for the accused stated his intention not to have a de novo trial in the Court to which the case was transferred and subsequently the accused demanded a trial de novo it was held that there was no waiver of the right under this section and that there must be a de novo trial—19 Cr L J 657 (Nag).

The Magistrate is not bound to ascertain from the accused whether he wishes to exercise the right conferred by this proviso. This section confers the right on the accused to demand and does not prescribe that the Magistrate shall ask the accused whether he will exercise the right or not—Nga Po v H F U B R (1912) 151. The Magistrate is not bound to have the accused brought before him to ascertain whether he wishes to exercise this right—1384 P R 6. An omission on the part of the Magistrate to ask the accused whether he wants evidence to be reheard is a mere irregularity curable by sec 537. In (1916) U B R 201

Or 108 and 1 B R 87 however it has been held that it is necessary for the Magistrate to acquaint the accused with the fact that he is entitled to have the witnesses re-called and re-examined. Though the law does not absolutely require this to be done the procedure should be followed as a matter of practice—1 B R 87

But there is no doubt that if the accused wants the evidence to be reheard the Magistrate must recommence the trial—9 I B R 97 and the refusal by the Magistrate to do so would be an illegality not curable by sec 537—1903 P R 3 5 Cal 863

An accused person cannot demand a de novo trial on the transfer of a trying Magistrate merely on the ground that that Magistrate had not heard his counsel—Chandika Prasad v. A. E. 28 O C 109 25 Cr L J 1075

Where the accused claims under this section to have the witnesses re-examined by the succeeding Magistrate the witnesses should be summoned without the payment of any fees—Fliss v. Ezekiel 8 Bur L T 43

1016 Proviso (b) —A District Magistrate can under proviso (b) set aside a conviction passed by a first class Magistrate in the district though no appeal lies from his order to the District Magistrate—9 Bom 100 12 Cal 473 7 All 853 8 Mad 18

1017 Subsection (2) —The procedure laid down in this section does not apply to proceedings stayed under sec 346—1905 P L R 91 Thus where a Magistrate trying a case was of opinion that the accused deserved a severer punishment than he could inflict and stayed the proceedings and submitted the case to the District Magistrate under sec 346 it was held that the District Magistrate could not convict the accused on the evidence recorded by the referring Magistrate even though the accused did not want the evidence to be reheard—1905 P R 25 19 Cr L J 625 (Pat) In such a case the accused has no power to waive his right to a trial de novo and the failure to hold a trial de novo is an illegality which vitiates the whole trial and is not merely an irregularity covered by sec 537—19 Cr L J 625 (Pat)

This subsection as now amended further lays down that the procedure of this section does not apply to sec 349. Even prior to this amendment it was held that the superior Magistrate to whom a case had been transferred under section 349 could act upon the evidence already recorded by the subordinate Magistrate and was not bound to hold a de novo trial—2 Weir 428 This is now made clear by the present amendment. See A. E. v. Dodo 18 S L R 216 26 Cr I J 1363

1018 Subsection (3)—Transfer of proceedings —Subsection (1) applies where the Magistrate is transferred from one place to another the case remaining in the same Court. But does that subsection apply where a case is transferred from one Magistrate to another under section 57

the Magistrates remaining in the same post? In other words does that subsection apply to transfer of cases as well or is it confined only to transfer of Magistrates only? There was some difference of opinion under the old section as to this question. In the following cases it has been held that this section covers cases where proceedings are transferred by section 58 from the Court of one Magistrate to that of another because as soon as a case is transferred from one Magistrate to another the former ceases to exercise jurisdiction in the case within the meaning of this section—35 Cal 457 39 Cal 781 37 Mad 218 1916 U B R 2nd Or 108 71 C W N 755 40 All 307 36 All 315 20 Cr L J 41 (Mag) 20 Cr L J 196 1 Bur L T 25 Cr L J 8 (Pat) 1 P I T 679 But the contrary view was taken in the following cases—1889 A W N 130 17 C W N 140 1 L B R 301 17 All 66 14 All 346 1 N I R 187

To remove this conflict of opinion subsection (3) has been added adopting the former view. There has been some difference of opinion as to the position when cases are transferred from one Magistrate to another otherwise than from a predecessor to a successor in office. The amendment provides that the Magistrate from whom the case is transferred shall be deemed to cease to have jurisdiction within the meaning of this section—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

350A No order or judgment of a Bench of Magistrates shall be in aid by reason only of a change having occurred in the constitution of the Bench in any case in which the Bench by which such order or judgment is passed is duly constituted under Sections 15 and 16 and the Magistrates constituting the same have been present on the Bench throughout the proceedings

Changes in constitution of Benches

This section has been added by Sec. 93 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act VIII of 1933.

In the Bill of 1931 it was intended to add the following subsection to section 350—

(4) The provisions of this section shall apply so far as may be to proceedings before any Bench of Magistrate constituted under section 15 wherever the Magistrates sitting together in any proceeding are not the same as those who were sitting together at the last hearing thereof.

In other words it was intended to lay down that if during the hearing of a trial any Magistrate of a Bench was absent and was replaced by another such a change would not affect the proceeding and the trial need not be commenced de novo the new Magistrate would be able to act on the evidence already recorded. But this clause did not meet with the approval of the Joint Committee who observed:—We think however that the new sub section (4) which has been introduced in the Bill to deal with the case of Benches goes somewhat too far and we have substituted for it a new section after section 350 which in our opinion gives effect to the law as laid down by the High Courts. Briefly it provides that a judgment of a Bench shall be valid when the Bench is duly constituted at the time of passing the judgment and the judgment is passed by Magistrates all of whom have heard the proceedings throughout — Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

1019 Hearing by one Bench decision by another — A case must be decided by the same Bench which heard the evidence and arguments. Where the evidence for the prosecution was taken before two Honorary Magistrates and on a subsequent day the evidence for the defence was taken and judgment delivered by a Bench consisting of one of those Magistrates and another the High Court set aside the decision and ordered a new trial—20 Cal 870 12 Cal 558 38 Mad 304 3 Cal 194 41 All 116 U B R (1918) 4th Or 118 7 Lab 237

1020 Absence of some of the Magistrates — Where a trial was begun before a Bench of seven Magistrates and when the judgment was pronounced only five out of the seven were present it was held that the mere circumstance that two out of the seven Magistrates were absent on the day on which the accused was convicted did not affect the legality of the conviction as the other five Magistrates attended the trial from beginning to end—21 Mad 246 1914 M W N 867 Where two Magistrates who decided a case sat throughout the trial and constituted as quorum of the Bench the trial will not be vitiated by the mere fact that two other Magistrates who were not necessary to the quorum and who were present at the time of the commencement of the inquiry were not on the Bench at the time of the decision of the case—3 N L R 67 But where in the course of the trial by a Bench consisting of a stipendiary and two honorary Magistrates one of the honorary Magistrates was absent and important evidence was recorded in his absence but on the following day he resumed his seat and joined with the other Magistrates in signing the order for the conviction of the accused it was held that the conviction was bad—13 C L R 12 So also where in a trial before a Bench of Magistrates one of the members constituting the Bench was absent on the date when witnesses were examined it was held that the conviction of the accused was bad and that there must be a retrial—36 M L J 362 The trial of an accused by a Bench of Magistrates one of whom did not hear the entire evidence is bad in law and a conviction by such Bench cannot be sustained—1912 P L R 1 22 Cr L J 511 23 Bom L R 833 It is wrong that a Magistrate who has been absent during a part of the trial should express an opinion on evidence which he has not heard and possibly influence his fellow

Magistrates who were in a better position than he was to decide the case—23 Bom L R 833 Only those persons who have heard the whole of the evidence can decide the case—8 L B R 463 So also where a case was heard by a Bench consisting of two Magistrates who formed the quorum but on the day on which judgment was pronounced one of the members was replaced by another who had not heard the evidence and judgment was pronounced convicting the accused it was held that as one of the members on the occasion when judgment was pronounced did not hear the evidence it was difficult to say that the accused were not prejudiced and consequently the trial was illegal—41 All 116 In order that the conviction should be legal it must be by a quorum of Magistrates required under the rules each of whom has heard the whole evidence—13 S L R 166 Where a case was tried by a Bench of Magistrates one of whom recorded the evidence while the other was sitting close by and going on with another case held that as the hearing took place practically before only one of the Honorary Magistrates the order must be set aside and the case tried de novo—Sullan v Shamser 25 O C 18 23 Cr L J 696

Want of quorum —Where a Bench of Magistrates established by the Local Government is under the notification establishing it to consist of not less than two members one member of the Bench cannot alone adjudicate upon a case—1907 A W N 148 Similarly a trial by two members of a Bench which according to rules must consist of not less than three members is bad in law—16 Mad 410 Thus where a Bench of three Magistrates constituted under the rules commenced a trial and heard the prosecution evidence but afterwards one member of the Bench was absent and the remaining two Magistrates went on with the trial heard the defence evidence and convicted the accused held that the trial having been in contravention of the rules was void The trial ought to have been adjourned till the absent member was present or it should have been held afresh before a different set of Magistrates—44 Bom 400

351 (1) Any person attending a Criminal Court, although not under arrest or upon a summons, may be detained by such Court for the purpose of inquiry into or trial of any offence of which such Court can take cognizance and which from the evidence may appear to have been committed, and may be proceeded against as though he had been arrested or summoned

(2) When the detention takes place in the course of an inquiry under Chapter XVIII or after a trial has been begun, the proceedings in respect of such person shall be commenced afresh, and the witnesses reheard

1021 This section applies even though a trial has actually been begun In 14 W R 20, it was held that this section could not be applied where the trial was actually being proceeded with, because such a course deprived the prisoner of the opportunity of preparing his defence and subjected him to be tried on evidence which was taken before he was put into the position of a prisoner This ruling is no longer good law, because subsection (2) provides for the difficulty presented in that ruling and requires the proceedings to be commenced afresh

This is a self contained section and the cognisance which a Magistrate takes under this section in respect of an offence is independent of the provisions of Sec 190 (c) Consequently the provisions of section 191 are also inapplicable where a Magistrate takes cognisance under this section —5 N L R 113 As to taking cognisance against a witness in a case, see notes under section 190 (c)

352. The place in which any Criminal Court is held for the purpose of inquiring into or trying Courts to be open. any offence shall be deemed an open Court to which the public generally may have access, so far as the same can conveniently contain them

Provided that the presiding Judge or Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, order at any stage of any inquiry into, or trial of, any particular case, that the public generally, or any particular person, shall not have access to or be or remain in, the room or building used by the Court.

1022 Court to be open — Jail trial — This section does not necessarily make a trial in a jail invalid where there is nothing to show that admittance was refused to any one who desired it or that the prisoners were unable to communicate with their friends or counsel But it is undesirable to hold trials in a jail because it is difficult to get counsel to appear in jail — Sahas Singh v Crown, 1917 P W R 21

The evidence of a Ghosha woman should be taken behind a purdah at a private place where she can come, in the presence of the accused only, the Judge taking such precaution as he can to secure her identity —2 Weir 432

Exclusion of police Officers — A police officer who has investigated

into a case should not be allowed to be present before a Magistrate when he records a confession made by the accused—1885 A W N 221

This section gives power to the Court of ordering that any particular person shall not remain in the room used by the Court. It makes no exception in the case of a Police officer. When the accused person objects to the presence of a Police officer or other person the Magistrate has to decide whether the accused's fear of prejudice to his case is reasonable considering the intelligence and susceptibilities of the class to which he belongs and not merely whether the presence is convenient or helpful to the Court or the prosecution. It is not advisable that a Police officer interested in the case proceeding before the Magistrate should receive exceptional treatment as a seat on a dais as it is calculated to breed suspicion in the mind of the accused as to the independence of the Magistrate—Nathu Singh v Emp 8 N L J 95 26 Cr L J 1130

CHAPTER XXV.

OF THE MODE OF TAKING AND RECORDING EVIDENCE IN INQUIRIES AND TRIALS

353 Except as otherwise expressly provided, all evidence taken under Chapters XVIII, XX, XXI, XXII, and XXIII shall be taken in the presence of the accused, or, when his personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of his pleader

Evidence to be taken in presence of accused.

1023 Scope of section.—This section lays down that all evidence shall be taken in the presence of the accused and it includes both the evidence for the prosecution as well as for the defence. Where, after all the prosecution witnesses were examined the accused absconded, and the witnesses named by him were examined in his absence and he was convicted the conviction was held to be illegal—Nga Po Shain v K E, U B R (1912) 4th Q 152

If the witnesses are not examined in the presence of the accused, the trial is invalid and the conviction will be set aside—2 N W P H C R 49. An order is wholly illegal if it is based on evidence which is recorded behind the back of a party at a time when he was not a party to the proceeding at all—Narayan v Chandrabhaga Bai, 26 Cr L J 1289 (Nag). When a pardanashin lady was examined in a passage screened from the direct view of the Court and her voice could be perfectly heard in the Court and by the accused and he made no objection it was held that the evidence was virtually heard in the presence of the accused—1887 P R 41. But pardanashin ladies should not be generally summoned to appear in Court to give evidence but may be examined on commission—4 Cal 20, 12 All 69 5 All 92.

Two trials were held of two sets of accused who were the opposite parties in a fight in each case the accused wanted the evidence for the prosecution in the cross-case to be treated as defence evidence, and the Sessions Judge did so. Held that in such case the defence evidence, being one given by the prosecution in the other case, was obviously one given in the absence of the accused. This was a violation of the provisions of this section and was not only irregular but illegal—Illu v Crown 4 Lah 376, Muhammad v Emp 25 Cr L J 351 (Lah). If a commitment is made on evidence taken in the absence of the accused the commitment is void, and the subsequent trial must be set aside—Khanan v Crown 1913 P L R 260. Where the evidence of witnesses taken in the absence of the prisoner at a former trial was read out to them and put in as evidence at the present trial it was held that the proceeding was irregular and prejudicial to the prisoner, and that such witnesses should have been sub-

into a case should not be allowed to be present before a Magistrate when he records a confession made by the accused—1885 A W N 221

This section gives power to the Court of ordering that any particular person shall not remain in the room used by the Court. It makes no exception in the case of a Police officer. When the accused person objects to the presence of a Police officer or other person the Magistrate has to decide whether the accused's fear of prejudice to his case is reasonable considering the intelligence and susceptibilities of the class to which he belongs and not merely whether the presence is convenient or helpful to the Court or the prosecution. It is not advisable that a Police officer interested in the case proceeding before the Magistrate should receive exceptional treatment as a seat on a dais as it is calculated to breed suspicion in the mind of the accused as to the independence of the Magistrate—Nathu Singh v Emp 8 N L J 95 26 Cr L J 1130

353 Except as otherwise expressly provided, all evidence taken under Chapters XVIII, XX, XXI, XXII, and XXIII shall be taken in the presence of the accused, or, when his personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of his pleader

1023 Scope of section—This section lays down that all evidence shall be taken in the presence of the accused and it includes both the evidence for the prosecution as well as for the defence. Where, after all the prosecution witnesses were examined the accused absconded, and the witnesses named by him were examined in his absence and he was convicted, the conviction was held to be illegal—Nga Po Shain v A E, U B R (1912) 4th Q 152

Two trials were held of two sets of accused who were the opposite parties in a fight in each case the accused wanted the evidence for the prosecution in the cross-case to be treated as defence evidence, and the Sessions Judge did so. Held that in such case the defence evidence, being one given by the prosecution in the other case was obviously one given in the absence of the accused. This was a violation of the provisions of this section and was not only irregular but illegal—Allu v Crown 4 Lah 376, Muhammad v Emp 25 Cr L J 551 (Lah). If a commitment is made on evidence taken in the absence of the accused, the commitment is void, and the subsequent trial must be set aside—Khanan v Crown 1913 P L R 260. Where the evidence of witnesses taken in the absence of the prisoner at a former trial was read out to them and put in as evidence at the present trial it was held that the proceeding was irregular and prejudicial to the prisoner, and that such witnesses should have been sub to a fresh oral examination in the presence of the prisoner—12 W R 3

The Magistrate should not only take the evidence in the presence of the accused but his record must show on the face of it that he has done so. The Magistrate should by the use of a few apt words on the face of the deposition make it apparent that he had taken the evidence in the presence of the accused—10 Att 174

When his personal attendance is dispensed with—See Sec 205. The presence of an accused person may be dispensed with on ground of his ill health—Emp v King 14 Bom L R 236. A respectable pardanashin woman should not ordinarily be compelled to appear in person in the first instance unless and until there is a strong likelihood of the charge being proved—1909 P W R 5, 45 Mad 359 and where her presence is dispensed with, the evidence may be recorded in the presence of her pleader—1908 P W R 20 45 Mad 359

354. In inquiries and trials (other than summary trials)

Manner of recording evidence outside presidency-towns under this Code by or before a Magistrate (other than a Presidency Magistrate) or Sessions Judge, the evidence of the witnesses shall be recorded in the following manner

355 (1) In summons cases tried before a Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate, and in cases of the offences mentioned in sub section (1) of Section 260, clauses (b) to (m) both inclusive, when tried by

Record in summons cases and in trials of certain offences by first and second class Magistrates a Magistrate of the first or second class, and in all proceedings under Section 514 (if not in the course of a trial), the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness as the examination of the witness proceeds

(2) Such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate with his own hand, and shall form part of the record

(3) If the Magistrate is prevented from making a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of his inability to do so, and shall cause such memorandum to be made in writing from his dictation in open Court, and shall sign the same, and such memorandum shall form part of the record

1024 Scope of section:—In summons cases, the deposition may be recorded in the form of a memorandum, but it is not necessary that the recorded deposition should be read over to the accused and an omission to do so cannot be regarded as a fatal defect—2 Weir 433

In cases other than those mentioned in this section, the evidence cannot be recorded in the form of a mere memorandum, if it is so recorded, the conviction will be set aside—2 Weir 432

In cases referred to in section 260, if they are tried summarily, the substance of the evidence must be embodied in the judgment, as well as the particulars mentioned in section 264. If those cases are tried regularly, instead of summarily, the procedure of this section is to be followed—3 L. B. R. 3

In proceedings under Chapter XXXVI (maintenance proceedings) the evidence ought not to be recorded as in summary trials, but in the manner provided by this section—20 Cal 351

There is no provision as to the language in which the memorandum is to be recorded. But there is also no provision which renders it illegal for an Indian second class Magistrate to record the memorandum in English. Such a procedure is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the trial, unless a failure of justice has been occasioned thereby—19 Mad 269

Under Sub-section (2) the Magistrate must sign the record, if he omits to do so the illegality vitiates the trial—3 P. L. T. 322

356 (1) In all other trials before Courts of Session and Magistrates (other than Presidency Magistrates), and in all inquiries under Chapters XII and XVIII, the evidence of each witness shall be taken down in writing in the language of the Court by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge, or in his presence and hearing and under his personal direction and superintendence, and shall be signed by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge

(2) When the evidence of such witness is given in English, Evidence given in the Magistrate or Sessions Judge may English take it down in that language with his own hand, and, unless the accused is familiar with English, or the language of the Court is English, an authenticated translation of such evidence in the language of the Court shall form part of the record

(- A) When the evidence of such witness is given in any other language, not being English, than the language of the Court, the Magistrate or Sessions Judge may take it down in that language with his own hand, or cause it to be taken down in that language in his presence and hearing and under his personal direction and superintendence, and an authenticated translation of such evidence in the language of the Court or English shall form part of the record

(3) In cases in which the evidence is not taken down in writing by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge, he shall, as the examination of each witness proceeds, make a memorandum of the substance of what such

Memorandum when evidence not taken down by the Magistrate or Judge himself witness deposes, and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge with his own hand, and shall form part of the record

(4) If the Magistrate or Sessions Judge is prevented from making a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of his inability to make it

Change—Sub section (2A) has been added by section 96 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reason is thus stated: 'Section 356 does not provide for evidence being taken down in any other language than that of the Court or, if the language of the Court is not English in English. The result is a certain loss of accuracy when ever evidence is given in a third language, as it has to be translated into and taken down in the language of the Court or in English. The object of the amendment is to secure greater accuracy and to avoid waste of time in translation.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921)

The words 'or cause it to be taken down by the superintendent in sub-section (2A) did not exist in the Bill or Report but were added during the Debate in the Legislative Assembly to meet the case of a Magistrate or Judge who does not know the language in which the evidence is given. In such cases it will be necessary for the Magistrate or Judge to have the statement recorded in the language in which the evidence is given'—Legislative Assembly Debates 27th February 1923 page 2035

1025 Record of Evidence—The provisions of this section are imperative, and omission to record the evidence in the mode prescribed by this section is a material irregularity sufficient to set aside the proceedings—19 Cr L J 235 (Pat), 1891 A W N 145. Where a Magistrate made no vernacular record of the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses, the procedure was held to be illegal—1890 A W N 164. Udit Naran v Emp, 17 A L J 1146

The provisions of sub-section (1) are imperative and the entire evidence must be recorded fully either by the Magistrate himself, or by somebody else under the direction of the Magistrate. In the latter case (i.e., where the evidence is recorded by any person other than a Magistrate), the Magistrate should under sub-section (3) make a memorandum of the evidence. But sub-section (3) does not override the provisions of sub-section (1), but is merely supplementary to it. In other words the fact that the Magistrate is making a memorandum of the evidence does not do away with the necessity of the evidence being fully recorded by some other officer of the Court. Where a Magistrate in a proceeding, under section 145, neither recorded the evidence fully in his own hand, nor caused it to be recorded fully by any body else, but simply made a memorandum of the evidence, purporting to act under subsection (3), it was held that the provisions of subsection (1) not being complied with, the whole proceedings of the Magistrate must be set aside—42 Cal 381

Where there is a discrepancy in a material part of the evidence of the principal prosecution witnesses between the record in the vernacular in which that witness gave evidence and the record in English, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt created thereby. Generally speaking, the evidence as recorded in the vernacular in which the witness deposed is entitled to a greater weight and is more reliable than the record made in the English language, but where the Magistrate who made the English record was an experienced Magistrate fully conversant with the vernacular in which the witness gave his evidence the English record is also reliable, but all the same, the accused is entitled to the benefit of any doubt caused by the discrepancy between the two records—Sadhu Singh v Crown 24 Cr L J 624 (Lah)

357 (1) The Local Government may direct that in any Language of record of district or part of a district, or in proceedings before any Court of Session, evidence or before any Magistrate or class of Magistrates, the evidence of each witness shall, in the cases referred to in Section 356, be taken down by the Sessions Judge or Magistrate with his own hand and in his mother-tongue, unless he is prevented by any sufficient reason from taking down the evidence of any witness, in which case he shall record the reason of his inability to do so and shall cause the evidence to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court

(2) The evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Sessions Judge or Magistrate, and shall form part of the record

Provided that the Local Government may direct the Sessions Judge or Magistrate to take down the evidence in the English language, or in the language of the Court, although such language is not his mother tongue

1026 The authority conferred on an officer by this section is personal to that officer and remains in force only so long as he remains in the particular district in which it has been conferred—5 M H C R App 9. Therefore, where a Magistrate empowered to record the deposition in his own handwriting while in district B did the same when he was transferred to another district, under the belief that the authority previously given to him still remained in force and committed the accused for trial, it was held that the Magistrate's proceeding was irregular but since the accused was not prejudiced thereby, his commitment was not set aside—2 Weir 434

The plea of the accused need not be recorded in the words of the very language in which it is made, when it is a foreign language, the for

must be in the language in which it is interpreted to the Court—5 Cal 826

358 In cases of the kind mentioned in Section 355, the Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, take down the evidence of any witness in the manner provided in Section 356, or, if within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Magistrate the Local Government has made the order referred to in Section 357, in the manner provided in the same section

1027 The ordinary and proper and convenient way of recording evidence is to take it down in the first person exactly as spoken by the witness—11 W. R. 36 The Judge should in taking down evidence adhere as far as possible to the words actually used either in the question or in the answer given by the witness. The provisions of law will not be complied with by recording a more or less accurate paraphrase of the evidence given by a witness—11 Bur. L. R. 8 The Judge is not bound to make a verbatim record of any particular questions and answers. It is left to the discretion of the Judge if either side specially requests him to do so—11 Bur. L. R. 8

359 (1) Evidence taken under Section 356 or Section 357 shall not ordinarily be taken down in the form of question and answer but in the form of a narrative

(2) The Magistrate or Sessions Judge may, in his discretion take down or cause to be taken down, any particular question and answer

360 (1) As the evidence of each witness taken under Section 356 or Section 357 is completed, it shall be read over to him in the presence of the accused if in attendance, or of his pleader, if he appears by pleader, and shall, if necessary, be corrected

(2) If the witness denies the correctness of any part of the evidence when the same is read over to him, the Magistrate or Sessions Judge may, instead of correcting the evidence, make a memorandum thereon of the objection made to it by the witness and shall add such remarks as he thinks necessary

(3) If the evidence is taken down in a language different from that in which it has been given and the witness does not understand the language in which it is taken down, the evidence so taken down shall be interpreted to him in the language in which it was given, or in a language which he understands

1028 Object and Scope of Section—The object of this section is to give an opportunity to the witnesses to explain or correct the statements made by them—4 P L W 44 19 Cr L J 169 This section is enacted for the protection of witnesses it provides that a witness in order to satisfy himself that the evidence which has been taken down is correct may have it interpreted to him if he desires it in a language which he understands—C L R 393

This section applies to evidence recorded under section 356 or 357, but not to evidence recorded under section 355 Where the evidence is recorded in the form of a memorandum under section 355 it is not incumbent on the Magistrate to read over the memorandum of the deposition to the witness—4 P L W 44 19 Cr L J 169 and omission to do so is not fatal to the conviction—2 Weir 433 When a case is tried summarily, it is not necessary that the evidence of witnesses should be read over to them—23 Cr L J 120 (Pat)

In an inquiry under sec 107 the evidence must be recorded as in a summons case (see sec 117) i.e. it must be recorded in the manner prescribed in section 355 and not as laid down in sec 356 or sec 357 Sec 360 does not apply to a case in which the evidence is recorded under sec 355 and hence in an inquiry under sec 107 it is not necessary that the deposition should be read over to the witness in the presence of the accused—Legal Remembrancer v Jafar 52 Cal 668 A I R 1925 Cal 940

But in an inquiry in a good behaviour case the provisions of section 360 will apply and failure to comply with those provisions would vitiate the inquiry or trial—Sanatan v Emp 52 Cal 632 41 C L J 352 A I R (1925) Cal 720 Azizab Khan v Emp 52 Cal 470 26 Cr L J 1233

This section applies to the evidence of witnesses and not to the examination of the accused—12 W R 44

This section applies to proceedings under section 145 and the evidence of each witness must be read over to him in the presence of the accused the term 'accused' being applicable to persons proceeded against under Chapter XII Even if the term accused does not apply to such persons still this section would cover the proceedings under Chapter XII, because, section 356 (which is referred to in this section) expressly mentions Chapter XII—Ram Narain v Dhonrai 3 P L T 291 23 Cr L J 125, Irwin Kumar v Puti 52 Cal 437 29 C W N 474 26 Cr L J 914 But a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has recently laid down that the parties to the proceedings under section 145 are not 'accused persons' and that therefore the provisions of sec 360 apply to proceedings under sec 145 only to this extent that the evidence of each witness must be read over to that witness and the attendance of the parties at the reading over is not necessary—Narendra v Sabarath 52 Cal 721 (F B) 29 C W N 701 41 C L J 479 26 Cr L J 1194 This decision practically overrules the case of Ishan Chandra v Hirday 29 C W N 475 26 Cr L J 915 where it was held that the word 'accused' not being applicable to the parties in a proceeding under Ch XII, section 360 had no application at all to such a proceeding and it was necessary to read over the deposition to the witnesses

In a later Patna case, it has been held that even an omission to read over the evidence to the witness is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate an order under sec 145—Sandi Smgh v Sri Govind, 5 P L T 237 25 Cr L J 89

1029 Deposition must be read over to witness—If the deposition is recorded in a language which the witness does not understand, it must be interpreted to the witness in the language which he understands. If the deposition is read over to the witness in a language which is neither understood by the accused nor by the witness, it is an illegality which materially prejudices the accused—8 W R 63. But if the witnesses did not require their depositions to be interpreted to them in their own language, the reading over the depositions to them in a language which they did not understand would not afford any ground for the accused to have his conviction set aside—7 C L R 393

The provisions of this section are obligatory and not merely directory. It is incumbent on the Judge to read over the deposition to each witness, even though such a procedure should occupy considerable time—42 Cal 957, 36 Cal 955. And a departure from such a practice might lead to considerable embarrassment and place a serious impediment in the administration of justice—36 Cal 955. The object of this section is to ensure the accuracy of the record and omission to comply with the provisions of this section is an illegality which vitiates the trial irrespective of whether the accused have been prejudiced or not and is not a mere irregularity curable by section 537 of the Code—Haronath v Sonai Mia 28 C W N 119 38 C L J 281 25 Cr L J 289 Hiralal v Emp 28 C W N 968 5 Cal 159 (Contra—Mohiuddin v Emp 4 Pat 488 6 P L T 154 26 Cr L J 811 4 Bur L J 213 3 Rang 612). It is not a sufficient compliance with this section if the Magistrate merely hands over the recorded deposition to the witness to read it for himself, and the witness reads it himself, because the section requires that the deposition must be read over in the presence i.e. in the hearing of the accused, in order that the accused should have an opportunity of correcting any mistake in it—42 Cal 240, Sahorati v Emp 26 Cr L J 951 (Cal) Id Jasur v Emp, 52 Cal 431 29 C W N 650. It is not a sufficient compliance with this section if the deposition is read by a witness himself, and then afterwards it is explained by the Judge to the accused in the absence of the witness—Jessarat v Emp, 29 C W N 526 26 Cr L J 1009. But the Patna High Court holds that even though a deposition is not read over to the witness according to the provisions of this section, but is read by the witness himself, still the deposition is legal evidence. In other words, non-compliance with this provision of the section does not vitiate the trial—Jagwa Dhannuk v A E 5 Pat 63 A I R 1926 Pat 232.

This section lays down that the evidence of each witness shall be read over to him as it is completed and this procedure should be strictly followed. It is not a sufficient compliance with this section to read out each sentence of the statement of a witness as it is being recorded—Madhawa v Emp, 22 Cr L J 669 (Lah). So also, it is not proper for the Magistrate to examine a number of witnesses and ask them to be in a room and then have the depositions read over to them at the end of the day's work. Such a procedure is not merely an irregularity but an illegality vitiating the trial—In re Kuppa Mudaher 49 M L J 421 26 Cr L J 1597 A I R 1925 Mad 1206 Ibdul Bari v K E 42 C L J 585 27 Cr L J 375 A I R 1926 Cal 157 Shamserali v Emp, 53 Cal 129 A I R 1926 Cal 563

The deposition must be read over to the witness in the presence of the accused so as to give the accused an opportunity to challenge the correctness of the record—Ramesh war v Emp 6 P I T 493 26 Cr L J 927 A conviction based upon evidence not read over in the presence of the accused is illegal and must be set aside—2 Weir 435 It is improper to have the deposition of the witness read over to him by a clerk in the verandah of the Court house though both the witness and the clerk were in view of the accused. Such a deposition cannot be admitted in evidence—Agro San v A F U B R (1912) 1st Or 123 If the accused is in attendance the deposition must be read over in the presence of the accused and not in the presence of his pleader. It is only when the accused appears by a pleader that the reading over of the evidence in the presence of the pleader is sufficient—Kasim Ali v Sarada Kripa 30 C W N 336 Where the accused appears by pleader the deposition of a witness may be read over in the presence of a pleader of one of several accused—36 Cal 808

There is nothing in the section to indicate the exact time when the deposition should be read over and if the deposition is read over at the close of the cross examination it fulfil the requirements and objects of the section 4 I L W 44 19 Cr L J 169

While the evidence of a witness is being read over to the accused it is highly improper for the Court to proceed with the evidence of the next witness. Such a procedure is a violation of the provision of this section and vitiates the inquiry or trial—Mank v A E 41 C L J 393 26 Cr L J 1207 Idiladdi v A F 26 Cr L J 1016 (Cal) 2 Weir 435 Dargahi v Emp 5 Cal 439 A I R 1925 Cal 831 The Rangoon High Court holds that such a procedure does not vitiate the trial but is a mere irregularity curable by sec 53—Abdul Rahman v A E 4 Bur L J 213 A I R 1926 Rang 53

When a deposition is not read over to a witness in the presence of the accused according to the provisions of Subsection (1) the witness cannot be prosecuted for perjury—6 Cal 762 36 Cal 925 12 C W N 845 3 P I T 291 Brahmadea v Emp 2 P L T 380 11 Bur L T 202 28 Mad 308 42 Mad 561 42 Cal 240 Contra—Tunya v Emp 12 Bur L T 167 where it is held that a witness can be prosecuted for perjury in spite of the fact that his deposition has not been read over to him in the presence of the accused the deposition should not be treated as a nullity merely because of the irregularity it can be proved by other evidence e g., by evidence that the witness admitted it to be correct when it was read over to him and by the evidence of the Judge or Magistrate who recorded it. So also it has been held in 8 M L N 117 and 21 M L J 411, that evidence not read over to the w

the presence of the accused may not be used as evidence against the accused but may be the basis of a prosecution of the witness for perjury

Under this section, the Magistrate is not required to record a memo randum at the end of each deposition that the deposition was read over in the presence of the accused, though it is much better to do so in order to prevent complaints as to his not having done so—Rameshwar v Emp 6 P L T 493 26 Cr L J 927 Bhagwat Singh v Emp 4 Pat. 231 6 P L T 73 26 Cr L J 932 But the absence of such a memorandum does not prove that the deposition was not read over—4 Pat 231

1030 Deposition may be corrected:—Before a deposition is closed, a witness should be given an opportunity of explaining and correcting any contradictions which it may contain, and the statement which the witness finally declares to be the true one must be taken to be that which he intended to make—Ratanlal 54 An honest witness who wishes to alter or correct a statement he has once made should be allowed to do so and should not be deterred from doing so by the fear of a criminal charge—10 Cal 937

If the Court instead of allowing the correction to be made, proceeds to make a memorandum according to sub section (2), such memorandum must be appended to the deposition and care should be taken that the practice and the form prescribed by law are exactly adhered to—13 W R 17

361 (1) Whenever any evidence is given in a language not understood by the accused, and he is present in person, it shall be interpreted to him in open Court in a language understood by him

Interpretation of evidence to accused or his pleader.

(2) If he appears by pleader and the evidence is given in a language other than the language of the Court, and not understood by the pleader, it shall be interpreted to such pleader in that language

(3) When documents are put in for the purpose of formal proof, it shall be in the discretion of the Court to interpret as much thereof as appears necessary

1031 This Section relates to the oral evidence of witnesses As to documentary evidence, though an accused has a right to have all or any part of the document used in his trial translated or interpreted to him yet it is not necessary to interpret formal documents such as Government Gazettes at length, that would be merely wasting time It would be enough if the prisoner were made to understand what they were and for what purpose they were used—15 W R 25

If the accused appears by a pleader who understands the language in which the evidence is given by the witness, the omission to interpret the evidence to the accused is not a material defect—24 W R 50

362 (1) In every case in which a Presidency Magistrate imposes a fine exceeding two hundred rupees or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months he shall either take down the evidence of the witnesses with his own hand or cause it to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court. All evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Magistrate and shall form part of the record.

Record of evidence in Presidency Magistrate's Courts

362 (1) In every case tried by a Presidency Magistrate in which an appeal lies, such Magistrate shall either take down the evidence of the witnesses with his own hand, or cause it to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court. All evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Magistrate and shall form part of the record.

Record of evidence in Presidency Magistrate's Courts

(2) Evidence so taken down shall ordinarily be recorded in the form of a narrative but the Magistrate may in his discretion take down or cause to be taken down any particular question or answer.

(2A) In every case referred to in sub section (1) the Magistrate shall make a memorandum of the substance of the examination of the accused. Such memorandum shall be signed by the Magistrate with his own hand and shall form part of the record.

(3) Sentences passed under Section 35 on the same occasion shall for the purposes of this section be considered as one sentence unless they are sentences of imprisonment ordered to run concurrently.

(4) In cases other than those specified in sub Section (1), it shall not be necessary for a Presidency Magistrate to record the evidence or frame a charge.

Change—Sub section (1) has been amended as shown in parallel columns. The italicised words in sub section (3) have been inserted and sub sections (2A) and (4) have been newly added by the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below.

1032 Scope—Summary trials—The provisions as to summary trials do not apply to trials before Presidency Magistrates. A case must be tried by them in the manner laid down in Chapter subject to the provisions of this section as to the recording of evidence—Ratanlal 539

Reference under Sec 123 (2)—In cases where the Presidency Magistrate makes a reference to the High Court under Sec 123 (2), he must duly record the evidence, but it is not necessary that he should record it as fully as a Mofussil Magistrate—13 C W N 318

Sub section (1):—"We think that the opening words of sub section (1) of section 362 require amendment. As the section stands, it seems to imply that a Presidency Magistrate, before he commences his inquiry, must make up his mind as to the maximum limit of the sentence which he will impose. We think that the sub section would read better as amended by us, compare the wording of section 264"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

But even this amendment does not improve the position, because in order to ascertain whether an appeal will lie from his sentence, the Presidency Magistrate will have to make up his mind whether he will pass a sentence of over six months' imprisonment or a fine exceeding two hundred rupees (Sec 411). The Joint Committee in confirming the above amendment has also admitted it—

"We are inclined to agree with those critics who point out that the re draft proposed in sub section (1) of section 362 does not get rid of the difficulty that a Magistrate has to make up his mind as to the sentence he will impose before he begins trying the case. We do not see how this difficulty can be got rid of but we think that the amendment proposed has the advantage of bringing the language of this section into conformity with the language of sections 263 and 264 and we would, therefore retain this sub-clause

"In order to meet difficulties that have arisen, we have introduced a sub section (2 A) laying down that Presidency Magistrates, in cases subject to appeal, shall make a memorandum of the substance of the examination of the accused, and we have introduced a new clause making a consequential amendment in sub sec (4) of sec 364

"The non official members, who constituted a majority in the Committee, expressed their dissatisfaction with the distinctions drawn in the Code between Presidency Magistrates and other Magistrates, and in particular with regard to this clause would have liked to see Presidency Magistrates required, in warrant cases at all events, to keep as full a record as any other Magistrates. But the Committee as a whole held that there was some force in the contention put forward by numerous High Court Judges that no change should be made in the Code affecting to any extent the special powers of Presidency Magistrates until a much fuller inquiry had been made into the question of their status powers and procedure. We desire to take this opportunity of placing on record our hope that it may be possible to appoint a small committee to undertake this investigation.—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

Where a Presidency Magistrate sentences an accused person to imprisonment for more than 6 months, he is bound to record the evidence of witnesses, even though the sentence is imposed for the purpose of the detention of the accused in a reformatory—Emp v Md Roshan 26 Bom L R 1232 26 Cr L J 454

1033 Sub section (2):—Mode of recording evidence.—Evidence should be recorded in the form of direct narration. Where a Presidency Magistrate, in contravention of the provisions of this section, recorded the evidence of some more or less formal witnesses in the form of an indirect narration, it was held that such irregularities in the mode of recording evidence, where no failure of justice had been occasioned thereby were cured by sec 537, and the trial was not on that account vitiated—In re Gulab Chand 18 Cr L J 336 (Mad)

It is the duty of the Magistrate, in recording evidence under this section, to take a note of all the material facts whether they appear in the course of the examination-in-chief or in the course of the cross examination—46 Cal 411

Sub section (3):—‘Unless concurrently’—“It is provided that when sentences in excess of one are passed which are ordered to run concurrently it is the heaviest sentence which determines the applicability of section 362”—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

1034 Sub section (4)—‘It is intended by this sub section to remove the uncertainty which at present exists regarding the duties of a Presidency Magistrate in recording evidence and framing a charge in petty cases’—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Sub-section (1) provides that the evidence must be fully recorded in cases where the Presidency Magistrate passes appealable sentences and there is no obligation on the Magistrate to record evidence in non appealable cases—31 Cal 983 33 Cal 1036 In a Bombay case it has been held that although the Magistrate has a discretion in cases not falling under this section to take down the evidence or not still this discretion should be exercised judicially in a reasonable spirit and not arbitrarily and there should be a record of the evidence so that the High Court in Revision may judge of the propriety or legality of the order passed by him—10 Bom L R 201 The new sub section (4) now totally dispenses with the necessity of recording evidence in non appealable cases

363 When a Sessions Judge or Magistrate has recorded the evidence of a witness, he shall also record such remarks (if any) as he thinks material respecting the demeanour of such witness whilst under examination

1035 The object of this section is to give to the Appellate Court some aid in estimating the value of the evidence recorded by the Magistrate—12 W R 51 Though in criminal cases the Appellate Court should be guided by the remarks made under this section as to the demeanour of witnesses, yet it is bound to independently consider the facts of the case—1898 P R 6 But where a Sessions Judge of experience had in the most emphatic manner stated that the demeanour of the wit was evasive, that they inspired him with no confidence, and that no man could be convicted on their testimony, the Appellate Court before accepting their testimony must be assured in the most positive and convincing manner that there was no ground for the Sessions Judge's criticism. Where the evidence is all oral, and its credibility is a mere matter of opinion, the opinion of the Court which heard the witnesses and noticed their demeanour must be treated as almost conclusive—Emp v Bishen Singh 1914 P L R 125

It is always unsafe for a Judge or a Magistrate to pronounce an opinion as to the credibility of a witness, until the whole of the evidence has been taken—2 Weir 435

364. (1) Whenever the accused is examined by any Magistrate, or by any Court other than how recorded a High Court established by Royal Charter or the Chief Court of Oudh, the whole of such examination, including every question put to him and every answer given by him, shall be recorded in full in the language in which he is examined, or if that is not practicable, in the language of the Court or in English, and such record shall be shown or read to him, or if he does not understand the language in which it is written, shall be interpreted to him in a language which he understands, and he shall be at liberty to explain or add to his answers

(2) When the whole is made conformable to what he declares is the truth, the record shall be signed by the accused and the Magistrate or Judge of such Court, and such Magistrate or Judge shall certify under his own hand that the examination was taken in his presence and hearing and that the record contains a full and true account of the statement made by the accused

(3) In cases in which the examination of the accused is not recorded by the Magistrate or Judge himself, he shall be bound * * * * * as the examination proceeds, to make a memorandum thereof in the language of the Court, or in English, -if he is sufficiently acquainted with the latter language, and such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Magistrate or Judge with his own hand, and shall be annexed to the record. If the Magistrate or Judge is unable to make a memorandum as above required, he shall record the reason of such inability.

(4) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to the examination of an accused person under Section 263, or in the course of a trial held by a Presidency Magistrate Change:—The words "Chief Court of Oudh" have been added by the Oudh Courts Act XXXI of 1925. The italicised words at the end of sub-section (4) have been added by the Criminal Procedure Code Second Amendment Act XXXVII of 1923. The object of this amendment is "to make it clear that in cases where an appeal lies the Presidency Magistrate shall take down a memorandum of the examination of the accused person as already provided in the new sub-section (2A) of section 362, and that in non appealable cases no record of the examination of the accused need be made"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1923, Part V, page 242). This amendment has been made in deference to the opinion of Shah J in 46 Bom 441 (at pp 447—448) in which his Lordship remarked that the provisions of section 364 should be relaxed so far as Presidency Magistrates are concerned.

The words "unless he is a Presidency Magistrate" which occurred in sub-section (3) have been omitted by the same Amendment Act.

1036 Scope and application of section—The examination of an accused person under this section is intended for the purpose referred to in sec 342 vi to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him but not to fasten the guilt on him—to Mad 293. The rules laid down in this section are applicable to the examination of the accused under section 342 of the Code—4 Bom 1 R 461 1 Bur 1 R 320.

This section applies only to examination of the accused during inquiries and trials and not during investigations which are governed by sec 164—to B H C R 166. But still the rules laid down in this section are equally applicable to confessions taken under sec 164 in the course of an investigation—1 Bom 219 1883 1 W N 243. See sec 164 (2).

This section applies to the record of statement made by an accused. A person against whom no process has been issued is not in the position of an accused person and if such person is examined in an inquiry under sec 202 his statement cannot be regarded as having been recorded under this section—32 Cal 1083.

This section does not apply where there has been no examination of the accused. The Magistrate only examines the accused when he thinks it necessary for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstance appearing in the evidence against him. The examination of an accused prior to commitment is in the discretion of the Magistrate. If the Magistrate does not examine the accused or if the accused is unwilling to submit to an examination, it is sufficient for the Magistrate to make a note of the fact and record it as a reason for not examining the accused—Crown v Dosu 11 S L R 52.

1037 Record of question and answer.—Every question and every answer must be recorded verbatim no matter whether relevant or irrelevant—15 W R (Cr Let) 3. Where the examination has not been recorded in full so as to include the questions and answers, as .

by this section, it is not admissible in evidence without further proof—2 B H C R 395, 2 B H C R 397, 2 B H C R 398

Where the Judge asked the accused persons as to whether they would make any statement or not and they replied in the negative, the Judge should record what the exact questions were that were put to the accused. Where in such a case there was no record made of the questions and answers and the only indication of it was to be found in the order sheet wherein the Judge made the following remark "The accused declined to make any statement in this Court and on being asked whether they would adduce evidence they replied in the negative," held that the provisions of section 364 were violated, and the trial having been vitiated by such omission, the accused should be retried—Emp v Nani Mandal, 52 Cal 403 41 C L J 50 26 Cr L J 761, Sarat Chandra v Emp, 52 Cal 446 26 Cr L J 1244 A I R 1925 Cal 821, Messer Bepari v A E, 29 C W N 939 26 Cr L J 1032

It is not necessary for the Magistrate to state in the body of the examination that the statement comprised every question put to the accused and every answer given by him, and that he had liberty to add to or explain his answers. Attestation at the foot of the examination is sufficient—15 W R 68

Where the confession of the accused was recorded in a simple narrative form instead of in the form of questions and answers as required by this section, and there was nothing to show that the accused was prejudiced thereby it was held that the irregularity did not affect the admissibility of the statement in evidence and was cured by sec 533—Emp v Deo Dat 45 All 166, Emp v Anta 1892 A W N 60, 8 Cal 616, 14 Cal 539. Although it is of great importance to record the questions put to the accused (because sometimes a statement made in answer to a question put may have a different meaning if considered without such question) still if the omission to record the questions does not affect the sense and meaning of the prisoner's statement, the omission will not make the statement inadmissible in evidence—12 C L R 120, 8 Cal 618 (Foot-note)

Record need not be in Magistrate's handwriting—There is nothing in this Code which necessitates a Magistrate to take down the examination of the accused in his own hand. It is enough if he appends a certificate that the examination was conducted in his presence and contains accurately all that was said by the accused—20 W R 50

1038 Language:—See Note 516 under sec 164. The law requires that ordinarily the statement of the accused must be recorded in the language in which it was made, the object being to represent the very words and expressions used so as to ensure accuracy and prevent misrepresentation and misconstruction of what was said—Q E v Sagal 21 Cal 642, Emp v Nani Mandal 52 Cal 403 41 C L J 50 26 Cr L J 761. This rule of law ought not to be deviated from unless it is shown that it was impracticable to write the statement in the language in which it was made. If the answers were not taken down in the language in which they were given, the irregularity cannot be cured by sec. 533—15 Cal 595, 17 Cal 862, 10 O C 112 Where the accused was examined by the Magistrate in Marathi and gave his answers in Marathi, the statements should be recorded in Marathi. It is illegal to record them in English—Ratanlal 633, 21 Bom 495 If however it is not practicable to record the statement in the language in which it is made, the law directs that the statement shall be recorded in the language of the Court or in English—21 Cal 642 Thus, where the confession of the accused person made in Bengali was recorded by the Magistrate in English, because he could not write Bengali well and there was no mohurrer with him at the time, it was held that there was no illegality—22 Cal 817 Where the Magistrate recorded the confession of the accused on a holiday, and since he could not get the service of any one to write Hindustani, he recorded the confession in English, translated it in Urdu to the accused who admitted it to be correct, held that the confession was properly recorded in accordance with the provisions of this section—Emp v. Bachanna, 1891 A W N 55 Where a confession made in Hindustani was recorded by a Muhammadan Magistrate in Bengali, the language of the Court, the High Court held that it could not be presumed that the Magistrate must have had sufficient acquaintance with Urdu so as to be able to record the statement in that language, and that in the absence of any evidence it should be presumed that the Magistrate found it impracticable to record the statement in Urdu—18 Cal 549 So also, in Emp v. Deo Dat, 45 All 166, Emp v. Anta, 1892 A W N 60, Ratti Ram v. Emp, 1899 P R 7, and 16 C P L R 122, although it was practicable for the Magistrate to record the statement in the language in which it was made, still an English record was held to be good, if it was translated to the accused in his own language, and no prejudice was caused to him, the irregularity being cured by sec. 533

If the confession of the accused is made in a foreign language, unknown to the Court or Magistrate, the Code does not require that it should be recorded in that language. In such a case, the record of the confession should be in the language in which it is conveyed to the Court by the interpreter—5 Cal 826 Where a statement was made by the accused in Manipuri and communicated to the Magistrate by an interpreter in Bengali, and the Magistrate recorded it in English, and there was also a record in Manipuri, but the two records differed, it was held that the record in Manipuri should be regarded as the proper record and the only evidence in the case—21 Cal 642

1039 'Record to be shewn to accused' etc :—Before a statement can be admitted in evidence, it is necessary to see that such statement has been deliberately made and recorded, and that after being recorded, it has been shown or read over to the accused so that he might be assured that his words have been correctly taken down—7 W R 49 An omission to read over and interpret to the accused the statement recorded by the committing Magistrate and to record any explanation or statement, the accused may make at the time, is an irregularity that vitiates trial. Merely recording in the judgment that the statement or nation of the accused was put in and read out to him is not a compliance with the requirements of the section—Fatu Santal v R E, 5 P L J 147 Where there was nothing to show that the record of the confessional statement made by the accused before the committing Magistrate was shown or read over to the accused, such statement cannot be used as evidence against him—Emp v Deuan Kahar, 4 P L T 186 This section requires that the record shall be shown or read over to the accused, and if he does not understand the language in which it is written, it must be interpreted in a language which he understands Where a Magistrate showed or read a confession recorded in English to the accused who did not understand English, the provisions of this section were not complied with—4 N W P H C R 16

1040 Sub section (2)—Record must be signed—The record of confession must be signed by the accused A record which does not bear the signature of the accused is not admissible in evidence until the defect is cured in the manner provided by sec 533—1883 A W N. 243 Where the signature or mark of the accused was not taken to the record of the statement made by him to a Magistrate, the defect can be cured by examining the Magistrate as a witness to prove that the statement recorded was duly made—1896 A W N 161, 23 Bom 221, 11 B H C R 237 Where the signature of the accused was not taken by the committing Magistrate and no objection was raised before the Sessions Court by his pleader on the ground of absence of signature, and no prejudice was caused to the accused it was held that under the circumstances of the case, the irregularity was not a sufficient ground for reversing the judgment—11 B H C R 237 The record must be signed by the accused himself in his own handwriting it cannot be signed by another person for the accused If so signed, it is inadmissible in evidence—11 B H C R 44 but now see section 533

If the accused is unable to write his mark (2 Weir 137) or thumb impression (45 All 166) is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section But if he can write his thumb impression is not sufficient—32 Cal 550

The signature of the accused must be taken in the presence of the Magistrate To take it in an adjoining room in the presence of a clerk and not in the immediate presence of the Magistrate is not a proper compliance with the provisions of this section—Ratanlal 687

Refusal to sign—Sub-section (2) involves only the Magistrate offering the record for the accused's signature, but it does not empower the Magistrate to require the accused to sign Therefore an accused who refuses to sign the record of statement does not commit an offence punishable under Sec 180 I P C That section of the Penal Code applies only when the Magistrate is legally empowered to require the accused to sign the statement—3 I B R 199, 4 Bom 15 But it has been laid down by the Allahabad High Court that the language of this section makes it compulsory upon the accused to sign the statement, the Magistrate is a public servant legally competent to require the accused to sign the statement, and if the accused refuses to do so, he commits an offence under Sec 180 I P C—39 All 399 So also, per Melville J in 4 Bom 15

Signature of Magistrate—The affixing of an unreadable signature to the statement of the accused is not a proper compliance with this section—15 W. R. 63

1041 Certificate—The absence of the certificate in the recorded examination of the accused is not necessarily fatal to its admissibility—7 B H C R 50 Where a Magistrate omitted to certify a confession as required by sec 364 and did not record the whole of the questions put to the accused the High Court declined to interfere where no prejudice resulted to the accused—2 Weir 436 A defect in the certificate to be attached by a Magistrate to the examination of the accused can be cured only by taking evidence that the accused duly made the statement recorded, either by examining the Magistrate or some other person who was present when the statement was recorded It can not be cured by examining a witness to prove that it was taken down in the handwriting of the Magistrate himself—8 C P L R 6 3 C W N 387, 2 B H C R 397, 22 Mad 15, 23 Bom 221 1909 P R 2 It cannot be cured by the addition of the certificate at the discretion of the District Magistrate after an appeal is disposed of—7 B H C R 50

This section does not prescribe any particular form of the certificate When a confession bore a certificate of the Magistrate containing the words taken by me but did not say that the confession was made in his hearing it was held that the certificate substantially complied with the requirements of this section—5 Cal 958

The certificate need not be in the handwriting of the Magistrate it is sufficient if it is signed by the Magistrate—8 W R 55

1042 Non compliance with the section—The rules laid down in this section should be strictly followed—1884 A W N 243 Magistrates should in all cases be careful to observe all the provisions of section 164 and this section for although various defects can be cured the value of the confession may be very much diminished by non-compliance with the strict letter of the law—1899 P R 7

Non-compliance with the formalities of this section may be remedied by Sec 533 by oral evidence (of the Magistrate who recorded it) that the accused duly made the statement recorded—23 Bom 221, 18 Cal 549 Where the confession though signed by the accused was not recorded in the manner prescribed by this section and there was no certificate showing that the record contained in full the statement made by the accused, it was admitted in evidence in spite of these defects, and held to be proved by its production—Ahmed Din v Emp 1881 P R 20, 1881 P R 21

But section 533 does not apply and cannot make a confession admissible where no attempt has been made to conform to the provisions of this section—9 Mad 274 Thus where no record whatever has been made of a confession such confession cannot be proved merely by oral evidence Section 533 deals with errors in the record and does not apply where no record whatever has been made of such a confession—35 All 260

Change—This section has been amended by section 99 of the Criminal Pro Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The word shall would make it compulsory upon High Courts to prescribe by rules the manner in which evidence should be taken down. The section will not of course limit the discretion of the High Court as to what form the rules should take.—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

We do not think it necessary that the Judges of the Court should take down the evidence themselves. But we are of opinion that there should certainly be some record.—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

CHAPTER XXVI

OF THE JUDGMENT

366 (1) The judgment in every trial in any Criminal Mode of delivering Court of original jurisdiction shall be judgment pronounced, or the substance of such judgment shall be explained,—

(a) in open Court either immediately after the termination of the trial or at some subsequent time of which notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders, and

(b) in the language of the Court, or in some other language which the accused or his pleader understands

Provided that the whole judgment shall be read out by the presiding Judge, if he is requested so to do either by the prosecution or the defence.

(2) The accused shall, if in custody, be brought up, or, if not in custody, be required by the Court to attend to hear judgment delivered, except where his personal attendance during the trial has been dispensed with and the sentence is one of fine only or he is acquitted, in either of which cases it may be delivered in the presence of his pleader

(3) No judgment delivered by any Criminal Court shall be deemed to be invalid by reason only of the absence of any party or his pleader on the day or from the place notified for the delivery thereof, or of any omission to serve or defect in serving, on the parties or their pleaders or any of them, the notice of such day and place

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit in any way the extent of the provisions of Section 537

The requirements of Sections 366 and 367 are not mere matters of form. The provisions of these sections are based upon good and substantial grounds of public policy, and whether they are or not, the Sessions Judges must obey them and not be a law to themselves—14 All 248

1043 Judgment—Judgment means the expression of opinion of the Judge or Magistrate arrived at after due consideration of the evidence and of the arguments—21 Cal 121 An order of dismissal of a complaint under section 203 is not a judgment—29 Mad 126 An order dismissing a case for default of appearance of the complainant is not a judgment—5 N L R 76 10 C L J 80 Judgment means a judgment of conviction or acquittal but not an order of discharge under section 209 or 253—28 Cal 652, 29 Cal 726 31 Mad 543 9 Bom L R 250 On the other hand, if the Magistrate after taking some evidence, however incomplete the evidence may be, enters into the merits of the complaint and makes an order of discharge, such an order is a judgment—28 Cal 652 The final order of acquittal on a petition of composition is not a judgment—1914 P R 29 because such an order is made without any consideration of the evidence

The judgment referred to in this section is a judgment passed in a trial the section does not therefore apply to final orders made in sanction proceedings under section 195—6 Bom L R 897 (Sanction proceedings, however, are now abolished)

1044 Delivery of Judgment—The delivery of judgment and the passing of sentence is an integral part of the criminal trial and must be done by the Judge himself It is not a mere formality, and a deliberate breach of this express provision of law is not a mere irregularity curable

by Section 537 Where on the date fixed for delivery of the judgment, the Judge being ill, he signed and dated his judgment and sent it to be translated to the accused by the interpreter, the Judge himself not being present in Court, and the judgment was so translated by the interpreter, it was an illegality and a retrial must be ordered—Rambit v Emp, 24 Cr L J 584 1 Bur L J 122 But the Allahabad High Court takes a more liberal view and holds that where a Magistrate wrote out a judgment, signed and dated it, but owing to physical incapacity had it read out by another Magistrate, it was at the most an irregularity which was covered by sec 537—Nur Md Khan v Emp, 21 A L J 137 24 Cr L J 173 A judgment which is not delivered is no judgment Where a Judge after writing his judgment but before delivering it, dies or leaves the Bench, his written judgment cannot be considered as a judgment, but it is merely an opinion—13 W R (Civil) 209 A judgment though written and signed, is inoperative until it is pronounced, and must be taken merely as an expression of opinion—Ramdhan v A E, 11 A L J 745

The judgment must be delivered in open Court—21 Cal 121

The judgment must be pronounced by the Judge or Magistrate who held the trial The duty of signing and delivering the judgment cannot be delegated by the presiding officer to another person Where a Magistrate, after holding trial in one district went away to another district and thence sent his judgment to the Magistrate of the former district to be delivered, and the District Magistrate delivered it, the trial was set aside and retrial ordered—1889 A W N 181, Baisnab Charan v Amn Ali, 50 Cal 664 38 C L J 202 24 Cr L J 489 But the Madras High Court and the Oudh Chief Court are of opinion that the delivery of the judgment by the successor of the Magistrate who wrote it is not illegal—In re Sankara Pillai 18 M L J 197 7 Cr L J 459, Chandika v Emp, 28 O C 109 11 O L J 725 See also 40 Mad 108, where it has been held that the succeeding Magistrate can date, sign and pronounce a judgment written by his predecessor, and thus adopt it as his own

The judgment must be pronounced in the presence of the accused Where the accused having absconded, the Magistrate passed sentence in his absence, and upon his re arrest pronounced the judgment again, it was held that the Magistrate should not have pronounced his previous judgment in the absence of the accused—Ratanlal 325, Crown v Sardar, 1917 P R 36 If, however, the judgment is one of acquittal or of fine only, it may be passed in the absence of the accused, under sub-section (2)—Crown v Jamal Khatun 6 S L R 206

The judgment in a criminal case must be passed without undue delay, as delay is not only unjust to the accused, as it prevents them from appealing at once, but is opposed to the principles of law—5 C P L R 24 In a trial by jury, it is not necessary, under section 367, to record a judgment, but only the heads of charges to the jury should be recorded, and these should be written out as soon as possible after the charge to the jury has been actually delivered, when the facts of the case are fresh in the mind of the Judge—36 Cal 281 In this case the charge to the jury was written 3 weeks after, and the High Court severely remarked upon the delay.

It is not necessary that the whole of the judgment should be read. It is sufficient if the substance of the judgment is delivered. Omission to read a portion in the judgment is a mere irregularity covered by section 537—2 Weir 711, 38 Mad 498

1045 Conviction or acquittal before judgment:—The judgment must always be written and delivered before sentence is passed. It is illegal to pronounce a sentence at the termination of the trial and to postpone the writing of the judgment to a future occasion—Punjab Circ p 239. In as much as the sentence in a case of conviction, and the direction to set the accused at liberty in the case of acquittal, can only follow on the decision and cannot precede it, and in as much as the decision must be contained in the written judgment, it must necessarily follow that the sentence is illegal if there is no written judgment when it is passed—14 All 242. Where the judgment was delivered after the order of acquittal was passed, the acquittal was set aside and a retrial ordered—1892 A W N 157. Where the judgment was written and delivered some days after the prisoners were convicted and sentenced, it was held that this was a violation of the express provisions of this section and was more than a mere irregularity, and the conviction and sentence must be set aside—27 Mad 237.

In some cases, however, it has been held that such an irregularity does not vitiate the whole proceedings unless there has been a failure of justice, such irregularity will be cured by Section 537—23 Cal 502, Crown v Moriokhan 5 S L R 131, 13 Bom L R 635, 21 Cal 121, 38 Mad 498, 45 Mad 913 (F B). Ita Md v Emp, 25 Cr L J 705 (Lah). Sec 497 (4) now provides for acquittal of the accused before judgment on taking a bond from him for appearance on the day of judgment.

Where a Magistrate died after pronouncing the sentence but before writing the judgment the High Court reversed the conviction and sentence and ordered a retrial—1 Bom L R 160. But in 2 Weir 438 it has been held that a conviction on a trial regularly held will not be set aside merely because the Magistrate had been unavoidably prevented from recording a judgment.

Loss of judgment—This section only imposes the condition that the judgment must be pronounced in open Court and imposes a few other conditions but such conditions do not include the condition that the record should not have been lost. In cases where the judgment has been lost, the appropriate course for a Judge is to re write the judgment from memory and from the materials on record, and place it on record—38 Mad 498.

367. (1) Every such judgment shall, except as otherwise expressly provided by this Code, be written by the presiding officer of the Court or from the dictation of such presiding officer in the language of the Court, or in English, and shall contain the point or points for determination, decision thereon and the reasons for the decision; and shall be dated and signed by the presiding officer in open Court at the time of pronouncing it, and where it is not written by the presiding officer with his own hand every page of such judgment shall be signed by him

(2) It shall specify the offence (if any) of which, and the section of the Indian Penal Code or other law under which, the accused is convicted, and the punishment to which he is sentenced.

(3) When the conviction is under the Indian Penal Code, and it is doubtful under which of two parts of the same section of that Code the offence falls, the Court shall distinctly express the same and pass judgment in the alternative

(4) If it be a judgment of acquittal, it shall state the offence of which the accused is acquitted and direct that he be set at liberty.

(5) If the accused is convicted of an offence punishable with death, and the Court sentences him to any punishment other than death, the Court shall in its judgment state the reason why sentence of death was not passed

Provided that, in trials by jury the Court need not write a judgment but the Court of Session shall record the heads of the charge to the jury

(6) For the purposes of this section, an order under Section 118 or Section 123, sub-section (3), shall be deemed to be a judgment.

1046 Change.—The italicised words in sub-section (1) and the new sub-section (6) have been added by Section 100 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

Under the old Section it was held that the judgment must be written by the Magistrate himself, he could not get it written by a clerk—Ratanlal 545, 6 Mad 396, and that if the judgment was written at the dictation of the Magistrate, and the Magistrate merely signed it, the procedure was illegal—4 C L J 415 The present Amendment in sub-section (1) will now allow such procedure

Language—Under this section, the judgment of a Criminal Court should be written in the language of the Court or in English Where an Honorary Magistrate wrote his judgment in Urdu instead of Hind, the language of the Court, it was held to be irregular, but such irregularity was cured by Section 537—4 C L J 232

1047 Contents of judgment.—The judgment must be self-contained and nothing should be left out. If any material finding is left out in the judgment the defect cannot be cured by the Magistrate's subsequent explanation to the Appellate Court—7 C L J 238. A judgment should contain sufficient particulars to enable a Court of Appeal to know what facts were found and how—Ratanlal 833. The judgment should show that the Court had considered the evidence and had found in a case of conviction that the facts proved to the satisfaction of the Court brought an offence home to the accused person whom the Court convicted—19 All 506. Where a judgment, though not a long and elaborate one, affords a clear indication that the Court duly considered the evidence it is a good judgment—1 C W N 169. But if the judgment is so meagre that it is impossible to form an opinion as to the merits of the case or to say whether there has been a miscarriage of justice or not the judgment must be set aside—5 C L J 452.

Where an Appellate Court finds that the Magistrate has not written a judgment in conformity with the provisions of Section 367, the correct procedure is to accept the appeal and to remand the case for hearing de novo. The Appellate Court cannot retain the appeal on its file and ask for a judgment which the Magistrate has failed to record—(1920) M W N 120.

Points for determination.—Every judgment of a Criminal Court must contain a clear statement of the points for determination—Bom II C Cr Cir p 38. The attention of all Criminal Courts is invited to this necessity of very strictly observing the provisions of the latter portions of clause (1) of section 367 which declares that the judgment must contain the points for determination the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision—Cal G R & C O p 36. Where the Sessions Judge convicted the accused without stating the facts of the case or the points for determination or even the section under which the accused was convicted, the judgment was set aside—9 C W N xxiii. The accused person is entitled to have an independent judgment of the trying Court and such judgment must be prepared in accordance with and must contain the particulars required by, section 367. Otherwise it is no judgment at all. Where a second class Magistrate thinking that a severer punishment should be inflicted on the accused than what he was authorised to award, recorded his opinion and forwarded the proceeding to the Sub-divisional Magistrate, and the latter in convicting the accused wrote the following judgment "I agree with the finding arrived at by the learned trying Magistrate and convict all the accused for the offence of unlawful assembly as stated in the charge", held that this was not a judgment at all—20 Cr L J 444 (Pat). Where the Magistrate has given strong and legal reasons for his decision, his omission to refer to the minute details of the case does not vitiate his judgment—Durga Singh v Emp 24 Cr L J 181 (Pat). Where the judgment showed that the Judge had appreciated the points which the prosecution had to establish, and that he had clearly in view the points for determination, viz. the credibility of the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution, and he expressed his opinion on that point, it was held

decision thereon and the reasons for the decision; and shall be dated and signed by the presiding officer in open Court at the time of pronouncing it, and where it is not written by the presiding officer with his own hand every page of such judgment shall be signed by him

(2) It shall specify the offence (if any) of which, and the section of the Indian Penal Code or other law under which, the accused is convicted, and the punishment to which he is sentenced.

(3) When the conviction is under the Indian Penal Code, and it is doubtful under which of two
Judgment in alternative parts of the same section of that Code the offence falls, the Court shall distinctly express the same and pass judgment in the alternative

(4) If it be a judgment of acquittal, it shall state the offence of which the accused is acquitted and direct that he be set at liberty.

(5) If the accused is convicted of an offence punishable with death, and the Court sentences him to any punishment other than death, the Court shall in its judgment state the reason why sentence of death was not passed

Provided that, in trials by jury the Court need not write a judgment but the Court of Session shall record the heads of the charge to the jury.

(6) For the purposes of this section, an order under Section 118 or Section 123, sub-section (3), shall be deemed to be a judgment.

1046 Change.—The italicised words in sub-section (1) and the new sub-section (6) have been added by Section 100 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

Under the old Section it was held that the judgment must be written by the Magistrate himself, he could not get it written by a clerk—Ratanlal 545, 6 Mad 396, and that if the judgment was written at the dictation of the Magistrate, and the Magistrate merely signed it, the procedure was illegal—4 C L J 411 The present Amendment in sub-section (1) will now allow such procedure

Language.—Under this section the judgment of a Criminal Court should be written in the language of the Court or in English Where an Honorary Magistrate wrote his judgment in Urdu instead of Hindi, the language of the Court, it was held to be irregular, but such irregularity was cured by Section 537—4 C L J 532 and not satirical. A judgment should not admit irrelevant matter to the record, but should confine itself to a consideration of the issues before the Court, together with a fair and legitimate comment on any errors or irregularities that may be disclosed in the course of the trial—Emp v Thomas Pellako 5 Bur L T 20. A judgment should not contain remarks about the accused to the effect that he was a person of wealth and influence and had prevented truth from appearing unless such conduct of the prisoner is established by evidence—8 W R 13. The judgment should not contain any damaging remarks regarding a witness in a criminal trial—1910 P W R 2, or regarding the conduct of a counsel, when such counsel's conduct was not at all objectionable—15 Cr L J 420 (Oudh), or regarding a person who is not a party or witness in the proceeding—Benarsi Das v Crown 6 Lah 166. 26 Gr L J 1326. The High Court has power to expunge such objectionable remarks from the lower Court's judgment, see Note 1214 under sec 439.

Specification of offence—See subsection (2). The offence of which the accused is convicted must be specified in the judgment with the same precision as in the charge—5 L B R 21. 35 Cal 718.

Sentence—Under this section the sentence is a part of the judgment, and when an accused person is convicted it is incumbent upon the Court to pass a formal sentence of even a single day's imprisonment or any other punishment to make the record legally complete—1884 A W N 218. In estimating the sentence to be passed the defence put forward by the accused should not be treated as a matter of aggravation—1883 A W N 10.

As to the legality of passing sentence before judgment, see notes under sec 366.

1048 Signing—This section requires that the judgment must be signed. But if the judgment is entirely in the hand of the Magistrate, it does not become inoperative by reason of the fact that he forgot to sign and date it. The irregularity does not affect the merits of the case, and is cured by sec 537—Ram Singh v Emp 47 All 284. 23 A L J 8. 26 Cr L J 688.

The signature should be made with a pen and not with a stamp. There are obvious reasons why judicial documents should be authenticated in such a manner that their authenticity may admit of proof. But the affixing of a signature with a stamp would be no more than a mere irregularity—6 Mad 396. But mere initialling is not signing—O S C 192.

The signature of the Magistrate must be appended to the judgment at the time of pronouncing it in open Court—Ratanlal 429, 40 Mad 108.

The dating and signing of the judgment must be done by the presiding officer of the Court. It cannot be delegated to any body else—1889 A W N 181. Where a Magistrate who has tried a case and written out the judgment is succeeded by another before he has actually pronounced the same, it is not obligatory on the succeeding Magistrate to pronounce the same, and much less can he be compelled to do so, though he may, if he chooses, date, sign and pronounce it, in which case he will be adopting it as his own—40 Mad 108 Quære, whether it will be legal for the succeeding Magistrate to date, sign and pronounce the judgment written by his predecessor, when the accused demands a de novo trial (under sec. 350)?—40 Mad 108

Sub-section (3).—Judgment in the alternative—The 'doubt' in sub-section (3) is the same as that referred to in sec. 236, i.e., a doubt as to the application of law to the facts proved and not a doubt as to whether the accused had committed any offence. See notes under sec. 236. Where the judgment did not state in express terms that the Court was in doubt as to the question under which of two sections the offence fell, it was held that this was at most an irregularity and did not vitiate the judgment—2 Weir 440

Sub section (4).—Judgment of acquittal—Under sub section (4) if the judgment is one of acquittal the accused is entitled to be discharged from custody immediately on the judgment of acquittal being pronounced, and his further detention becomes unlawful. No formal warrant of release addressed by the Court to the Superintendent of the Jail is necessary, it is for the jail authorities (in whose custody the accused had remained) to satisfy themselves of the result of the trial—5 M H C R. App 2

1049 Sub-section (5).—*Judgment in capital cases—Judges are bound to pass a capital sentence in a case of murder when they believe the evidence, and they must not shrink from doing their duty—7 W R 33. It is highly improper that a Sessions Judge should pass a sentence of death and at the same time in his reference to the High Court recommend for mercy—M H C Pro 244 1866. A person convicted of murder should ordinarily be sentenced to death. To justify the passing of a sentence of transportation for life there should be really extenuating circumstances, and not a mere absence of aggravating circumstances—18 Cr L J 113 (Bur), Mt Shwe v Emp 2 Bur L J 277, Crown v Ngatha, 1 L B R 216 (F B), Mt She v A E, 25 Cr L J 1121 (Rang). The fact that the crime was committed without premeditation in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel is not an extenuating circumstance—18 Cr L J 113.

Where the Judge convicts the accused of murder and passes on him the alternative sentence of transportation for life, he should state his reasons for not passing the capital sentence—1864 W R 27. The fact that the accused is a woman is not a sufficient ground for passing a sentence of transportation instead of one of death—Emp v Nibbia 1888 A W N 134, Mt She v K E, 25 Cr L J 1121 (Rang). The fact that the body of the murdered man has not been found is not a sufficient ground—3 All 322, 1882 A W N 160, 1883 A W N 112, Contra—11 W R 20. The fact that the accused is a pregnant woman is not a sufficient ground for commutation of sentence—15 W R 66, in such a case the execution is deferred till after delivery—See sec 382. A sentence of death was commuted to transportation for life, where, owing to an aperture in the neck of the accused communicating with the larynx, it was likely that if he were hanged a complete severance of the head from the body would enue—2 C I R 215 Where the Sessions Judge feels reasonable doubt whether a sentence of death would be the proper penalty the doubt, like all other doubts, should be given in favour of the accused, and a sentence of transportation should be passed. In such a case, it is highly improper for the Sessions Judge to pass a sentence of death and to leave the responsibility to the High Court of commuting the sentence, if necessary—3 L R R 111

1050 Heads of charge to the jury:—Under this section, the Judge is not required to write out in extenso the charge which he addresses to the jury. He is to record merely the heads of the charge, because it is impossible for the Judge to write down everything he says to the jury—Kamuddi v Emp 51 Cal 79 (82). The heads of charge to the jury need not be a verbatim reproduction of the Judge's observations to the jury, nor is it necessary that the charge should be written out before it is delivered. But whether they are written out before delivery or taken down verbatim they should be placed on record by the Judge as soon as he may find it possible to do so and whilst what he said is fresh in his recollection. The record need not be meticulous or lengthy, but it must give accurately the substance of what the Judge said to the jury so that the High Court may if occasion arises be able to ascertain from this record whether the law and the facts relative to the case were fairly and properly put to the jurors. Where the Judge's record of his charge to the jury is simply this: Sections 141 to 149 and 299 to 304 read over and explain. I hold that such a short summary was not a sufficient compliance with the law—Rupin Singh v A F 4 Pat 626 27 Cr L J 49. The heads of the charge mean that the Judge must truthfully record the line upon which he addressed the jury, both on the evidence and on the law, and the object of these heads of charge is to inform the High Court, should occasion arise of what direction he gave in law to the jury and the nature of the summing up of the evidence not only for the prosecution but also for the defence. The heads of charge are not intended to be an exhaustive detail of every particular which the Judge may have addressed to the jury but they should contain in an intelligible form and with sufficient fulness the points of law and direction given by the Judge to the jury and the record should represent with absolute accuracy the substance of the charge by the Judge to the jury—Farrish v A E 1 P I J 31 36 Cal 281 Emp v Ikramuddin 39 All 248, 35 C I J 437 Ahmednuddin v Emp 42 C I J 504, Rahamath v Emp 26 Cr L J 1151 (Cal). The heads of the charge should contain such statement as will enable the Appellate Court to decide whether the evidence has been properly laid before the jury or whether there has been any misdirection in the charge—23 W R 32 Emp v Bai Nath 1903 A W N 232, 25 Cal 730 10 Bom L R 565 Panchu v Emp, 34 Cal 698, 39 All 348.

Although under sec 367, only the heads of the charge to the jury are required to be recorded, still as the law allows an appeal on grounds of misdirection, it is not only desirable but necessary that the charge should be recorded with sufficient fulness to enable the Appellate Court to see that all points of law were clearly explained to the jury—34 Cal 608 26 C W N 996 2 Weir 383. The Judge should also record in his charge what evidence he reads out to the jury—Ratanlal 917. It is not sufficient for the Judge to state in his record of the heads of the charge that he referred to certain sections of the Penal Code and explained to the jury the law with regard to the offence. He should set out in the record the directions which he gave to them in respect of the law, in order that the High Court may not have to speculate as to what the Judge said but may be in a position to judge whether the elements constituting the particular offence in question had been properly and fairly explained to the jury—47 Cal 795. The Judge's comments on the evidence of identification should be recorded in a form which will enable the appellate Court to know what was actually said—35 C L J 437.

Where a joint trial is held of several offences some of which are triable by jury and others with the aid of assessors and in respect of the latter offences the jurors become assessors it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to pronounce a judgment containing the particulars specified in this section in respect of the latter offences. A reference to the charge to the jury is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section—Ratanlal 426.

1051 Appellate Judgment — It should be observed that section 424 of the Code extends the provisions of section 367 to the judgments of the Lower Appellate Courts and it is essential that the judgment of such Courts should comply with the provisions of this section—"Cal G R & C O p 36. An appellate judgment like the judgment of the Court of the first instance must fulfil the conditions laid down in this section, that is the judgment must state the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision—17 Bom L R 1085 2 Lah 508 7 P L T, 616. Kali Charan v Geli Beua 2 P L T 228 21 Cr L J 221. Where the Appellate Court merely rejected the appeal without specifying these points the appeal was ordered to be reheard—1876 P R 6.

Besides specifying these points the Appellate Court has to decide two more points viz (1) is the objection raised in the memorandum of appeal a valid objection? and if not, (2) is there any ground apparent on the record for interference in appeal? A judgment which does not decide these points is not a valid judgment—8 N L R 84.

It is the duty of the Sessions Judge in disposing of an appeal to record a judgment according to law. Any deficiency in that judgment cannot be made up for by a reference to the judgment of the Magistrate. It is his duty to go into the evidence and try the appeal in a proper manner. Where the Sessions Judge in appeal stated no facts and gave no reasons in his judgment for the conclusion arrived at by him the appeal must be reheard—C W N 30, 9 C W N 1111.

An appellate judgment must be quite independent and stand by itself. It ought not to be read in connection with or as supplementary to the judgment of the Court of first instance—35 Cal 138, 2 P L T 616. Solhu v Krishna Ram 25 Cr L J 113 (Lah) 20 Cr L J 444 (Pat) 20 Cr L J 645 (Pat). Bach v Emp 1 Rang 101. Even when confirm ing the judgment of the trial Court the Appellate Court should take its own view of the evidence after perusing the record. The judgment of the Court of appeal should be such that the High Court as a Court of Revision might on looking into the judgment be in a position to judge for itself what the case was and how far the Court of appeal had considered the evidence as bearing on the guilt or innocence of the accused, before it affirmed the judgment of the trial Court—Iqbalulla v Emp 39 C L J 117 25 Cr L J 1041

The judgment of the Appellate Court in dealing with the case of several accused convicted in a joint trial must show on the face of it that the case of each accused has been taken into consideration, and should state reasons as far as may be necessary, to show that the Appellate Court has devoted judicial attention to the case of each accused—35 Cal 138 Thakshina murli v Emp 1918 M W N 129 19 Cr L J 60 Iru dra v A E 20 C W N 1296 In re Bapu Vaidu 2 I W 958 16 Cr L J 735 In re Cherukall 16 Cr L J 496 (Mad) In re Chinnu Manikam 48 M L J 504 26 Cr L J 1089 24 O C 230 25 Cr L J 113 (Lah)

The Appellate Court must record reasons for confirming reversing or modifying the sentences or orders of the Magistrate unless the reasons are set out the High Court cannot revise the proceedings of the Appellate Court—5 M H C R App 12 Where the Appellate Judge merely says that he adopts the reasons given by the trial Court to support the grounds of his decision or merely states that he is satisfied that the judgment of the trial Court is substantially right the judgment is erroneous in form—Dasoj v Emp 20 Cr L J 645 (Pat) Daishnab Charai v Emp 24 Cr L J 311 (Cal)

An Appellate Court is not required to write a long and elaborate judgment but it is clearly its duty not only to examine the evidence but also to write a judgment affording a clear indication that the appeal has been properly tried and that the points urged by the Appellant have been duly considered and decided. An Appellate Court which writes a judgment which the High Court is unable to follow without reference to the judgment of the trial Court obviously fails in the discharge of the duty imposed upon it by law—Dalip Singh v Crown 2 I W 308 (310) 23 Cr L J 9

The judgment of the Appellate Court must show that it has duly considered the evidence of both sides and the pleas raised in appeal, with a judicial mind—Bena v Emp 18 Cr L J 689 (Oudh) if it does not consider the evidence for the defence nor even alludes to it it is defective—7 M L T 182 1912 M W N 881 18 Cr L J 689 Even though the Counsel for the appellant does not refer to the defence evidence, it is the duty of the Appellate Court to look into that evidence and after dealing with it come to its own decision—40 Cal 376 Where a District Magistrate disposed of an appeal in a case under section 110 in which a large mass of evidence had been produced on both sides, by a short judgment a few lines dealing with some general observations upon the whole evidence which was put before him and without proper consideration thereof held that the judgment was not in accordance with law

v. Emp 19 A I J 921 A District Magistrate should not dispose of an appeal from an order requiring a person to furnish security otherwise than by a judgment showing on the face of it that he has applied his mind to a consideration of the evidence on the record and of the pleas raised by the appellant both in the Court below and in the memorandum of appeal—38 All 393 But the Appellate Court is not bound to give its opinion as to the character of the evidence in prolix detail—1864 W R 6, 19 All 506 Where in the judgment of the first Court, evidence was set at great length and reasons fully explained, the judgment of the Appellate Court which confirms the judgment of the trial Court does not become defective in law by reason of the fact that it does not set out again in detail the whole of the evidence and reasons for believing the witnesses, if it appears from the judgment that the Appellate Court appreciated the arguments adduced against the credibility of the prosecution witnesses—Kusluddin v. Emp, 20 Cr I J 238 (Cal) But although as a general rule, it is not incumbent on the Appellate Court when confirming a decision of the Lower Court to set forth its reasons in full, still if there is anything peculiar in the circumstances of the case, the Appellate Court should notice it—8 B II C R 101 But it is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section if the District Magistrate hearing the appeal and confirming the order of the lower Court gives no reasons for his decision but merely says that he has considered the evidence carefully and thinks that it is sufficiently strong to justify the order—Sau Dun v. Aug Emp, 2 Rang 641 or if the Appellate Court states no reasons whatsoever and confirms the judgment of the Lower Court in these general terms 'I see no reason for distrusting the finding of the Lower Court—13 Cal 110, 1888 A W N 280, 1886 A W N 89 or 'after reading the evidence and hearing the counsel I am of opinion that the Lower Court has decided the case rightly, I find no ground for interference appeal is dismissed'—23 Cal 420, 22 Cal 241 20 Cal 353 19 All 506 or 'the prosecution evidence is sufficient for the conviction I decline to interfere'—Weir (3rd Edn) 1030, or 'I have perused the judgment of the Lower Court, and I agree with the findings arrived at by the learned trying Magistrate and convict all the accused for the offence of rioting as stated in the charge'—20 Cr L J 444 (Patna)

Where the judgment of the Appellate Court was in the nature of a stereotyped one, which might answer for any case, it was not one in accordance with this section or section 424—1 C W N 169

Even when an Appellate Court rejects an appeal summarily under section 421, it is advisable to state shortly in its order the reason or reasons which has influenced it in coming to the conclusion that there is no sufficient ground for interference in the case—17 All 241 13 A L R 169 Although in rejecting an appeal under section 421, the Appellate Court is not bound to write a judgment and give reasons for its decision—20 Bom 540, 21 Cal 92 13 A I R 169, 25 Mad 534, still the recording of reasons is necessary in view of the possibility of such orders being challenged by an application for revision—17 All 241 36 All 466 See notes under sec 421

Even where the Appellate Court dismisses the appeal because no one appears to argue the appeal, the Court is bound to read and consider the evidence and dispose of the appeal by writing a judgment in accordance with the provisions of this section—11 C W N 555v.

Defective Appellate Judgments—It is difficult to lay down any rule with precision as to what judgment of an Appellate Court complies, and what judgment does not comply, with the requirements of this Code. It cannot be held that merely because the form of judgment does not exactly comply with all the requirements of this section and of section 424, it is not a valid judgment. The omissions in the judgment must be substantial in order to invalidate it—19 All 506. Though the judgment of the Appellate Court is not in proper form, the High Court should not interfere with an order of acquittal unless there has been a miscarriage of justice—5 C 1 J 542. Where the Appellate judgment shows that the Judge had appreciated and had in view all the points, the High Court should not interfere in revision merely because the form of judgment does not exactly comply with all the requirements of this section—20 Cal 353. But where the Appellate Court which dismissed the appeal not summarily but after notice to the parties, omitted to write the judgment altogether such an omission was not a mere irregularity curable by sec 537 but a grave illegality—17 Bom L R 1063.

1052 Sub-section (6).—We think it desirable to lay down that orders under sections 118 and 123 (3) should be deemed to be judgments for the purposes of the section.—Report of the Joint Committee (1922). This sub-section supersedes In re Ramasamy Chetty 27 Mad 510 (512) where it was held that an order passed in security proceedings was not a judgment.

In Benkatachinnaya v King Emp 43 Mad 510 it was contended for the Crown that the word 'inquiry' in section 117 did not mean a trial, but Aylmer J, in overruling this contention observed as follows (at pp 524, 525)—'If the word is to be given the narrow interpretation contended for the Crown such provisions as those in Chapter XXVI regarding judgments will not apply to security cases. That is to say the Magistrate in ordering security under section 118 would be under no legal obligation, inter alia to record a judgment setting forth his reasons (section 367) or to give the accused a copy of it without delay (section 371). So far as I can see, apart from the operation of section 117 the Magistrate might simply record an order requiring the execution of a bond without recording any reasons or discussing the evidence. I do not think this could have been intended, especially as care has been taken to provide for an appeal against an order for security (vide section 406) and for the interference of Chief Presidency or District Magistrates (section 123). The present sub-section gives legislative recognition to the above remarks of Aylmer J.

369 *Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, or in the case of a High Court established by Royal Charter, by the Letters Patent of such High Court, no Court, when it has signed its judgment, shall alter or review the same, except * * to correct a clerical error*

Court not to alter judgment

Change—This section has been amended by section 101 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

The wording of the old section admitted of the interpretation that High Courts had unlimited powers of altering or reviewing their judgment (though such interpretation was never made in any of the decided cases). The present section as now amended lays down that the High Court has no power to alter or review its judgment except as provided by the Letters Patent. The references to sections 395 and 484 have been omitted because there are cases other than those referred to in these two sections in which a review of judgment is possible e.g., section 414. See the Report of the Joint Committee of 1921.

1053 Scope of section:—Although this section refers in express terms to judgments under Chapter XXVI of the Code still it is clear that the principle laid down herein applies also to final orders which are in the nature of judgments—22 Bom 949. An order which is passed on full inquiry and after hearing both sides is in the nature of a judgment, and such an order cannot be altered after it is once passed and signed. Thus an order of a District Magistrate, passed after full inquiry, refusing to deliver to the Political Superintendent of a Foreign State, a property seized in execution of a search warrant, cannot be altered by the Magistrate himself. The only course open to the Magistrate is to make a reference to the High Court, and have his own order cancelled—22 Bom 141. An order under Chapter XII is in the nature of a judgment. A Magistrate having passed an order under section 146 can not cancel the order and pass an order under Section 147 instead—16 O C 192. Lachmi v. Brij 11 C R L J 225 (Pat). An order in sanction proceedings (now abolished) comes under this section and a Sessions Judge refusing to revoke a sanction has no jurisdiction to review his order and cancel it—23 Bom 50 (1911) 2 M W N 431. A final order is final tenance proceedings (Sec 488) is in effect a judgment and the Magistrate cannot review a final order passed in such a proceeding—Nandi v Manmata 21 C W N 344

But this section does not apply to an order of dismissal of complaint under section 203. Such an order is not a judgment within the meaning of this section—9 Mad 126 and the Magistrate can rehear the complaint—29 Mad 126 1 N I R 18. So also an order directing issue of process under sec 204 is not a judgment and a Magistrate can on a reconsideration of that order cancel the issue of process and order an inquiry under sec 202—Lalit Mohan v Nand Lal 27 C W N 651

An order dismissing a summons case for default of appearance under section 247 is in the nature of a judgment and a Magistrate cannot revive the case once dismissed for default—4 C W N 26. But it is competent for a Magistrate to rehear a warrant case in which he has discharged the accused person under Section 253 or 259—29 Cal 726 28 Cal 652 7 C W N 527 28 Mad 310

So also it is open to the Appellate Court to rehear an appeal which has been summarily dismissed by itself for default of appearance of the pleader—7 M H C R App 29. Contra—4 Bom 101

1054 Alteration of judgment—No Judge or Magistrate can add to or alter or review his proceedings or judgments in any case after they are signed and published—10 C W N 1062 23 W R 43 23 Bom 50 1916 P R 25 Narayan v Chaidrabhaga 26 Cr L J 1289 (Nag). It is especially irregular when made in the absence of the accused and without notice to him—10 C W N 1062 12 Bom L R 521 19 Cr L J 223 (Pat). Where a Magistrate after signing and pronouncing judgment in open Court on the same day enhanced the sentence at the request of the accused in order to make his order appealable it was held that though the Magistrate acted with the best of motives yet the alteration of the sentence was illegal—1883 1 W N 16. Where the accused was charged with theft (379 I P C) and also under section 302 (previous conviction) and 379 I P C and the Sessions Judge at first tried the accused on the first charge alone and convicted and sentenced him and then next inquired into the further charge of previous conviction it was held that the subsequent proceedings with reference to the previous convictions were not valid because after the judgment including the sentence was pronounced in the trial on the first charge there was no power to review or alter the same under this section—42 Bom 202. Even where the accused obtains a judgment of acquittal under Section 24 by means of a fraud on the Court (e.g. by preventing the complainant from appearing when the case was called on by wrongfully arresting and detaining him on a false charge) the Code does not permit the Court to cancel the judgment of acquittal on proof of fraud and to restore the case to the file—38 Mad 1028. A Magistrate after passing the sentence and signing it cannot even alter the date from which the sentence is to run—Ratanlal 804. It is also most unwarrantable on the part of the Judge to add a note to his judgment by which he tries to throw doubts on the conclusion at which he had arrived.

2 All 33 Where an illegal sentence of flogging in addition to imprisonment was passed by the Magistrate and the illegality was discovered before execution but after the sentence had been pronounced and signed, it was held that such sentence could be altered only by the High Court, and not by the Magistrate himself—Weir (3rd Edn) 983 Where a Sessions Judge or a Magistrate once sentences an offender to pay a fine but omits through oversight to pass a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine it is not open to him to pass the order subsequently. The proper course in such a case is to submit the proceedings to the High Court and to ask that Court in its revisional jurisdiction to inflict imprisonment in default of payment of fine—In re Dhondt Nathaji 23 Bom L R 846 A Sessions Judge has no power to alter or set aside a conviction and sentence once signed by him even on the ground that the sentence passed by him was illegal—23 W R 49 Where a Sessions Judge rejected a criminal appeal on the ground that it was barred by limitation but subsequently on the representation by the prisoner he admitted the appeal and after hearing it acquitted the accused, it was held that the Sessions Judge had no power to re-admit the appeal—19 Bom 732, 6 Bom L R 360 It is not open to a Sessions Judge, after he has once accepted the verdict of the jury and has postponed the case for passing sentence to reconsider his order and refer the case to the High Court under section 307, but he must pass sentence on the person awaiting sentence on the verdict. It is not open to him to reconsider his order any more than it would be for a jury to reconsider their verdict once given and recorded—4 C W N 683 Even if on appeal is summarily rejected under Sec 421 for default of appearance, the order of dismissal is not open to review—Empress v Mahomed Iashin 4 Bom 101 But in a Madras case it was held that if an appeal was summarily rejected under Sec 421 for non-appearance of the appellant's pleader, the Court could restore the appeal to the file and rehear it, if sufficient cause was shown for the pleader's non-appearance—7 M H C R App 29

But where a Sessions Judge on appeal in annulling a conviction omits to order a retrial, he is not precluded by this section from passing such an order subsequently. Such an order does not amount to an alteration of judgment—3 Mad 48 A Magistrate who makes an order under section 145 without any direction as to costs has power to order the same subsequently under section 148 (3) and such later order is not an alteration or review of his judgment in the original case within the meaning of this section—47 CIL 974 So also where a Magistrate disposing of a criminal appeal accidentally omits to pass an order under sec 520 it will be open to him or to his successor to pass the order afterwards. Such an order does not amount to an alteration of the judgment—In re Subbia Vaidu 43 M L J 87

Further inquiry.—An order for further inquiry does not amount to a review of the order of dismissal or discharge. The terms of this section must be read as controlled by section 437 (now 431). That section does not limit the power of a District Magistrate to make further inquiry into a case in which an order of dismissal or discharge may have been passed by a subordinate Magistrate and there is no bar to a District Magistrate making further inquiry into a case in which such order may have been passed by himself—28 Cal 102 But where a District Magistrate has already dealt with a case in revision and decided that there was no cause for interfering with the order of discharge, he cannot subsequently order further inquiry, because such an order would be an order reviewing the earlier one and is prohibited by this section—Agar Thau v Emp, 5 Bur L T 37

Proper procedure—When a mistake has been made in the judgment (e.g., when an appeal has been erroneously dismissed as time barred, or when an illegal sentence has been passed) it is not open to the Judge or Magistrate to alter or review his judgment or order but the only course open to him is to submit the case to the High Court—6 Bom 1 R 360 1 Bur S R 354 23 W R 49 Weir (3rd Edn) 983 22 Bom 949 23 Bom L R 840

The Legislature has not conferred in express words upon the High Court the power of reviewing its judgment in all criminal cases as it has done in all civil cases. The provisions of the old section so far as they affect a High Court merely apply to questions of law which arise in its original criminal jurisdiction and which are reserved and subsequently disposed of under the provisions of section 434 and the corresponding sections of the Letters Patent—, All 672. The words 'other than a High Court' do not give the Division Bench of the High Court power to review its judgment passed by it in a criminal appeal. The words are to be accounted for by the power of review given to the High Court under section 434 on points specially reserved by the Judge presiding at the High Court Sessions—Ritmal 791 46 Mad 182 (404). In other words, the High Court cannot entertain an application to review a judgment passed by it on appeal in a criminal case—5 W R 61, Ratnial 791, 1909 P R 1 Emp v Ake 45 All 143 (145). In re Irumuga 50 M L J 51 27 Cr L J 184. The Code of Criminal Procedure was passed after the Code of Civil Procedure. The latter contains a section authorising review of judgment, but the former contains no corresponding section. From this it may be reasonably inferred that the

did not intend to confer in criminal cases the power similar to that which they had given in civil cases—5 W R 61 (63) As soon as the appellate judgment is pronounced and signed by the Judges, the High Court is functus officio and neither the Court itself nor any Bench of it has any power to revise the decision or interfere with it in any way—14 Cal 42 7 All 672, In re Kunhammad 46 Mad 382 (401) Paras Ram v Emp 1 O W N 891 26 Cr L J 543 Even if a single Judge of the High Court has passed an order dismissing an appeal, a Division Bench of the High Court cannot review that order by rehearing the appeal—46 Mad 382 (404) If the Division Bench of the High Court passes an erroneous order in appeal, the only remedy is to make a petition (under Ch XXIX) to the Local Government the authority with whom rests the discretion either of executing the law or of commuting or setting aside the sentence—Ratanlal 791 Emp v Kale 45 All 143 (145) So also a Division Bench cannot review an order which has been passed by them in revision—Q E v Fox 10 Bom 176 (FB) 38 All 134, Q E v Durgacharan 7 All 672 1905 L B R (Cr P C) 35, Naul Kishore v Emp 20 Cr L J 447 (Pat) Ratanlal 458 A single Judge of the High Court has no power to alter or revise an order passed by him in revision—In re Soma Vaidu 47 Mad 428 (431) The High Court will not review its order passed in appeal or revision even on the ground of discovery of fresh evidence because such evidence ought to have been produced at the trial—Ratanlal 458 Emp v Kale 45 All 143 (145) So also, if a revision case is dismissed by the High Court for default of payment of printing charges it is not competent for the High Court to rehear the case or entertain a fresh application for revision—44 M L J 27 Even if a revision petition is dismissed for default of appearance of the practitioner who filed it the High Court is not competent to restore the petition to its file—In re Ranga Rao 23 M L J 371 But in another recent case of the Madras High Court as well as in cases of the other High Courts it has been held that when a criminal appeal or revision petition is dismissed by the High Court for default of appearance, there is no decision on the merits, and therefore there is no proper disposal of the case according to law There being no provision in the Code for dismissing an appeal or revision petition for default of appearance, the order of dismissal is no 'judgment' at all, and the High Court is not debarred from rehearing the appeal or revision petition—Kunhammad Hapi In re 46 Mad 382 at pp 407, 403 (dissenting from 23 M L J 371 and 4 Bom 101), Rajab Ali v Emp 46 Cal 61 (63) 20 Cr L J 265 Kishen Singh v Girdhari 23 Cr L J 750 (Lah) Similarly, if an order is passed in the absence of the accused without giving him an opportunity of being heard in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) of sec 439 as for instance where by mistake a case is posted on a day anterior to that fixed in the notice to the accused, the order is null and void, and the High Court is to proceed with the matter afresh after proper notice to the accused—In re Soma Vaidu 47 Mad 428 (434) 46 M L J 456 34 M L J 218 27 Cr L J 370. Rajab Ali v Emp 46 Cal 61 (63) If an appeal is dismissed by a High Court Judge under sec 421 without the appellant or his pleader being given reasonable oppor-

Pres'd-ney Magistrate's judgment shall record the following particulars —

- (a) the serial number of the case,
- (b) the date of the commission of the offence,
- (c) the name of the complainant (if any),
- (d) the name of the accused person, and (except in the case of an European British subject) his parentage and residence,
- (e) the offence complained of or proved,
- (f) the plea of the accused and any),

- (g) the final order,
- (h) the date of such order, and
- (i) in all cases in which the Magistrate inflicts imprisonment, or fine exceeding two hundred rupees, or both, a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction

1056 Scope of section:—This section does not apply to proceedings under sections 2 (i) and 3 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1839). Those proceedings are not Criminal proceedings and no offence can be said to have been committed under those sections. A Presidency Magistrate is not therefore bound to frame a record in such proceedings in accordance with the provisions of this Section—27 Cal 131.

1057 Clause (i)—reasons for conviction:—The meaning of this clause is that where the offence is sufficiently grave to involve a fine of Rs 200 or imprisonment as the substantive sentence, the Magistrate is bound to record his reasons (46 Mad 253) so as to enable the party to bring the matter up to the High Court, but in petty cases, which can be met by a fine of few rupees, the decision of the Magistrate may be recorded shortly—14 Cal 174. This section requires that in cases in which the accused is sentenced to imprisonment, a Presidency Magistrate shall record a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction. It is not sufficient for him to record that the offence is proved, for that may be necessarily implied from the fact that he has convicted the accused. The law requires something further as the reasons for the conviction—27 Cal 461. So also, a mere statement to the effect 'I believe the evidence for the prosecution and the evidence of the complainant and I convict the accused' is not a statement of reasons—Emp v Shankar 17 Bom L R 890. The Magistrate should state his reasons in such a manner as to enable the High Court to judge of the sufficiency of the materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction—13 Cal 272, 31 Cal 983, 8 C W N 587. Where there was not on the record any summary of the evidence nor such a statement of facts and reasons for conviction as would enable the High Court to say whether the materials were sufficient to support the conviction, it was held that the conviction should be set aside—8 C W N 587, 13 Cal 272, 31 Cal 983. Even, in a non appealable case, the Presidency Magistrate should state his reasons so as to enable the High Court in revision to judge the sufficiency of materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction—13 Cal 272. A Presidency Magistrate (is also an Honorary Presidency Magistrate) who tries and convicts an accused in a summary trial is bound to give reasons for the conviction—In re Taradaramulu 31 M L T, 400. In re Thurman 20 L W 330, 25 C L J 1084. But the omission to record the reasons in a summary trial is a mere irregularity, and the High Court will not interfere in revision if the accused has not been prejudiced—In re Thurman (Supra).

The imprisonment referred to in this clause is substantive imprisonment. A sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is not a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this clause—14 Cal 174.

If the Magistrate omits to record the reasons the defect is not cured by section 441 which permits a Presidency Magistrate to submit with the record (when called for under section 435) a statement setting forth the grounds of his decision. Section 441 does not abrogate the terms of section 370 but it merely allows the Presidency Magistrate to supplement the reasons which have been already recorded under section 370. In re Derwish Hussain 46 Mad 253. But if the statement submitted under section 441 discloses sufficient grounds for the decision the defect in not recording reasons under sec 370 may be excused under section 537. If a substantial failure of justice has occurred—Ibid.

CHAPTER XXVII

OF THE SUBMISSION OF SENTENCES FOR CONFIRMATION

374 When the Court of Session passes sentence of death, the proceedings shall be submitted to the High Court and the sentence shall not be executed unless it is confirmed by the High Court

Sentence of death to be submitted by Court of Session

When the record of a case in which a sentence of death has been passed is submitted to the High Court under section 374, all the Police Diaries connected with the case should be simultaneously forwarded—Gal G R & C O p 39

375 (1) If when such proceedings are submitted the High Court thinks that a further inquiry should be made into, or additional evidence taken upon, any point bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the convicted person, it may make such inquiry or take such evidence itself, or direct it to be made or taken by the Court of Session

Power to direct further inquiry to be made or additional evidence to be taken

(2) Such inquiry shall not be made nor shall such evidence be taken in the presence of jurors or assessors, and, unless the High Court otherwise directs, the presence of the convicted person may be dispensed with when the same is made or taken

(3) When the inquiry and the evidence (if any) are not made and taken by the High Court, the result of such inquiry and the evidence shall be certified to such Court

1058 Under this section the High Court can take additional evidence itself. In 25 Bom 168, the High Court admitted in evidence a confession rejected by the Sessions Judge. In 1911 P W R 16 the High Court (then Chief Court) admitted further evidence and inspected the building where the offence was alleged to have been committed.

The High Court when recording further evidence under this section can dispense with the presence of the accused, especially where the additional evidence is recorded by itself—24 Mad 523

The High Court acting under this section is not entitled with a view to make its opinion still more conclusive with reference to the discrepancies in the testimony of the witnesses on which the Trial Judge has properly dwelt, to test that testimony still further by reading the earlier statements of those witnesses made to the police and entered in the police diary in other words to treat as evidence what could be used at events only for the purpose of discrediting those witnesses—44 (876 (P C))

376 In any case submitted under Section 374, when tried with the aid of assessors or Power of High Court to confirm sentence or annul conviction jury, the High Court—

- (a) may confirm the sentence, or pass any other sentence warranted by law, or
- (b) may annul the conviction, and convict the accused of any offence of which the Sessions Court might have convicted him, or order a new trial on the same or an amended charge or
- (c) may acquit the accused person

Provided that no order of confirmation shall be made under this section until the period allowed for preferring an appeal has expired, or if an appeal is presented within such period until such appeal is disposed of 1059 Power of High Court—Though a High Court has power to substitute its own finding for the unanimous verdict of the jury at a trial for murder when the sentence comes on for confirmation before the High Court still as a matter of practice the High Court will generally allow the verdict to be attacked arbitrarily. It is necessary that the convict must show prima facie that the verdict is unsupported by evidence. The High Court will not permit the same latitude in the criticism of the evidence before the jury that it allows in an ordinary appeal from a trial with assessors—Gul v Emp 15 S I R 103 (F B). The High Court will undoubtedly interfere with the verdict if it is perverse or if evidence has been improperly admitted or excluded or if there is a misdirection by the Judge—Ibid

High Court may go into facts and law—When a case is submitted under section 374 the whole case is reopened before the High Court and the High Court is bound to go into the facts as well as the law although the conviction is by the verdict of the jury—19 W R 57 C W N 49 Emp v Daji 17 Bom L R 102 and the High Court's power under this section is not limited as in appeal—2 C W N

In a case referred to the High Court under section 374 for confirmation of a death sentence it is the practice of the High Court to be satisfied on the facts of the case as well as the law that the conviction is right before it proceeds to confirm the sentence—Ratanlal 710. Though a jury have unanimously convicted an accused for murder it is the duty of the High Court on a reference under sec 374 to be satisfied that the finding of fact is supported by the evidence on the record—Arshed Ali Emp 30 C W N 166

Where the High Court hears the appeal of a co accused not sentenced to death along with a reference under section 174 in respect of a person sentenced to death it was held under the old law that it was not open to the High Court to go into the facts in the appeal—2 C W N 49 and the hearing of the appeal was limited as laid down in sections 418 and 423 (2) to points of law only—Ibid See also 11 B I R 14 But now see the new sub-section () of section 418

Question of jurisdiction—In determining whether the sentence should be confirmed the High Court may also consider whether the conviction was by a Court of competent jurisdiction—M 218

1060 Commutation of sentence—Where the condition of the convict was such that if he were ordered to be hanged, decapitation would ensue (owing to an aperture in the neck communicating with the larynx) the High Court commuted the sentence of death into one of transportation for life—2 C I R 15 In 17 C W N 121, there being a difference of opinion among the Judges who heard the reference the case had to be referred to a third Judge (see 3,8) and there was a delay of six months in the High Court before the final decision was arrived at The third Judge upheld the conviction for murder but commuted the sentence of death into one of transportation on the ground that the capital sentence had been hung over the head of the accused for six months owing to the delay in the High Court

Conviction for any other offence—Where the accused was tried before the Sessions Judge for murder and concealment of murder, and was convicted of murder but no finding was given on the minor charge, the High Court in acquitting the accused of the charge of murder, could convict him of the minor charge where there was evidence to support it, in spite of the omission of the Sessions Judge to give any finding in respect of this minor charge—1913 P R 8 The Bombay High Court holds that in a reference under this section the High Court cannot alter a conviction for murder into one for culpable homicide not amounting to murder, unless there is a petition of appeal along with the reference If no appeal is preferred the only course is to order a retrial for the other offence—1 Bom 639 But there is nothing in this section to warrant such a view

1061 Retrial—Where the evidence taken before the Court of Session was incomplete, and further evidence was necessary before judgment could be properly pronounced upon the accused the High Court ordered a retrial—6 C W N 91 Where the accused was undefended in the Sessions Court, the High Court ordered a retrial on the same charge after proper arrangement being made for his defence—19 C W N 556 See also 1 Bom 639 above

377 In every case so submitted, the confirmation of the sentence or any new sentence or order passed by the High Court, shall, when such Court consists of two or Confirmation or new sentence to be signed by two Judges.

more Judges, be made, passed and signed by at least two of them

378 When any such case is heard before a Bench of Judges and such Judges are equally divided in opinion, the case, with their opinions thereon, shall be laid before another Judge, and such Judge, after such hearing as he thinks fit, shall deliver his opinion, and the judgment or order shall follow such opinion

When a case is referred to a third Judge, he must give his own independent opinion, and should not necessarily decide the case according to the opinion of the Judge who was in favour of the acquittal—1887 A W N 125

379 In cases submitted by the Court of Session to the High Court for the confirmation of a sentence of death, the proper officer of the High Court shall, without delay, after the order of confirmation or other order has been made by the High Court, send a copy of the order under the seal of the High Court, and attested with his official signature, to the Court of Session

380 Where proceedings are submitted to a Magistrate of the first class or a Sub divisional Magistrate as provided by Section 562, such Magistrate may thereupon pass such sentence or make such order as he might have passed or made if the case had originally been heard by him, and, if he thinks further inquiry or additional evidence on any point to be necessary, he may make such inquiry or take such evidence himself or direct such inquiry or evidence to be made or taken

1062 The Magistrate to whom a case is submitted under section 562, must pass such sentence and make such order as he thinks fit. If however, on a perusal of the evidence he comes to the conclusion that the conviction should not have taken place he can acquit the accused under the powers vested in him under this section—See The v. M. K. M., 1913 5 B R 1st Qr 55

The Magistrate to whom the case is referred cannot send the case back to the inferior Magistrate. Where a second class Magistrate, finding the accused guilty of an offence under section 325 I P C., submitted the case to the District Magistrate for an order section 562, but the District Magistrate sent the case back to the 2nd class Magistrate pointing out that sec 562 [before its present amendment] was inapplicable.

(as the offence was beyond its scope) it was held that the District Magistrate's order sending back the case was illegal, because, under this section, he could pass such sentence or order as he might have passed if the case had originally come to him and he could not have sent it to the second class Magistrate for the purpose of sentence if he had originally heard it—4 L. B. R. 150

OF EXECUTION

381 When a sentence of death passed by a Court of Session is submitted to the High Court for confirmation, such Court of Session shall, on receiving the order of confirmation or other order of the High Court thereon, cause such order to be carried into effect by issuing a warrant or taking such other steps as may be necessary

The date named by the Sessions Court in its warrant for the execution of a sentence of death, shall not be less than fourteen or more than twenty-one days from the date of the issue of such warrant.—Cal. G. R. & C. O. page 39

382 If a woman sentenced to death is found to be pregnant, the High Court shall order the execution of the sentence to be postponed, and may, if it thinks fit, commute the sentence to transportation for life

Postponement of capital sentence on pregnant woman

1063 The fact that the accused is a pregnant woman is not a sufficient ground for commutation of sentence—15 W. R. 66 in such a case, execution will be deferred until delivery is provided by this section

The High Court is the only tribunal in which the law has vested the power of postponing the execution of a sentence of death passed on a woman found to be pregnant—2 Weir 441

The pregnancy of the woman should be certified by a civil surgeon—Bombay Gazette 1879 page 471

383 Where the accused is sentenced to transportation or imprisonment in cases other than those provided for by Section 381, the Court passing the sentence shall forthwith forward a warrant to the jail in which he is, or is to be confined, and, unless the accused is already confined in such jail, shall forward him to such jail, with the warrant 1064 Sentence when to commence—A sentence of imprisonment ought to commence from the time the sentence is passed. A sentence of imprisonment to take effect at a future date is bad in law. A Magistrate has no power to postpone the execution of the sentence at the request of the accused—12 W R 47. Where a Magistrate passes a sentence of imprisonment on an accused and admits him to bail in order that he may have the means of appealing held that the admission to bail does not make the sentence one to commence at a future date and does not therefore make it illegal—In re Okhoy Kumar 7 C L R 393 12 W R 47. When a Judge convicts the accused he must pass sentence on him at once, he has no power to adjourn the passing of sentence for an indefinite period—14 Bom L R 144.

The commencement of the sentence cannot also be ante dated. A sentence of imprisonment for the time already passed in the lock up is illegal; but a sentence of imprisonment until the rising of the Court is good and legal—1907 P W R 9.

When a prisoner has been committed to jail under two separate warrants, the sentence in the one to take effect from the expiry of the sentence in the other the date of such second sentence shall in the event of the first sentence being remitted on appeal be presumed to take effect from the date on which he was committed to jail under the first or original sentence—Cal G R & C O page 40.

Where to be imprisoned—When a case is submitted to the High Court under section 307 and the High Court passes a sentence it does so as a Court of Reference and not in the exercise of its ordinary original jurisdiction and therefore it has power on conviction and sentence to send the accused to jail outside the Presidency Town. The High Court is required to send the accused to that jail in which he would have been confined by the Court submitting the case—29 Cal 286.

It is illegal for a Magistrate to direct the accused to be imprisoned in a Police lock up. A jail is a prison within the meaning of the Prisons Act and the Prisoners Act but it does not include a police lock up—K E v Po Thm 7 L B R 62.

It is illegal to confine a person in a jail other than that mentioned in the warrant—11 Cal 527 (cited under section 384).

Calculation of period of imprisonment—In calculating sentences of imprisonment the day on which the sentence is passed and the day of release ought to be included and considered as days of imprisonment, for example, a man sentenced on the 1st January to one month's imprisonment should be released on the 31st January and not on the 1st February—Mad G O No 2411 dated 22-11-81.

384 Every warrant for the execution of a sentence of

Direction of warrant imprisonment shall be directed to the officer in charge of the jail, or other place in which the prisoner is, or is to be, confined.

the levying of the fine imposed on the prisoner till the period of appeal shall have expired or until the orders of the Appellate Court are received on appeal preferred by the accused. Nor can the Appellate Court order the original Court to abstain from levying the fine till the disposal of appeal—2 W R (Cr 1st) 13. As to the period of limitation within which fine may be recovered, see section 70 I P C.

Who can levy fine—The term 'Court' is not restricted to the particular individual who held office. The successor in office of a Judge or Magistrate may levy a fine imposed by his predecessor—9 W R 50.

1068 Clause (a)—Distress and sale—It is lawful for the Magistrate to issue his warrant for the levy of fine by distress and sale of the goods of the offender and at the same time to order his imprisonment for non-payment of fine. It is not necessary to postpone imprisonment till the distress and sale of goods have failed to realise the fine, and the imprisonment should not be allowed to stop the process for the levy of fine so as to give the offender time to remove his goods beyond the reach of the law—17 W R 7.

This clause allows the distress and sale of moveable property of the offender. But growing crops are not moveable property for the purposes of this clause—2 Weir 444. Rights and interests or shares in the joint moveable property of a joint Hindu family, of which the accused is a member, cannot be sold under this clause—2 Weir 442, Q E v Sita Nath 20 Cal 478, Hira Lal v Crown 1915 P L R 28. If the accused is a member of an Aryasmitina family the distress and sale of his moveable property in execution of a warrant under this clause is illegal—2 Weir 443. But according to the Bombay High Court, the words "belonging to the offender" do not mean belonging exclusively to the offender and therefore the share of the accused in the moveable property of the joint Hindu family of which the accused is a member can be attached—Shri Lingappa v Gurlingara, 49 Bom 906, 27 Bom L R 1367. Moveable property (money) belonging to the accused's brother and deposited in Court by the accused's brother as security for the appearance of the accused in a criminal trial cannot be seized, as the money does not belong to the accused. Even the fact that the accused and his brother are members of a joint Hindu family will not enable the Court to seize the money—19 A I J 887. Moveable property of the offender in a Native State cannot be seized, only the property remaining in British India can be seized and sold—2 Weir 444.

1069 Clause (b)—The old law provided for the distress and sale of moveable property only. Immoveable property could not be attached and sold for the recovery of fine—22 Cr I J 39 (Lah), 5 B H C R 63, 20 Cal 478. Clause (b) now allows attachment and sale of immoveable properties also.

1070 Proviso:—Levy of fine after imprisonment—It was held under the old section that an offender who had undergone the full term of imprisonment to which he was sentenced in default of payment of fine was still liable to have the amount levied by distress and sale of any moveable property belonging to him—3 W R 61, because the imprisonment which the Court imposed in default of payment was intended as a punishment for non payment and not as a satisfaction and discharge of the amount due—Ratanlal 91 But the Court had a discretion in the matter whether fine should be recovered after the accused had undergone imprisonment for non payment If it appeared that the fine was not paid for want of means or that its realisation would be ruinous to the offender or his family, it was not desirable that further steps should be taken for the levy of fine, but if there was reason to believe that the offender had means to pay but would not pay and would prefer to undergo imprisonment the law was strictly enforced and steps were taken for the realization of the fine within the period allowed by law—See Punjab Circ, Chapter LI, p 264

The proviso in the present section now lays down that if the offender has undergone the whole term of the imprisonment awarded in default of fine, the Court shall not issue a warrant for levy of the fine "The new proviso directs that after the imprisonment awarded in default of payment of fine has been served no further steps should be taken for the recovery of the fine unless the Court for special reasons to be recorded considers it necessary The infliction of a double punishment is ordinarily uncalled for, and by the issue of warrants for the recovery of fines when there is no real reason why they should be recovered, the time of the police is frequently wasted Convicted persons also are thus harassed for long periods after they have expiated their offences by undergoing imprisonment—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921)

Unless for special reasons to do so—These words at the end of the proviso are intended for the case of a contumacious person who may evade the fine and suffer imprisonment, and yet having the means to pay the fine not pay the fine In such a case the serving of the period of imprisonment provided in default of payment of fine should not absolve the person from paying the fine See Legislative Assembly Debates 8th February 1923 page 2061

1071 Sub-section (2) —Claims of third parties—By this sub section, power is given to the Local Government to make rules regarding the execution of warrants and the determination of claims—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Under the old law, when a claim was preferred by a third party to the ownership of the property distrained, the Magistrate was not required by law to try any such claim, because this section did not contain any provision for the trial of claims which might be preferred to the property distrained under this section—Q E v Gasper 22 Cal 935, 1915 P L R 28 What the Magistrate had to do in such a case was to postpone the sale of the property and to allow the claimant an opportunity of establishing his title in a Court having jurisdiction to determine civil rights—2 Weir 445 When a claim was preferred, the Court was to direct postponement of the sale of the property for such time as might be necessary to enable the claimant to establish his right (by a civil suit) If property was of such a nature that an immediate sale would benefit of the owner, the property could be sold and the sale proceeds held over—Ratanlal 976, Q E v Kandappa, 20 Mad 88, Q E v Gasper 22 Cal 935

Under the present law, the Magistrate is empowered to determine summarily the claims of third parties. This view was also taken in a Burma case—1 Bur S R 332

1072 Sub-section (3) — We would add a clause after sub-section (2) to enable a fine to be realised through the Collector as if the order was a decree of a Civil Court. We can see no reason why a property-owner who may be able to conceal his moveables should not be forced to pay a fine which has been inflicted upon him by a Criminal Court, just as much, and by the same process, as a civil debt. It seems to be recognised that the liability is so enforceable by section 70, Indian Penal Code, and the decision in Emp v Sitanath Mitra 1 L R 20 Cal 478, and we think that this should be made clear by the section under consideration. The proper person to effect such realisation is, we think, the Collector of the district who will be treated as the decree holder —Report of the Select Committee of 1916

The Joint Committee of 1922 approving of this amendment has remarked "We recognise that the procedure prescribed may in some cases involve considerable delay, and we attempted to find some more summary method of proceeding against immoveable property on the lines of those laws which enable moneys due to the Crown to be recovered as arrears of land revenue. We have, however, found ourselves unable to devise any procedure which will not be open to most of the objections put forward against the present clause."

1073 Revision.—The order of a Magistrate for sale of properties under this section is not a judicial proceeding and is not the proper subject of criminal revision, the claimant whose property is wrongly sold under this section may proceed by way of civil suit (either against the purchaser or against the Secretary of State)—1898 A W N 173, 20 Mad 88, 1915 F L R 28

387. A warrant issued under Section 386 sub-section (1)
Effect of such warrant clause (a) by any Court may be executed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Court, and it shall authorize the attachment and sale of any such property without such limits, when endorsed by the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such property is found

Change:—The italicised words have been substituted for the words 'such warrant' (occurring in the old section) by sec 103 of the Cr P C Amendment Act VIII of 1923. The amendment is merely verbal, and consequential upon the amendment of sec 386

The word attachment has been substituted for the word distress in this section as well as in section 386, as the term is more appropriate

388 When an offender has been sentenced to fine only and to imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, and the Court issues a warrant under S 386, it may suspend the execution of the sentence of imprisonment and may release the offender on his executing a bond, with or without sureties, as the Court thinks fit, conditioned for his appearance before such Court on the day appointed for the return to such warrant, such day not being more than fifteen days from the time of executing the bond, and in the event of the fine not having been realized the Court may direct the sentence of imprisonment to be carried into execution at once

388 (1) When an offender has been sentenced to fine only and to imprisonment in default of payment of the fine and the fine is not paid forthwith, the Court may—

(a) order that the fine shall be payable either in full on or before a date not more than thirty days from the date of the order, or in two or three instalments, of which the first shall be payable on or before a date not more than thirty days from the date of the order and the other or others at an interval or at intervals, as the case may be, of not more than thirty days, and

(b) suspend the execution of the sentence of imprisonment and release the offender, on the execution by the offender of a bond with or without sureties as the Court thinks fit, conditioned for his appearance before the Court on the date or dates on or before which payment of the fine or the instalments thereof as the case may be, is to be made, and, if the amount of the fine or of any instalment, as the case may be, is not realised on or before the latest date on which it is able under the order. the may direct the sentence of imprisonment to be carried into execution at once

(2) In any case in which an order for the payment of money has been made, on non-recovery of which imprisonment may be awarded, and the money is not paid forthwith, the Court may require the person ordered to make such payment to enter into a bond as prescribed in sub-sec. (1), and, in default of his so doing, may at once pass sentence of imprisonment as if the money had not been recovered.

(2) The provisions of sub-section (1) shall be applicable also in any case in which an order for the payment of money has been made, on non-recovery of which imprisonment may be awarded, and the money is not paid forthwith, and if the person against whom the order has been made, on being required to enter into a bond such as is referred to in that sub-section, fails to do so, the Court may at once pass sentence of imprisonment

Change:—This section has been redrafted by the Criminal Procedure Code Second Amendment Act XXXVII of 1923. This amendment has been made on the recommendation of the Indian Jails Committee. See Gazette of India 1923 Part V, p. 242.

Sub-section (1) —Sub-section (1) is inapplicable where no alternative sentence of imprisonment (for non-payment of fine) has been passed. Where a Magistrate sentences an offender to a fine, but omits to pass a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, he has no power to bind over the accused in his own recognizance to appear (under clause b) —2 Weir 445.

389 Every warrant for the execution of any sentence

Who may issue war may be issued either by the Judge or rant Magistrate who passed the sentence, or by his successor in office

See 9 W R 50 cited under sec. 386

390 When the accused is sentenced to whipping only,

Execution of sentence the sentence shall subject to the proof whipping only. visions of Section 391 be executed at such place and time as the Court may direct

The italicised words have been added by Sec. 21 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923.

1074 When the accused is sentenced to whipping only, the sentence cannot be deferred it must be carried out as soon as practicable. This section authorises the Court to fix the time and place for its execution but not to postpone it—Ratanlal 906 26 Mad 465. An order that an accused person shall not be whipped until after the expiry of the sentence of imprisonment passed in another trial is illegal. The sentence should be carried out as soon as practicable—I B R (1900—1902) 53. The sentence cannot be postponed pending an intended appeal—26 Mad 465. But these cases should now be read subject to clause (a) of sec 391 which allows postponement of whipping if the accused furnishes bail.

For general rules as to whipping see notes under sec 32

391 (1) When the accused is sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment, in a case which is subject to appeal, the whipping shall not be inflicted until fifteen days from the date of the sentence, or if an appeal is made within that time, until the sentence is confirmed by the Appellate Court, but the whipping shall be inflicted as soon as practicable after the expiry of the fifteen days or in case of an appeal, as soon as practicable after the receipt of the order of the Appellate Court confirming the sentence.

391 (1) When the accused (a) is sentenced to whipping only and furnishes bail to the satisfaction of the Court for his appearance at such time and place as the Court may direct, or

(b) is sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment, the whipping shall not be inflicted until fifteen days from the date of the sentence, or if an appeal is made within that time, until the sentence is confirmed by the Appellate Court, but the whipping shall be inflicted as soon as practicable after the expiry of the fifteen days, or in case of an appeal, as soon as practicable after the receipt of the order of the Appellate Court confirming the sentence.

(2) The whipping shall be inflicted in the presence of the officer in charge of the jail, unless the Judge or Magistrate orders it to be inflicted in his own presence.

(3) No accused person shall be sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment, when the term of imprisonment to which he is sentenced is less than three months.

1075 This section has been amended by Act ... of the Criminal Law

Amendment Act, XII of 1923 The old section contemplated only those cases where the accused was sentenced to whipping as well as to imprisonment, if the accused was sentenced to whipping only, this section did not apply, and the sentence of whipping could not be postponed—2 Weir 446 But the newly added clause (a) now provides for such cases

Postponement of whipping till after imprisonment—Where a person has been sentenced to whipping as well as to imprisonment, the whipping may be postponed as provided by this section, until 15 days from the date of sentence or until confirmation of the sentence on appeal but it is illegal to postpone the sentence of whipping till after the term of imprisonment has expired—6 M H C R App 38 7 M H C R App 29, 4 Bom L R 436 Ratanlal 803 1881 A W N 138, 4 Bom L R 929 Where a Magistrate ordered that the prisoner be brought before him at the expiration of the sentence of imprisonment, and that the sentence of whipping should then be carried out, the High Court cancelled the sentence of whipping as having become inoperative and incapable of being carried out by lapse of time—20 W R 72

As soon as practicable—The whipping must be carried into effect as soon as practicable after the expiry of the time specified in this section If through accident, or neglect or wilful breach of duty of the officer the sentence of whipping was not carried into execution, the prisoner is not thereby freed from liability to undergo the sentence still remaining unexecuted—Ratanlal 136

Double sentence of whipping—An accused cannot be sentenced to a double sentence of whipping when he is convicted of two offences, thus, where a person is convicted of offences under sections 454 and 380 I P C, it is illegal to pass a sentence of 15 stripes for each offence—Ratanlal 955

Sub section (3)—When a sentence of imprisonment for less than three months is awarded an additional sentence of whipping is illegal—2 Bom L R 54

392 (1) In the case of a person of or over sixteen years

Mode of inflicting of age, whipping shall be inflicted with punishment

(2) In no case shall such punishment exceed thirty

Limit of number of stripes stripes, and, in the case of a person under sixteen years of age, it shall not exceed fifteen stripes

Such part of the person—(1) In case of a person of or over sixteen years of age in C I, Madras, Bengal and Assam, the punishment of whipping is inflicted on the bare buttocks, the offender being tied to a triangle—See C P Gazette Notification No 20 of 4-1-1899, Fort St George Gazette, 1898, Part I, p 1248, Halkins 148, Assam Gazette, 1899, Part II, p 384 In Burma the punishment is inflicted on the breech—Burma Gazette 1891, Part I, p 201 In Bombay, if the punishment is inflicted in private (i.e. within the precincts of the prison), it shall be inflicted on the bare buttocks and when inflicted in public (i.e. outside the Jail precincts), across the bare shoulders—Bombay Govt Gazette 1893 Part I, p 110 Bom G R No 608 of 1897

(2) In case of a person under sixteen years of age in Bombay, U P, C P, and the Punjab, the whipping is inflicted on the bare buttocks, with a light rattan not exceeding half an inch in diameter, but the offender is not tied to a triangle but simply held on it or is held in some other convenient way See Bom G R No 6122, dated 16-9-1898, G O No 1290 of 12-5-1898 (U P) C P Gazette Notification No 20 of 4-1-1899 Punjab Gazette 1899 Part I p 314 In Burma the whipping is inflicted on the breech—Burma Gazette 1898, Part I, p 307 In Bengal it may be inflicted on the posteriors or on the hands as the Court may direct—Cal G R and C O page 62 "Having regard to the general feeling of the respectable classes of the people as to the degrading character of the punishment of whipping the Lieutenant-Governor has left it to the discretion of the Court in the case of juvenile offenders, to inflict the punishment on the hand instead of on the buttocks This discretion should be exercised according to the circumstances of each case as age and social position of the offenders and the nature of the offence For very young boys of respectable position convicted of offences which do not imply depravity or confirmed dishonesty strokes on the hand appear to be the appropriate punishment Care is, however, necessary and should be taken to avoid causing serious injury to the hand when whipping is inflicted on the palm"—Cal G R & C O pages 63-64 In C P if the boy is under twelve years of age, the whipping may be inflicted on the hands at the discretion of the Magistrate—C P Gazette Notification No 20 of 4-1-1899

Number of stripes—Under the provisions of this section and the next, not more than one sentence of whipping and that not exceeding thirty stripes, should be awarded at one time—1906 U B R (Cr P C) 47

393 No sentence of whipping shall be executed by instalments and none of the following persons shall be punishable with whipping, namely—

Not to be executed by instalments Exemptions

- (a) females,
- (b) males sentenced to death or to transportation or to penal servitude, or to imprisonment for more than five years,
- (c) males whom the Court considers to be more than forty-five years of age,

1076 This section forbids the execution of the punishment of whipping in respect of certain persons, and since the execution is prohibited, such persons cannot therefore be sentenced to whipping, for it is futile to pass a sentence which cannot be executed. Therefore a person who is sentenced to 7 years rigorous imprisonment cannot be sentenced to whipping in addition because the execution of such punishment is prohibited by clause (b) of this section—Ikbar v Crown, 1919 17 R 30

Sentence of whipping cannot be enhanced—The accused was convicted under section 382 I P C and was sentenced to whipping and the sentence was duly executed. An application was afterwards made to enhance the sentence on the ground that it was inadequate, it was held that the sentence of whipping could not be enhanced by the infliction of an additional number of stripes because under this section no sentence of whipping could be executed by instalments—Ratanlal 537

Clause (b)—A sentence of whipping passed on a person who is already under sentence of death etc., is illegal. Even if the sentence of whipping precedes instead of following the other sentence, the passing of the latter sentence renders the inflicting of the punishment of whipping illegal—Mad 56

394 (1) The punishment of whipping shall not be inflicted unless a medical officer, if Whipping not to be inflicted if offender not in fit state of health present, certifies, or, if there is not a medical officer present, unless it appears to the Magistrate or officer present, that the offender is in a fit state of health to undergo such punishment

(2) If, during the execution of a sentence of whipping, a medical officer certifies, or it appears to the Magistrate or officer present that the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo the remainder of the sentence, the whipping shall be finally stopped

1077 Particular attention should be directed to section 394 which prohibits the execution of a sentence of whipping when the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo that punishment, and all officers are reminded that the Governor General in Council considers that the precaution of having a medical officer present at the time of the infliction of the punishment should be observed in every instance when practicable—Cal G R & C O page 65

Before the commencement of whipping, the Medical Officer must give a certificate whether the offender is in a fit state of health to undergo the whole punishment of whipping. There is no provision of law authorising a medical officer to give a certificate that the accused is fit to receive only a portion of the sentence, such a certificate cannot be held as granted under sub-section (1)—Mad 84. Such a certificate cannot be treated as one under subsection (2), because that subsection refers to a certificate granted during the execution of the sentence—Ibid

Under subsection (1) the Medical Officer is to give a certificate either that the offender is in a fit state of health to undergo the whole sentence passed on him or that he is not in a fit state of health to undergo it at all. If he certifies that the accused is fit to undergo a smaller number of stripes than that ordered by the Magistrate, the certificate cannot be held as one granted under this section, and is invalid, the Magistrate cannot in such a case inflict a smaller number of stripes in accordance with the medical certificate and in lieu of the rest of the stripes not inflicted he cannot award imprisonment under section 395 infra—31 Mad 84

395 (1) In any case in which under Section 394, a sentence of whipping is wholly or partially prevented from being executed, the offender shall be kept in custody till the Court which passed the sentence can revise it, and the said Court may, at its discretion, either remit such sentence, or sentence the offender in lieu of whipping or in lieu of so much of the sentence of whipping as was not executed, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding twelve months or to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees which may be in addition to any other punishment to which he may have been sentenced for the same offence

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize any Court to inflict imprisonment for a term or a fine of an amount exceeding that to which the accused is liable by law, or that which the said Court is competent to inflict

Change—The italicised words have been added by section 105 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 'The Amendment in subsection (1) enables a sentence of fine to be awarded in lieu of a sentence of whipping which cannot be carried out'—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Under the old law it was held that the Court had no power to revise a sentence of whipping by inflicting a fine—11 All 308 Weir (3rd Edn) 993 2 Weir 449 These cases are now rendered obsolete

1078 'Wholly or partially prevented'—Wholly prevented' refers to sub-section (1) of section 394 'Partially prevented' refers to sub-section (2) of that section—31 Mad 84

'The Court which passed the sentence can revise it'—The only Court which can revise the sentence is the Court which passed the sentence. Even where a sentence of imprisonment and whipping passed by a District Magistrate is confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge still the Magistrate is not prevented from revising the sentence—1889 P

the words the Court which passed the sentence do not mean the same officer who inflicted the sentence therefore where a Magistrate who passed the original sentence of whipping was transferred the District Magistrate who had jurisdiction over the whole district was competent to commute the sentence of whipping to one of imprisonment—1901 P R 33

Power of remission—The Court can revise the sentence of whipping by awarding solitary confinement in lieu of whipping under this section—1899 P R 14 The Court may remit the sentence altogether, even though it is competent to inflict a term of imprisonment in lieu of whipping—11 I B R 202

The imprisonment which the Court can award under this section must not exceed the term which the Court is competent to award Where a Magistrate sentences the accused to the maximum term of imprisonment which he is competent to inflict as well as whipping, and the whipping cannot be carried out he cannot sentence him to a further term of imprisonment in lieu of whipping but ought to remit the sentence of whipping altogether—2 Weir 419 21 All 25 1901 P R 11

396 (1) When sentence is passed under this Code on an escaped convict, such sentence, if of

Execution of sentences on escaped convicts death, fine or whipping, shall, subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, take effect immediately, and, if of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, shall take effect according to the following rules, that is to say—

(2) If the new sentence is severer in its kind than the sentence which such convict was undergoing when he escaped, the new sentence shall take effect immediately

(3) When the new sentence is not severer in its kind than the sentence the convict was undergoing when he escaped, the new sentence shall take effect after he has suffered imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, as the case may be for a further period equal to that which, at the time of his escape, remained unexpired of his former sentence

Explanation—For the purposes of this section—

(a) a sentence of transportation or penal servitude shall be deemed severer than a sentence of imprisonment,

(b) a sentence of imprisonment with solitary confinement shall be deemed severer than a sentence of the same description of imprisonment without solitary confinement, and

- (c) a sentence of rigorous imprisonment shall be deemed severer than a sentence of simple imprisonment with or without solitary confinement

1079 The word sentence includes an order of imprisonment passed under section 123—Ratanlal 774 Contra—3 I B R 72

What this section contemplates is that the severer sentence must be undergone first. Where the accused who was a life-convict under sentence of transportation for murder was convicted for attempting to escape from lawful custody and was sentenced to four months rigorous imprisonment the latter sentence must not commence immediately but should be undergone after the expiry of the sentence of transportation—Ratanlal 965

397 When a person already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation is sentenced to imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, such imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation shall commence at the expiration of the imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation to which he has been previously sentenced, unless the Court directs that the subsequent sentence shall run concurrently with such previous sentence

Provided that if he is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment and the sentence on such subsequent conviction is one of transportation the Court may in its discretion direct that the latter sentence shall commence immediately or at the expiration of the imprisonment to which he has been previously sentenced

Provided further that where a person who has been sentenced to imprisonment by an order under Section 123 in default of furnishing security is whilst undergoing such sentence, sentenced to imprisonment for an offence committed prior to the making of such order the latter sentence shall commence immediately

Change—The italicised words and the second proviso have been added by section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below.

1080 Principle—The general rule is that a sentence commences to run from the time of its being passed and this section creates an exception in the case of persons already undergoing imprisonment and postpones the operation of the subsequent sentence until after the expiry of the previous sentence—3 B I R 1 C 50 20 V R 70

'Undergoing imprisonment'—A person is said to be undergoing an imprisonment the moment the sentence of imprisonment is passed, though he has not yet been sent to jail. Therefore, where a person is tried on the same day for two different offences in two different trials, then as soon as the first trial is over and he is convicted and sentenced he is said to 'undergo imprisonment', and if he is convicted and sentenced in the second trial also, he is said to be sentenced to imprisonment 'while already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment' within the meaning of this section—2 Weir 451 Emp v Nga Po 3 Bur L J 32 25 Cr L J 1310. But in Makhan v Emp, 19 Cr L J 207 (All), it has been held that until an accused has actually passed into jail, he cannot be said to be undergoing imprisonment, and therefore where two sentences of imprisonment are passed in two trials on the same accused on the same day, this section does not apply, as the accused cannot be said to be 'undergoing imprisonment' under the first trial, as soon as the sentence is passed therefore the second imprisonment need not commence after the expiry of the imprisonment awarded in the first trial the Magistrate may order that the two sentences should be concurrent.

Detention under the order of a Civil Court is not a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this section therefore a Magistrate has no power to order that the sentence of imprisonment awarded by him shall take effect on the expiry of a term of detention in the Civil jail which had been ordered by a Civil Court—Emp v Makha Gy 4 Bur L J 9 3 Rang 93 26 Cr L J 821 A I R 1925 Rang 202.

1081 Order of sentences—The meaning of this section is that sentences will take effect in the order in which they are passed. The sentence which is first passed and which the accused is undergoing must be given effect to first, and any subsequent sentence passed upon the accused must follow after the expiration of the first sentence. Where a Magistrate passes separate sentences of imprisonment on the same accused in separate trials but on the same day, the sentences will take effect in the order in which they are passed, by the terms of this section, and the Magistrate need not therefore give any direction in his judgment in respect of the same—2 Weir 451. In another case appearing on the same page of the same report (2 Weir 451) however it is laid down that the direction that the sentence in one case is to run from the date of the expiration of the sentence in a previous case passed on the same day must appear in the body of the sentence and should also be inserted in the warrant.

But the above rule as to the sequence of sentences applies only to the 1st para of this section. It is only the sentences mentioned in para 1 that can be directed to take effect in the order in which they were passed—Rattinal 300. As regards the sentences mentioned in the first proviso, the Magistrate has a discretion to direct either that the subsequent sentence should take effect after the expiration of the prior sentence, or that it should take effect at once.

Imprisonment in foreign territory—Where a person sentenced to imprisonment in a foreign territory is subsequently convicted of an offence in British India, it is competent for the Magistrate to pass a sentence which shall take effect after the expiration of the sentence in the foreign State—20 Mad 444

1082 Concurrent sentences.—It was held, prior to the present amendment, that a Magistrate could not direct that the subsequent sentence should run concurrently with the previous sentence because a Magistrate could pass concurrent sentences only when the offences were tried at one and the same trial (see sec 35)—20 C W N 1300 Ratanlal 552 Ratanlal 18, 2 Bom L R 111 4 Bom L R 8-6 1912 M W N 396, 2 Weir 453, 19 A L J 310 11 A L J 263 Vga Sein Po v Emp 1 Rang 306, 1912 P L R 20 2 S L R 23 15 C P L R 57 4 L B R 147 even where the trials were held on the same day the Magistrate could not make the sentences in the two trials concurrent—1894 P R 12 But now the amendment made at the end of the first para of this section will allow the subsequent sentence to run concurrently with the previous one "In accordance with the amendment a Court will be empowered to pass a sentence to run concurrently with any other term of imprisonment etc which the person convicted is already undergoing"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

It the expiration of—A person was convicted by a Magistrate and sentenced to 2 years imprisonment and a month afterwards he was sentenced to three years imprisonment by the Court of Session, which directed the sentence to take effect on the expiration of the sentence passed by the Magistrate. On appeal the conviction and sentence passed by the Magistrate were set aside. It was held that the sentence of the Sessions Court must be deemed to have commenced from the time it was ordered to commence viz after the expiration of the Magistrate's sentence whether by reversal or completion of the punishment and not before—Ratanlal 139 Ratanlal 523 But in 2 Weir 450 under similar circumstances, it was held that the imprisonment already undergone must be reckoned as imprisonment under the sentence in the conviction which was not reversed. So also the Calcutta High Court lays down "Where a prisoner has been committed to jail under two separate warrants, the sentence in the one to take effect from the expiry of the sentence in the other, the date of such second sentence shall in the event of the first sentence being remitted in appeal be presumed to take effect from the date on which he was committed to jail under the first or original sentence—Cal G R & C O page 40 But these remarks can only apply where the sentences in the two trials are of the same kind, otherwise the Bombay rulings cited above should apply. Those rulings are more reasonable and practical though the Madras case and the Calcutta High Court Rule are more favourable to the accused.

First proviso—Where a person who is already undergoing imprisonment is sentenced by the Sessions Judge to transportation for life, the sentence of transportation passed by him will commence at the expiration of the previous sentence of imprisonment unless the Judge in his discretion makes a further order that the sentence of transportation shall take effect immediately—Ratanlal 391

An order directing that a sentence shall take effect on the expiration of another sentence, is not a part of the judgment and may therefore be made after the judgment has been signed. Therefore, where a Sessions Judge in ignorance of the fact that the accused is already undergoing imprisonment sentences him to transportation for life, it is subsequently open to him to order even after the judgment has been signed, that the sentence of transportation shall take effect immediately—Ratanlal 391

1083 Second proviso—This proviso lays down that if a person who is imprisoned under section 123 in default of furnishing security, is subsequently sentenced to imprisonment for an offence committed prior to the passing of the order under section 123 the latter sentence (i.e. the substantive sentence of imprisonment) shall take effect immediately. This is also laid down in a large number of decided cases 31 Mad 515 5 Bom 178 5 Bom L R 26 8 N L R 20

Under the old law there was no distinction as to whether the offence for which the person imprisoned under section 123 was subsequently convicted was committed before or after the making of the order under section 123. The law was that if a person undergoing imprisonment under section 123 was subsequently convicted of an offence and sentenced to imprisonment (whether this offence was committed before or after the sentence of imprisonment passed under section 123 was immaterial) the latter imprisonment must take effect at once and should not be postponed till after the expiry of the period of imprisonment awarded under section 123—Ratanlal 970 2 Weir 452 1 Bur S R 364 16 (C L J) 622 (Mad) Emp v Ilishu Balakrishna 14 Bom L R 965 5 Bom L R 26 6 Bom L R 1098 1914 M W L 500 3 S L R 114 (Crown v Sukhil 15 S L R 203 Crown v Ghulan 7 S L R 203 27 Mad 525 31 Mad 515 37 Bom 178 Shin Tiu g v Emp 10 Bur L T 266 1815 P R 14, 8 N L R 20. And this law has not been altered under the present section. In 34 Bom 326 and Markunda v A E, 1 P L J 212 it has been held that the two sentences must run concurrently. This would be in consonance with the amendment made at the end of the first part of this section. (In 30 All 334 it was held that the sentence under section 123 must take effect first. But this ruling was dissented from in almost all the cases cited above.)

With reference to this amendment the Joint Committee (1922) observe: "We think that the law should be that in cases where an offence has been committed prior to the order under sec 123 but the conviction takes place subsequently, the sentences should ordinarily run concurrently but where the offence is committed after the order under sec 123 has been passed e.g. cases of escape from custody or jail or offences committed in jail then we think that the imprisonment for the subsequent offence should ordinarily not be concurrent, otherwise the prisoner might in some cases receive no further punishment for his subsequent offence."

398 (1) Nothing in Section 396 or Section 397 shall be

Saving to Ss 396 and 397 held to excuse any person from any part of the punishment to which he is liable upon his former or subsequent conviction

(2) When an award of imprisonment in default of payment of a fine is annexed to a substantive sentence of imprisonment, or to a sentence of transportation or penal servitude for an offence punishable with imprisonment, and the person undergoing the sentence is after its execution to undergo a further substantive sentence or further substantive sentences of imprisonment, transportation or penal servitude, effect shall not be given to the award of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine until the person has undergone the further sentence or sentences

Subsection (2) renders obsolete the ruling in Ratanlal 132, where it has been held that when a convict is imprisoned under two warrants which order consecutive punishments the first warrant should be completely executed both in respect of the substantive sentence of imprisonment and the imprisonment in default of fine before any effect is given to the second warrant. Now under subsection (2) the imprisonment in default of payment of fine shall take effect last of all is sentenced by any Criminal Court to imprisonment for any offence, the Court may direct that such person, instead of being imprisoned in a criminal jail, shall be confined in any reformatory established by the Local Government as a fit place for confinement in which there are means of suitable discipline and of training in some branch of useful industry or which is kept by a person willing to obey such rules as the Local Government prescribes with regard to the discipline and training of persons confined therein

(2) All persons confined under this section shall be subject to the rules so prescribed

(3) This section shall not apply to any place in which the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897, is for the time being in force

1084 A sentence of imprisonment is a condition precedent to an order under this section. Where there is no preliminary sentence of imprisonment an order under this section cannot be passed—1910 P R 34

The period of detention in the Reformatory School should be a definite period. Where the trying Magistrate ordered the offender to be detained in a Reformatory for five years or until he attains the age of 18 years, in lieu of imprisonment it was held that the words or until 18 years should be deleted—Emp v Rama Sudama 15 Bom L R 306

The period of detention in the Reformatory must not be longer than the period of imprisonment at first ordered. Where a Magistrate find a juvenile offender guilty of theft in a building sentenced him to three months rigorous imprisonment and ordered that in lieu of that sentence the offender should be confined in a Reformatory for 14 months it was held that having once passed a sentence of imprisonment for a particular term it was not competent to the Magistrate to direct that the offender should be confined in a Reformatory for a longer term—Ratanlal 109

Reformatory —Where no Reformatories have been established but only Reformatory Schools the Court should not order the offender under this section to be sent to a Reformatory but should pass an order under the Reformatory Schools Act sending the boy to a Reformatory School—11 Mad 94

Subsection (3) —The introduction of the Reformatory Schools Act repeals the operation of this section so far as may be practicable in those places where that Act applies—12 Mad 94 Thus this section has no application in the Punjab where the Reformatory Schools Act is in force—Crown v Noor Mohamed 1918 P R 17

400 When a sentence has been fully executed, the officer executing it shall return the warrant to the Court from which it issued with an endorsement under his hand certifying the manner in which the sentence has been executed

CHAPTER XXIX

OF SUSPENSIONS REMISSIONS AND COMMUTATIONS OF SENTENCES

401 (1) When any person has been sentenced to punishment for an offence, the Governor General in Council or the Local Government may, at any time without conditions or upon any conditions which the person sentenced accepts, suspend the execution of his sentence or remit the whole or any part of the punishment to which he has been sentenced.

(2) Whenever an application is made to the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government for the suspension or remission of a sentence, the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government, as the case may be, may require the presiding Judge of the Court before or by which the conviction was had or confirmed to state his opinion as to whether the application should be granted or refused, together with his reasons for such opinion and also to forward with the statement of such opinion a certified copy of the record of the trial or of such record thereof as exists

(3) If any condition on which a sentence has been suspended or remitted is, in the opinion of the Governor-General in Council or of the Local Government, as the case may be, not fulfilled, the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government may cancel the suspension or remission, and thereupon the person in whose favour the sentence has been suspended or remitted may, if at large, be arrested by any police-officer without warrant and remanded to undergo the unexpired portion of the sentence

(4) The condition on which a sentence is suspended or remitted under this section, may be one to be fulfilled by the person in whose favour the sentence is suspended or remitted, or one independent of his will

(4d) The provisions of the above sub-sections shall also apply to any order passed by a Criminal Court under any section of this Code or of any other law which restricts the liberty of any person or imposes any liability upon him or his property

(5) Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to interfere with the right of His Majesty, or of the Governor-General when such right is delegated to him, to grant pardons, reprieves, respites or remissions of punishment

(5A) Where a conditional pardon is granted by His Majesty or, in virtue of any powers delegated to him, by the Governor-General any condition thereby imposed of whatever nature shall be deemed to have been imposed by a sentence of a competent Court under this Code and shall be enforceable accordingly

(6) The Governor-General in Council and the Local Government may, by general rule, or special orders, give directions as to the suspension of sentences and the conditions on which petitions should be presented and dealt with.

Change.—The italicised words and subsections (4d) and (5A) have been added by section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

1085 Scope of section.—This section applies only to persons sentenced to imprisonment, and not to persons upon whom a conditional pardon has been tendered under section 337—11 VII 75

In cases of murder, the Judge may report any circumstances calling for a mitigation of the punishment

the Government may thereupon take such action under this section as it thinks proper—23 Cal 604, 10 Bom 512 In these two cases, the accused committed murder without any apparent sane motive, and was suffering from mental derangement of some sort, and the High Court holding that the accused was not entitled to be acquitted under section 84 I P C, recommended the case to the Local Government under this section to be dealt with in such manner as it thought fit

Procedure:—All recommendations for remission or suspension of a sentence made under section 401 by an officer of any subordinate Court to the Local Government, in regard to a convict whose case has been before the High Court on appeal, shall be made through the High Court —Cal G R & C O p 40

Certified copy of record—The original record need not be sent. Objection has been taken to the inconvenience of this, and we think that it will be sufficient to require a certified copy of the record to be furnished —Report of the Select Committee of 1916

Such record thereof as exists —“It is well known that in the case of proceedings in a High Court the Judges object to their notes being treated as part of the record, and we have therefore referred in our proposed amendment of section 401 (2) to ‘a certified copy of the record of the trial or of such record thereof as exists’ We think in cases where it is necessary, in considering a petition for mercy, for Government to know, as it frequently may be the nature of the evidence given at a trial in a High Court we can safely trust to the courtesy of High Court Judges to furnish a copy of their notes —Report of the Select Committee of 1916

Subsections (4 A) and (5 A) —“The new clause (4 A) is intended to make it clear that the power to remit sentences conferred by section 401 can be exercised in the case of orders of a penal nature, e.g., orders under section 503 of the Code. The object of the new clause (5 A) is to enable any condition upon which a pardon has been granted by His Majesty or by the Governor General when such power has been delegated to him, to be enforced in the same way as a sentence of a Court” —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921)

In subsection (4 A), the word ‘has’ has been used instead of the more common word ‘yet’ to make it clear that this section applies to the case of persons sentenced by tribunals constituted by Regulations and Ordinances—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

Subsection (5) —“Or of the Governor General” —“We have made a formal amendment in this subsection in view of the special delegation to the present Governor General of His Majesty’s prerogative of pardon” —Report of the Select Committee of 1916

402 (1) The Governor-General in Council or the Local Government may, without the consent of the person sentenced, commute any one of the following sentences for any other mentioned after it —

death, transportation, penal servitude, rigorous imprisonment for a term not exceeding that to which he might have been sentenced, simple imprisonment for a like term, fine

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect the provisions of Section 54 or Section 55 of the Indian Penal Code

Sub section (2) has been added by section 108 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Doubts have been expressed as to the consistency of section 402 with section 54 or 55 of the Indian Penal Code, and these have now been resolved.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

CHAPTER XXX

OF PREVIOUS ACQUITTALS OR CONVICTIONS

403 (1) A person who has once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence

Person once convicted or acquitted not to be tried for same offence and convicted or acquitted of such offence shall while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, not be liable to be tried again for the same offence, nor on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made under section 236, or for which he might have been convicted under sec 237

(2) A person acquitted or convicted of an offence may be afterwards tried for any distinct offence for which a separate charge might have been made against him on the former trial under section 235, sub section (1)

(3) A person convicted of any offence constituted by any act causing consequences which, together with such act, constituted a different offence from that of which he was convicted, may be afterwards tried for such last mentioned offence, if the consequences had not happened, or were not known to the Court to have happened, at the time when he was convicted

(4) A person acquitted or convicted of any offence constituted by any acts may, notwithstanding such acquittal or conviction, be subsequently charged with, and tried for, any other offence constituted by the same acts which he may have committed, if the Court by which he was first tried was not competent to try the offence with which he is subsequently charged

(5) Nothing in this section shall affect the provisions of section 26 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, or section 188 of this Code

Explanation—The dismissal of a complaint, the stopping of proceedings under section 249, the discharge of the accused, or any entry made upon a charge under section 273, is not an acquittal for the purposes of this section

Illustrations

(a) A is tried upon a charge of theft as a servant and acquitted. He cannot afterwards, while the acquittal remains in force, be charged with theft as a servant, or upon the same facts with theft simply, or with criminal breach of trust

(b) A is tried upon a charge of murder and acquitted. There is no charge of robbery, but it appears from the facts that A committed robbery at the time when the murder was committed, he may afterwards be charged with, and tried for, robbery

(c) A is tried for causing grievous hurt and convicted. The person injured afterwards dies. A may be tried again for culpable homicide

(d) A is charged before the Court of Session and convicted of the culpable homicide of B. A may not afterwards be tried on the same facts for the murder of B

(e) A is charged by a Magistrate of the first class with, and convicted by him of, voluntarily causing hurt to B. A may not afterwards be tried for voluntarily causing grievous hurt to B on the same facts, unless the case comes within paragraph 3 of the section

(f) A is charged by a Magistrate of the second class with, and convicted by him of, theft of property from the person of B. A may be subsequently charged with, and tried for, robbery on the same facts

(g) A, B and C are charged by a Magistrate of the first class with, and convicted by him of, robbing D. A, B and C may afterwards be charged with, and tried for, dacoity on the same facts

1086 Principle.—This section is an amplification of the well known maxim of law 'nemo debet bis vexari'. This principle does not rest on any doctrine of estoppel but embodies the well established rule of common law, that a man may not be put twice in peril for the same offence—29 Mad 126 (F B) Where an offence has already been the subject of judicial investigation and adjudication, and there has been an acquittal, the acquittal is conclusive, and it would be a very dangerous principle to adopt to regard a judgment of not guilty as not fully establishing the innocence of the accused—Rex v Plummer, [1902] 2 K B 339, cited in 38 Cal 559 (578)

1087 A person —Person not tried at the first trial —This section bars a subsequent trial of the same person who had once been placed on trial for the same offence. But does it bar the trial of persons who had not been placed in the first trial but who were implicated in the offence committed by the accused who was placed in the first trial? According to 7 C W N 493, the principle of this section extends to such persons, and therefore where three out of five persons concerned in the same offence were at first placed on trial and acquitted, a subsequent trial of the remaining two persons for the abetment of the offence was barred by this section. But this ruling has been disapproved of in several other cases. Thus, where on a complaint charging a number of persons with several offences, only three were sent up for trial and they were acquitted on the ground that the prosecution case was untrue, and subsequently other persons alleged to be implicated in the same offences were sent up, it was held (dissenting from 7 C W N 493) that the trial of these persons was not barred under this section—37 Cal 680. So also, where in a previous trial, two persons were acquitted by the jury of the offence of conspiring with a third person who was not placed on trial, it was held that the acquittal of those two persons did not operate as a bar to the trial of the third person—41 Cal 754. See also 10 C W N 1031.

Person absent in the first trial —Where a complaint against two accused A and B was dismissed and the accused A who attended Court to answer the charge was acquitted, the acquittal would operate in favour of the other accused (B) also who was absent, and would bar fresh proceedings against him on the same facts—4 C W N 346. In this case the second accused was placed on trial, though he was absent on the day of hearing. But where out of three persons concerned in an offence, two persons were found and the third absconded and the two were placed on trial and convicted, the case of the third when found, should be heard and decided irrespective of the fact that there had been a previous trial and conviction of the other accused. The second trial is not barred by this section—36 All 168.

1088 "Tried".—There must be a previous trial of the accused, to bar a subsequent trial under this section. Where a complaint of a non-cognizable offence was made before the Police and the Magistrate did not take cognizance of that offence on the police report, there could not be said to have been a trial of that offence, and consequently a subsequent complaint of that offence is not barred by this section—5 Bom 405. Also, where a Magistrate after taking cognizance of an offence dismissed the complaint under section 203, there cannot be said to have trial of the accused, and it is open to the Magistrate to rehear the complaint—29 Mad 126 So also, where no process had been issued against the accused, and no proceedings taken against them, but the Magistrate simply permitted the withdrawal of the charge sheets against the accused it was held that the withdrawal of the charge sheets was no bar to fresh proceedings being taken against the accused by drawing fresh charge-sheets—In re Muthia Moopan 36 Mad 315 14 Cr L J 559

It is not necessary that there should be a full previous trial and an acquittal or conviction on the merits. Where the accused appears and answers to a charge, he is said to be tried although the case may be dismissed for non appearance of the complainant. He is not liable to be tried again for the same offence on the same facts upon the complaint of another person—2 Weir 457 34 Mad 253 The words 'who has once been tried' mean against whom proceedings have been commenced in Court, i.e. against whom the Court has taken cognizance of the offence and issued process. Therefore where the Police filed a charge sheet against a certain person before a Magistrate and summons was issued, but before it was served the Public Prosecutor, with the consent of the Court, withdrew from the prosecution under sec 494 and the accused was acquitted, it was held that the accused must be said to have been 'tried and acquitted' within the meaning of this section and the acquittal barred a further trial for the same offence—40 Mad 976 But in another Madras case it is held that the non appearance of a complainant on the first day of hearing and the consequent acquittal of the accused under sec 247 do not bar a retrial, because the accused cannot be said to have been 'tried' on the first complaint the trial of an accused in a summons case cannot be said to begin until the particulars of the offence are stated to the accused under sec 242, and where there is nothing in the record to show that any trial was commenced on the first complaint, sec 403 would not bar the Court from taking cognizance of the second complaint—40 Mad 977 (Note) See Note 1083 below

Irregularity in the first trial—If there is a gross irregularity or illegality in a trial, such trial will not operate as a bar to a retrial of the accused for the same offence—13 W R 42 But if the trial is regularly conducted, it will bar a second trial even though the second Court considers that the former conviction or acquittal was unwarranted by the evidence given in the first trial—7 W R 15 Even if the order of acquittal was passed in the first trial under a misapprehension of law, it would still operate as a bar to a second trial—4 S I R 174 The absence of a charge does not make the trial illegal. Where the trial had otherwise been regularly conducted even though no formal charge had been framed, the order of acquittal would bar subsequent proceedings—3 All 129

But where the first trial was conducted without any complaint at all the trial was void ab initio and therefore a second trial is not barred—Sanakram v Emp 19 Cr L J 796 (Oudh)

when the accused is acquitted in the first trial and not where he is simply discharged—Parmeshwar v Jagannath 17 A L J 867

What amounts to acquittal—It is not necessary that there should be an acquittal on the merits therefore the withdrawal of the remaining charges under section 240 on conviction of one of several charges has the effect of acquittal and bars a fresh trial on the same facts—19 W R 55 The non appearance of the complainant in a summons case has the effect of acquitting the accused (see 247) and he cannot be tried again for the same offence—see 7 Weir 45 45 All 58 38 C L J 196, 1885 A W N 43 4 C W N 346 2 P L T 170 Kiran Sarkar v Fmp 5 P I T 15 24 Cr I J 815 In re Cuggilapu Paddaya 34 Mad 253 26 M L J 160 40 Mad 976 Contra—40 Mad 977 (Note) cited above The withdrawal of a summons-case by the complainant operates as an acquittal of the accused A compromise under sec 245 has the effect of acquittal—Ratanlal 519 1914 P R 29 The withdrawal of the Public Prosecutor from the case under section 494 (b) has the effect of acquitting the accused and will bar a fresh trial—12 Mad 35, Mahadeogir v Fmp 9 N I R 26 40 Mad 976 23 Cr L J 305 (Sind) But an order made under sec 494 (a) is an order of discharge of the accused person and sec 403 does not bar the entertainment of a fresh complaint—Ramanaid v Ali Hassan 26 Cr I J 129 (Pat) The dismissal of a summons-case amounts to an acquittal—1917 P W R 14 An order of acquittal under sec 258 cannot be treated as an order of discharge it is one of acquittal and bars a second trial of the same offence on the same facts—43 Mad 330

But a wrong order of acquittal will not bar a subsequent trial under this section If a Magistrate tries a warrant case as a summons case and acquits the accused without framing a charge such an order of acquittal will be treated as one of discharge only and cannot operate as a bar to a re trial—1886 A W N 260 1888 A W N 96 If in a warrant case before the charge is drawn up and the accused called upon to plead to it the Magistrate erroneously acquits the accused the acquittal amounts only to a discharge and does not bar a re trial—6 W R 13 (But if the trial has been otherwise regularly conducted the absence of a formal charge will not convert the order of acquittal into one of discharge, and the order of acquittal will bar a re trial—3 All 129) Where a preliminary charge-sheet was laid by the Police before the Magistrate under sec 107 against several persons but the Police intending to withdraw it in order that they might present a fresh charge sheet against some only of those included in it the Magistrate permitted the withdrawal and endorsed on the charge-sheet that the accused were acquitted, it was held that such an endorsement was illegal because neither an order of discharge nor one of acquittal could be in a case where no process had been issued against the accused and therefore the Magistrate's order was no bar to fresh proceedings being taken on a second charge-sheet—36 Mad 315

On the other hand, where a person who ought to have been acquitted is erroneously ordered to be discharged only, the order of discharge will be treated as one of acquittal and will bar a retrial. Thus, where a Public Prosecutor withdraws from the case under sec 494, after the frame of charge the accused ought to be acquitted and not discharged. If however, he is ordered to be discharged he will be deemed to have been acquitted and a subsequent trial and conviction on the same facts is illegal and will be set aside—12 Mad 35. So also where in a warrant case the accused has pleaded to a charge the Magistrate can either convict or acquit him. His order dismissing the case will be one of acquittal and not one of discharge of the accused—5 C I R 259 1914 P R 29.

Burden of proof—The burden of proof of previous conviction or acquittal is upon the party setting it up—1889 A W N 8.

1090 Court of competent jurisdiction—The Council of Elders established under the Punjab Frontier Regulation (IV of 1887) is a Court of competent jurisdiction for the purposes of this section, and a person convicted by such Council cannot be retried on the same facts—1884 P R 30. Under the Burma Village Act the village headman has the power to try as a Court an offence under sec 294 I P C and other offences. Therefore a person who had once been tried by the village headman for an offence under sec 294 I P C is not liable to be tried again for the same offence—144 E v A F 1 Rang 449.

It is necessary to a plea of autre fois acquit that the first Court should have had competent jurisdiction to try the offence and therefore the conviction or acquittal of an accused by a Court not having jurisdiction is no bar to the institution of fresh proceedings against the accused on the same facts—2 W R 9 (1 W R 11). A trial by a Court not having jurisdiction is void ab initio and the accused if acquitted is liable to be retried. It is not necessary to get the trial set aside before the accused can be retried—8 Bom 307. Where a conviction by a Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try the offence is set aside by the Appellate Court and that Court discharges the accused without ordering a retrial this section does not bar fresh proceedings being taken in the proper Court—29 Cal 412, 39 All 203. But where an accused is tried and acquitted by a Court which on the face of it is a Court of competent jurisdiction in respect of the offence charged his subsequent trial is barred by this section and the second Court in which the accused is tried again is not entitled to impeach the competency of the Court which held the first trial on the ground that the presiding officer might perhaps have laboured under the disqualification prescribed by sec 556 of the Code. Until the order of acquittal passed by the first Court is set aside by some competent Court, the man acquitted is entitled to plead it under sec 403 in connection with any other proceeding that may be taken against him—Darbari v A F, 8 A L J 1129.

The trial of the accused by a Court in a Native State bars their trial by a Court in British India on the same facts and for the same offence—Teja Singh v Emp, 5 Lah 1 J 574.

Where the law requires a previous sanction (now abolished) or complaint under sec 195 before a charge can be entertained by a Court that Court is not a Court of competent jurisdiction until the sanction has been obtained or the complaint has been made—Emp v Jiwan, 37 All 107.

16 Cr I J 144, 22 Bom 711 40 Bom 97 Therefore, where the accused was acquitted in the previous trial for the offence of forgery and cheating a Sub-Registrar, for which no sanction was obtained under section 195 before prosecution the acquittal did not bar a subsequent trial for aiding and abetting cheating held after a formal sanction had been granted by the Sub-Registrar The previous trial was not a trial by a Court of competent jurisdiction since no sanction under sec 195 was obtained before trial—Fulp v Jivan 13 A I J 4 37 All 107 Contra—36 Mad 308 where it was held that the absence of a sanction or complaint did not affect the competency of the tribunal But this ruling is no longer good law and under the amended provisions of sec 195 a complaint by the Court or public servant concerned is essential to the jurisdiction of the Court to try the case

No sanction is required for a prosecution under sec 82 of the Registration Act and therefore a Court has competent jurisdiction to try the accused for that offence without a sanction—Maung Saing v K E 1 Rang 299 23 Cr I J 191 (following 11 Cal 566)

While such conviction or acquittal remains in force—This means 'as long as such conviction or acquittal is not set aside by a Court of Appeal or Revision If the conviction or acquittal is set aside by the Appellate Court the result will be that the previous trial is annulled and the prisoner may be again put upon his trial—7 W R 2 7 W R 3 So long as the conviction or acquittal is not set aside it will bar a second trial even though the second Court considers that the acquittal in the first trial is not warranted by the evidence produced in the first trial—7 W R 15 So also an acquittal of an offence arising out of certain facts under a wrong section will prevent a further inquiry into any offence based on the same facts until that acquittal is set aside—Ram Adh v Ram Saran 26 O C 282

1091 Retrial—Where the jury is discharged under section 305 the accused may be retried under section 308 such a retrial is not barred by this section In such a case the accused is being tried on the original indictment and not tried again The duty of the Court is to continue the trial of the accused before another jury and the process may continue, without the accused being tried again under section 403—Emp v Nirmal Kanta 41 Cal 1072 (Moreover in such a case i.e. where the jury is discharged under section 305 the accused is neither convicted nor acquitted and therefore his retrial is not barred under this section)

An appeal or a revision is not a retrial but a continuation of the same trial—23 Cal 975 9 All 134 and therefore the Court of Appeal can convict the accused on a charge on which he has been acquitted by the first Court or order a retrial on the same charge—22 Cal 377

1092 "For the same offence"—The former conviction or acquittal is a bar to a second trial if the offence is the same Thus, a person charged with and acquitted of an offence under the Abhaya Law (Bombay Act V of 18-8) cannot subsequently be tried for the same offence—10 Bom 181 If the offences be different and based on different though based on the same evidence, the previous trial will not bar a second trial. Thus, where the prisoner was charged with the forging of a certain document in the first trial and acquitted, he can afterwards be tried for the forging of some other document with regard to which evidence was given at the previous trial. It would be no defence in the second trial that evidence was given in the first trial which if believed would have ended in his conviction for both the offences—7 W R 15. The trial of the accused for the dishonest receiving or retaining of certain stolen articles bars a second trial of the accused in respect of other stolen articles found in his possession on the same date, in the absence of evidence to show that the different articles which were the subject of the charges in the two trials were received at different times—Ganesh Sahu v Emp 50 Cal 594. A E v Bishan Singh, 3 Pat 503 (519). 5 P L T 319. 25 Cr L J 738. Ishan Muchi v Q F, 15 Cal 511, Q E v Mahan 15 All 317.

Where a person has been tried for some offence and acquitted, he cannot be subsequently charged with conspiracy of which that offence is alleged to form a part—38 Cal 559.

Continuing offence —A person who has once been tried for building a house without the sanction of the Municipal Committee and acquitted cannot be retried for the same offence simply on the ground that the house continues to stand and thus constitutes a continuing offence. The previous acquittal will bar a retrial—1917 P W R 17.

Second complaint by different person —A person once convicted of an offence cannot be tried again for the same offence and on the same facts even though the complainant in the second case is not the same person as the complainant in the first case. Thus, the accused assaulted several persons A, B etc. At first A filed a complaint against the accused, and they were convicted under section 323 I P C. Afterwards B filed a similar complaint against the same accused on the same facts. Held that the second trial was barred—Ham Chaudh v Emp 18 A L J 83.

'Same facts' —A Court ought not to decide that a charge pending trial before him is barred under this section without an investigation of the facts put forward on behalf of the complainant—Radha Kishan v Fatik chand 23 C W N 543. Where the complainant charges the accused before the Magistrate with a certain offence, and a preliminary objection is put forward on behalf of the accused that he had been previously tried on the same facts in another Court and acquitted it is the duty of the Magistrate to hear the evidence and ascertain what are the facts in the two cases, in order to determine whether the facts in the present case are the same as those in the previous case—M V Mukherjee v Matangi Charan Palit 23 C W N 599. Where the accused was charged in the former trial for an offence under sec 401 I P C, but the charge failed because the approver's statement on which the prosecution was based was considered unreliable, a subsequent trial for an offence under sec 413 I P C is not barred by the provisions of this section, because the second trial is not based on the same facts as those on which the former trial proceeded. In the first trial the prosecution rested primarily on the approver's statement, but in the second trial the prosecution is based entirely on the evidence as to the discovery of the stolen property in the house of the accused—Chhappu v Emp 26 P L R 470 26 Cr L J 1097

1093 Trial for different offence upon the same facts:—The protection offered by this section extends to different offences only when they are based on the same facts and fall within the provisions of section 236 or section 237—1 Bom L R 15 Where a person has been tried and convicted or acquitted for an offence arising out of a particular set of facts, he cannot, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, be again tried in respect of any offence based on the same facts unless the case can be brought under one or other of the specific exceptions to the rule provided by subsections (2) to (4)—9 N L R 26

Examples —(1) A trial for the offence of theft of an animal bars a subsequent trial for the offence of mischief for subsequently killing that animal—1 Weir 497 Similarly where a person was tried for the offence of mischief and was acquitted on the ground that the tree in respect of which the mischief was alleged to have been committed was his own property, he cannot afterwards be tried for theft of the same tree, on the same facts—8 Mad 296 (2) Where the accused with a body of people committed rioting and mischief to the trees of the complainant, and was at first tried for the offence of mischief alone and acquitted, held that he could not be tried again for the offence of rioting which was based on the same facts as the offence of mischief—In re Chinnappa 33 M L T 269

(3) Where the accused have been tried and acquitted on charges of forgery and abetment thereof, they cannot afterwards on the same facts be prosecuted for offences under sec 82 (c) of the Registration Act, since they could have been charged in the previous trial under sec 82 of the Registration Act—Maung Sang v Emp 1 Rang 299 25 Cr L J 191

(4) A person acquitted of using criminal force cannot be tried for hurt on the same facts—16 W R 3

(5) Where a person is convicted on a charge under sec 411 I P C, of having been dishonestly in possession of property knowing it to be stolen, he cannot be subsequently convicted under sec 414 I P C of voluntarily assisting in concealing other property stolen on the same occasion from the same person—28 All 313 The accused was charged before the Sessions Judge with the offence of abetment of theft, the Judge acquitted the accused but was satisfied that he had committed the offence of receiving stolen property (sec 411 I P C) The Judge however did not charge him with that offence, as he could have done under sec 236 of this Code Subsequently, the accused was charged with an offence under sec 411 I P C, and put on his trial Held that the second trial was barred under the provisions of sec 403—In re Pundalik 26 Bom L R 440 26 Cr L J 831

(6) Where a person has been tried and acquitted on a charge under section 211 I P C he cannot be tried again on a charge under sec 182 I P C—36 Mad 308

(7) A person charged under section 324 I P if the offence has been compounded be again tried on the same facts for an offence under section 323 I P C, if the composition which has the effect of an acquittal is still in force—Ratanlal 519

(8) Where a Magistrate issued processes against and summoned the accused for one of several offences alleged against them, and acquitted them of the offence for which they were summoned, no fresh processes could be issued against them either in respect of the offence already tried or in respect of the other offences—2 C L J 622

(9) Where the prisoner was at first tried under sec 498 I P C for having enticed away a married woman from her husband, and was acquitted on the ground that the whole case was fabricated, and the prisoner was next charged and convicted under sec 363 I P C of having kidnapped two infants of the woman who were with her when she left the house it was held that the second trial was illegal, because so long as the acquittal under section 498 I P C remained in force, the second Court was bound to take it as proved that the accused did not entice away the woman and therefore the offence under sec 363 alleged to have been committed while the prisoner enticed away the woman was disproved by the above finding of fact—1911 P L R 56

(10) A person acquitted of the charge of cheating cannot be tried again for the offence of falsification of accounts, upon the same facts—20 Cr I J 667 (Patna)

(11) The accused was tried under sec 363 I P C and acquitted. The Sessions Judge directed further inquiry to be made to ascertain whether offences under secs 366 and 368 I P C were committed. It was held that the order directing further inquiry was illegal, in as much as kidnapping (sec 363 I P C) is an essential element in offences under secs 366, 368 I P C and the accused having been already acquitted of the offence of kidnapping he could not be put on trial again for offences under secs 366 368 I P C—20 Cr L J 526 (Pat)

(12) An acquittal of the prisoner on charges under secs 380, 411 I P C for being found in possession of a quantity of jute, bars subsequent proceedings in respect of the same act under sec 54A of the Calcutta Police Act, because in the previous trial the charge of theft (secs 380, 411 I P C) might have been joined with a charge under sec 54A of the Calcutta Police Act, under the provisions of sec 236 of the Code—45 Cal 727

(13) Where the accused was acquitted of a charge of unlawful assembly with the common object of assaulting a person, the District Magistrate is not justified in ordering a further inquiry into the offence of hurt on the same facts, while the order of acquittal remains in force—5 C W N 72

(14) Where a person was at first charged with kidnapping a minor girl, under section 363 I P C, but the trying Magistrate finding that the girl was not under sixteen, acquitted the accused, a second trial on the same facts for the offence of abducting the girl in order to confine her secretly (section 365 I P C) was barred. The accused in the first trial might have been charged in the alternative with the second offence under section 237 of this Code—Kala Nath v. KE, 24 C W N 856

(15) If a person charged under section 338 I P C, with having caused grievous hurt by rashly driving a motor car, was acquitted on the ground that it was not proved that he was driving the car, he cannot be subsequently tried under section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act for the offence of driving the car without a license—2 P L T 31

(16) Where an accused was tried under sec 408 I P C for criminal breach of trust in respect of three sums of money alleged to have been dishonestly misappropriated, and it was part of the prosecution case at the trial that he had made three false entries to conceal the misappropriation, and he was acquitted by the jury, but was subsequently charged on the same evidence under section 477A I P C (falsification of accounts) in respect of the said three entries, it was held that he should not on the same facts be tried again for what were virtually the same offences charged in a different form—49 Cal 924

(17) Where the accused were at first charged under sec 193 I P C and acquitted by the Magistrate who dealt very exhaustively with the evidence and come to the conclusion that the culpability of the accused had not been established beyond reasonable doubt, and the accused were subsequently charged with offences under secs 467 and 471 read with sec 120B of the I P C upon facts which were wholly inseparable from the facts upon which the previous case was proceeded with, held that the subsequent trial was barred by this section—Cheragali v Satish, 30 C W N 384 26 Cr L J 1023

But the previous trial for an offence founded on a particular set of facts does not bar a second trial for a different offence based on different facts. Thus, the previous acquittal on a charge of theft does not bar a subsequential trial for the offence of receiving stolen property, as the latter offence is supported by certain additional facts ascertained subsequent to the first trial—10 C W N 1031. The previous trial for forging a certain document does not bar a subsequent trial for forging another document—7 W R 15. An acquittal on the charge of murder does not prevent another trial upon a charge of robbery, because the two offences are so widely different that in the first trial for murder the accused could not have been convicted of the offence of robbery under the provisions of sec 237 of this Code—Hallu v Crown 4 Lal 373 (375)

"For which a different charge might have been made"—This section protects a person against a trial for 'any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made', but where the offence for which he is to be tried again is the same charge that was made against him in the first trial, the defence must fail. Thus, where the accused was charged in the first trial with the murder of A under section 302 I P C, as well as with culpable homicide of A under section 304 I P C, and was acquitted by the jury of the charge of murder, but the jury disagreeing as to the culpable homicide, the accused was retried for that offence, it was held that the second trial was not illegal, for a charge in respect of that offence had already been made in the first trial. If the accused had been charged with murder alone, no doubt a verdict of not guilty would protect him from another trial for cul pable homicide, but where a charge of culpable homicide was also made, the case falls outside the provisions of the law dealing with cases where it 'might have been made'—Emp v Nirmal Kanta Roy, 41 Cal 1072

1094 Sub section (2) —Examples —(1) Where certain persons, after beating the inmates of a house, carried off a woman, and on the first trial they were charged under sections 452 and 325 I P C for house trespass and grievous hurt, and convicted, it was held that such conviction did not bar a subsequent trial for the offences of abduction which had been committed in the course of the same transaction. The case fell under section 235 (1) and therefore under sub section (2) of this section—3 A L J 2

(2) A previous conviction for being in possession of counterfeit coins, under section 243 I P C, does not bar a subsequent trial under section 240 I P C for passing other coins, knowing them to be counterfeited. They were two distinct offences—31 Cal 1007

(3) The accused was at first tried on a charge of abetment of forgery of a document. He was again tried by the Sessions Court, in respect of the same document, for using as genuine a forged document. It was held that the previous acquittal was no bar to the second trial. The case was not governed by sub section (1) of this section, in as much as the case was not one contemplated by section 236, there being nothing doubtful what should be the true view of the offence committed, the case fell under sub section (2) of this section, because the two offences were distinct offences, and committed in the course of the same transaction within the meaning of section 235 (1)—40 Bom 97

(4) The acquittal of an accused on a charge under section 400 I P C does not bar the trial of the accused under section 395 I P C for committing one of the dacoities in respect of which evidence was given at the previous trial—1 Bom L R 15

(5) Where six documents were alleged to be fabricated at one and the same time, and at first the accused was tried for fabricating three of the documents and acquitted a second trial for fabricating the other three documents is not barred. But in the circumstances of the case it was not desirable that the second trial should take place, as the fabricating of all the documents was treated in the first trial as one offence—2 A L J 673

(6) Where the accused threatened three witnesses, the trial and conviction of the accused for threatening one witness does not bar a second and separate trial and conviction of the accused for threatening the other two witnesses—9 W R 30

(7) The conviction of the accused for an offence under the Excise Act does not prevent the accused from being subsequently tried for an offence under the Merchandise Marks Act, the two offences being distinct and committed in the course of the same transaction—23 Cal 174

(8) The conviction of the accused for committing affray (sec 260 I P C) is no bar to their trial and conviction for the offence of causing hurt (sec 323 I P C) committed in the course of the affray—Ram Suleh v Emp, 47 All 284 23 A L J 81 26 Cr L J 688

(9) A complaint was preferred under sections 352 and 504 f P but the Magistrate issued process upon the accused directing him to appear and take his trial under section 352 only. The Magistrate acquitted the prisoner of the offence under section 352, but being of opinion that on the evidence adduced a prima facie case of an offence under section 504 had been made out, ordered process to issue directing the accused to appear and stand his trial under section 504. It was held that sub-section (1) of this section applied and the retrial was not illegal—20 Cr L J 43.

(10) The accused who were Police constables, committed rioting in the course of which they took several persons in custody. They were at first tried for wrongful confinement under section 342 I P C in respect of the arrests made by them, and were acquitted, subsequently they were convicted of rioting under section 147 I P C. Held, that the second trial was not barred. The two offences fell under section 235 (1) of the Code—48 Cal 78.

(11) The accused was charged under sec 409 I P C for criminal breach of trust in respect of Rs 18,924, alleged to have been misappropriated by him between 1st October 1921 and 1st March 1922. The charge was withdrawn with the leave of the Court and the accused was acquitted. He was subsequently charged with having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs 100 on the 30th November 1921. The prosecution alleged that the defalcation of this item of Rs 100 was not included in the sum of Rs 18,924 and the facts relating thereto were not known to him at the time of the previous charge. Held that as the sum of Rs 100 (the subject of the subsequent charge) was not included in the gross sum of Rs 18,924 (the subject of the previous charge), the offence subsequently charged was not the same in respect of which the accused was previously acquitted, therefore the previous acquittal did not operate as a bar to the subsequent trial of the accused—Nagendra Na v Emp 50 Cal 632 25 Cr L J 156 27 C W N 578 (following En v Kashinath 12 Bom L R 226).

But a person who has been tried and acquitted of offences under sections 201 and 202 I P C cannot be tried again for an offence under section 176 I P C based on the same facts. Such a case does not come under section 235 (1) but under section 235 (2), and therefore sub-section (2) of this section does not apply. It falls under sub-section (1) of the section, and the second trial is barred—10 C W N 518.

1095 Sub-section (3) — Constituted a different offence.—The facts or circumstances must be such as to indicate a different kind of offence of which there could be no conviction at the first trial. It is enough to show merely circumstances of aggravation or serious consequences of the offence which have occurred since the first trial. When a person was convicted under section 31 of the Rangoon Police Act, 18 for being in possession of an article supposed to be stolen, he cannot be tried subsequently for an offence under section 457 I P C merely on the ground that the owner of the article is traced and some further evidence is available—8 Bur. L T. 129. The new evidence must constitute a different kind of offence, for which he could not have been tried at the first trial

Were not known to the Court—The new facts or consequences must have occurred since the conviction or acquittal at the first trial. Thus, where a person was at first tried for causing grievous hurt and convicted, and after the conviction the injured man died, it was held that the accused could be again tried for the offence of culpable homicide, since the consequence of hurt (i.e. the death) did not take place until after the first trial—1901 P R 3, 36 All 4. So also, where a person was acquitted of an offence under the Bombay City Municipal Act, for proceeding to erect certain balconies in contravention of the Act, he can be subsequently tried for failure to remove these balconies after notice, because the offence of non removal of these balconies could not have been committed until the notice to remove them was served, and the service was made only after the previous acquittal—4 Bom L R 575

But if the new facts or consequences were known to the Court at the time of the first trial a second trial for an offence constituted by these new facts would be barred. Thus, where the prisoner was at first tried for causing hurt, and before the trial and conviction for hurt the injured man died, and the fact was known to the Court which convicted the prisoner for hurt he could not again be tried for homicide under this subsection, though he might be under subsection (4)—9 N L R 26

1096 Subsection (4) — Was not competent—The words 'not competent to try' mean 'had no jurisdiction to try'—24 Mad 641. If a person has been acquitted or convicted of an offence, but the same facts disclose another offence which could not be tried by the same Magistrate who tried the first offence then the previous acquittal or conviction is no bar to further proceedings for the latter offence—In re Venkataranga, 18 Cr L J 643 (Mad). Palani Goundan v Emp 48 M L J 490 26 Cr L J 1087. Therefore the trial of the accused for an offence of voluntarily causing grievous hurt by a Magistrate does not bar the trial of the accused for attempt to murder on the same facts, as the previous trial was by a Court not competent to try the latter offence—7 N W P H C R 371. Where a Magistrate convicted the accused of rioting, a fresh complaint of dacoity based on the same facts was not barred, since the Magistrate who tried the offence of rioting was not competent to try the offence of dacoity—7 Mad 557. Similarly, a previous conviction for the offence of causing hurt tried before a Magistrate does not bar a subsequent trial by the Sessions Judge of an offence under section 304, upon the same facts—5 Bom L R 125, 43 Mad 330. A conviction by a Magistrate for a minor offence does not bar a subsequent trial for murder, because the Magistrate was not competent to try the offence of murder—Ratanlal 337, Madhava v Crown, 1912 P R 7. A person acquitted or convicted by a Magistrate under section 465 I P C may on the same facts be tried by a Court of Session under section 467 on the allegation that the document said to have been forged was a valuable security—19 Cr L J 388 (Cal). When on a complaint made under sections 409 and 477A I P C, a second class Magistrate proceeded to deal with the case as one under section 408 I P C and acquitted the accused, and the complainant afterwards presented a further complaint to the District Magistrate praying for the trial of the accused under sections 409 and 477A I P C, it was held that the District Magistrate was competent to take cognizance of the second complaint as the second class Magistrate who dealt with the first complaint was not empowered to commit the accused persons for trial to the Court of Session—Krishnadhoni v. Mahendra 23 C W N 518. A person convicted by a village Headman under the Burma Village Act, for assault, can be tried subsequently by a Magistrate for the causing of hurt upon the same facts the village Headman not being competent to try the offence of causing hurt—(1919) L B R 3rd Or 135.

If however the Court (Sessions Judge) which tried the previous offence was also competent to try the subsequent offence the trial of the latter offence is barred by this section, and the fact that the first offence was triable with the aid of assessors and the second offence was triable by a jury, is immaterial—24 Mad 641. This subsection refers to the competency of the tribunal to try the offence—36 Mad 308, and not to the nature of the offence, i.e. as to whether it is triable by jury or with assessors.

The absence of a proper complaint under section 199 of the Code renders the Court incompetent to try the offence. Where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint of an offence under section 498 I P C on the ground that the complaint was not made by the person specified under section 199 and acquitted the accused it was held that the order of acquittal amounted to a finding that the Court was not competent to try the offence in the absence of a complaint by the proper person, and therefore a fresh complaint instituted by the proper person (the husband of the woman) was not barred under this section—31 All 317. Similarly, where the accused was first tried under sections 366, 368 and 376 I P C and acquitted, and subsequently the husband of the woman preferred a complaint under section 498 I P C, on the same facts and the accused was tried and convicted it was held that the second conviction was not illegal, since the previous Court was not competent to try the accused under section 498 in the absence of a complaint by the husband—Eno v. Tikaram, 17 Bom L R 6-8. As to the effect of absence of complaint under sec. 195, see Note 1090 above.

Where a previous prosecution for an offence under sec. 171, I P C failed on the ground that sanction under sec. 196 Cr P C was not obtained, a subsequent prosecution on the same facts and for the same offence is not illegal if it is launched after obtaining such sanction. In the absence of a sanction in the first trial, the first Court which tried the accused was not a Court of competent jurisdiction in respect of the offence, and the second trial is not therefore barred—Ram Nath v. A E, 24 A L J 180. A L R 1926 All 231. A prosecution for an offence specified in sec. 82 of the Registration Act cannot be commenced without the sanction of the officers mentioned in sec. 83 of that Act, and consequently, an acquittal in a previous trial for an offence under sec. 419 I P C when no such sanction under sec. 83 had been given, is no bar to a subsequent prosecution under sec 82 of the Registration Act on such sanction being given. The Court in the previous trial was not competent to try the accused under sec 82 of the Registration Act—Mohan Lal v Emp 19 A L J 813 22 Cr L J 50. But see Rang 299 and 11 Cal 566.

1097 Explanation—What orders do not amount to acquittal—

(1) The dismissal of a complaint under section 203 is not an order of acquittal within the meaning of this section, and therefore upon such dismissal, it is competent for the Magistrate to entertain a fresh complaint or to rehear the original complaint see notes under sec 203.

(2) An order under section 240 stopping the proceedings of a trial has been specifically excluded by the explanation from being an order of acquittal, and therefore it does not bar fresh proceedings—1913 P R 9.

(3) A stay of trial under section 240 has not the effect of acquittal of the accused. Where a Magistrate trying an accused for offences under sections 193 and 204 I P C convicted the accused under the former section but with regard to the latter the Magistrate thinking that the facts constituted some other offence ordered the papers to be placed before the District Magistrate and later on the accused was again put on trial under section 204 I P C. It was held that the first disposal did not amount to an acquittal but only to a stay of trial under section 240, and the subsequent trial was not barred by this section—1889 A W N 8.

(4) Where the prisoner is released by the Appellate Court on the ground of illegal or irregular procedure in the Lower Court, the release is no bar to the retrial of the accused for the same offence—13 W R 42.

Discharge of accused—Sec 403 applies only to cases of acquittal or conviction and has no application to a case in which the accused person has been discharged—17 A L J 867.

It is competent for the Magistrate to rehear a complaint after the accused is discharged under sec 253 or 259. See notes under those sections. An order of discharge under sec 313 is no bar to fresh proceedings—40 Cal 71 but see 52 Cal 590. When a person is discharged under sec 119, he is merely permitted to depart. Such a discharge is not an acquittal, and fresh proceedings may be taken against the accused. See 33 Mad 83. Where a conviction by a Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try the case is set aside on appeal and the Appellate Court without ordering a retrial merely discharges the accused this section does not bar a fresh trial by a competent Magistrate—29 Cal 412, 3 Mad 48.

But although there is nothing in law against the entertainment of a second complaint on the same facts against a person who has been discharged, yet, unless very strong grounds are shown, (i.e. discovery of new facts, etc.), a person who has been charged once and discharged ought not to be harassed on the same charge—18 Cr L J 329 (Mad).

When an order of discharge is passed, no formal order under sec 436 or 437 is necessary for the institution of a fresh trial—1 Cal 28, 2 Cal 405, 4 Cal 16, 10 Cal 268, 28 Cal 211, 29 Cal 726, 29 All 7, 2 Bom 534, 10 Bom 131, 28 Mad 310, 32 Mad 220, 17 O C 273.

OF APPEAL, REFERENCE AND REVISION

CHAPTER XXXI

OF APPEALS

404 No appeal shall lie from any judgment or order of a Criminal Court except as provided Unless otherwise provided, no appeal to lie. for by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force

1099 No appeal.—Ordinarily no appeal lies, except as otherwise provided by this Code or by any other special law. In a case in which no appeal lies from an order, the proper course is to make an application for revision—1893 A. W. N. 147. Although the law may not allow appeal in certain cases, the High Court in the exercise of the powers vested in it as a Court of Revision may, in those cases and on very exceptional grounds, act as an Appellate Court—8 Bom. 197. If an appeal is presented to the High Court in a case in which no appeal is allowed to the High Court, the case may be disposed of under its revisional powers, if the High Court finds that it is a proper case in which it may exercise its revisional jurisdiction. See 9 Cal. 313.

1100. Appeal to Privy Council.—Unlike the Civil Procedure Code, the Code of Criminal Procedure contains no provision for appeal to the Privy Council. It is only in the power of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council exercising the prerogative right on behalf of the Crown to entertain appeals in matters of criminal jurisdiction—In re Joy Kissen Moolerjee, 1 W. R. 13 (P. C.).

An appeal to the Privy Council lies only under very special and exceptional circumstances. It is not in every case in which it could be shown that the Judge had misdirected the jury, that an appeal will be allowed—15 All. 310. Before granting the certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council the High Court must be satisfied that there is a reasonable ground for thinking that grave and substantial injustice may have been done by reason of some departure from the principles of natural justice—In re Bal Gangadhar Tilak 33 Bom. 221. 10 Bom. L. R. 973, 9 Cr. L. J. 226. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council does not lightly interfere in criminal cases, but where justice had been gravely and injuriously miscarried and the sentence pronounced against the appellant formed an invasion of his liberty and denial of his just rights as a citizen their Lordships felt called upon to interfere—

Louis Edouard Lanier v King 18 C W N 98 (P C) 15 Cr 1 J 395
26 M L J 1

The Sovereign in Council interferes only when it is shown that injustice of a serious and substantial character has occurred. A mere mistake on the part of the Court below, as for example, in the admission of improper evidence will not suffice if it has not led to injustice of a grave character. Nor do the Judicial Committee advise interference merely because they themselves would have taken a different view of the evidence admitted. Such questions are, as a general rule, treated as being for the final decision of the Courts below. Error in procedure may be of a character so grave as to warrant the interference of the Sovereign. Such error may for example deprive a man of a constitutional or statutory right to be tried by a jury, or by some particular tribunal. Or it may have been carried to such an extent as to cause the outcome of the proceedings to be contrary to fundamental principles which justice requires to be observed. But where the error consists only in the fact that evidence has been improperly admitted which was not essential to a result which might have been come to wholly independently of it, the case is different. The dominant question is the broad one, whether substantial justice has been done and if substantial justice has been done it is contrary to the general practice of the Board to advise the Sovereign to interfere with the result—Dal Singh v A F 44 Cal 876 (P C) 15 A I J 413 19 Bom 1 R 310 21 C W N 818 33 M L J 555 19 Cr 1 J 471

405 Any person whose application under section 89 for appeal from order rejecting application for restoration of attached property of the sale thereof has been rejected by any Court, may appeal to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the sentences of the former Court

406 Any person who has been ordered under Section 118 requiring security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour may appeal against such order—

(a) If made by a Presidency Magistrate, to the High Court,

(b) If made by any other Magistrate, to the Court of Session

Provided that the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct that in any district specified in the notification, appeals from such orders made by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate shall lie to the District Magistrate and not to the Court of Session

Provided further, that nothing in this section shall apply to a person the proceedings against whom are laid before a Sessions Judge in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) or sub-section (31) of Section 12, 1101 Change:—This section has been redrafted by section 109 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The old section stood thus —

“406 Any person ordered by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate to give security for good behaviour under section 118 may appeal to the District Magistrate.”

The main changes introduced are —(1) Under the old section an appeal was allowed only in a *good behav*our case no appeal lay from an order directing security to keep the peace—27 All 623 Har Datt v Emp 14 A L J 268 17 Cr L J 165 Bararasi v Partab 11 A I J 16 35 All 103, 11 Bom L R 740 Shamrao v Emp 19 N I R 160. These cases are now over ruled, and an appeal is now allowed from such order.

(2) Under the old law there was no appeal against an order of a District Magistrate or Presidency Magistrate directing security—1898 A W N 127 under the present law an appeal lies from the order of any Magistrate.

(3) Under the old law, the appeal lay to the District Magistrate under the present law, it will ordinarily lie to the Court of Session, and in the case of orders by a Presidency Magistrate to the High Court. This provision did not exist in the Bills or Reports but was made during the debate in the Legislative Assembly. The reason of this amendment has been thus stated by Dr Gour on whose motion the amendment was carried: “All cases in the district relating to the breach of the peace and good behaviour are cases in which the District Magistrate is interested officially, and it is only fair that any order passed by a Magistrate should be revisable on appeal by an independent tribunal such as the Sessions Judge.

Is the accused likely to get fair and even handed justice at the hands of the District Magistrate who peruses case-durries and police reports and hears a good many things which undoubtedly he is bound to hear about the badmasheries of his district and about people who are disturbers of public peace? or is it likely that justice will suffer and has suffered in the past by such cases being finally disposed of by him rather than by an independent tribunal such as the Sessions Judge.” —Legislative Assembly Debates 8th February 1923 pp 2063 2064

1102 Scope:—This section applies only to an order requiring security under sec 118 an order directing security to keep the peace under sec 118 is not appealable—2 Weir 460

Clause (b)—Under the old law, an appeal from an order passed by a Magistrate (other than the District Magistrate) lay to the Court of the District Magistrate and not to the Court of Sessions—Mahendra v. A. E. 48 Cal 874 25 C W N 383 23 Cr I J 229 1 S L R 98. Even an appeal from the order of an Additional District Magistrate lay to the District Magistrate and not to the Sessions Judge—48 Cal 874. Under the present law the appeal will lie to the Sessions Court only under a special notification under the first proviso the appeal will lie to the District Magistrate.

Second proviso—This proviso expressly lays down that the moment a reference is made to the Court of Session under sec 123 it operates as a bar to an appeal. The reason is twofold first since the Sessions Judge is seized of the case on the reference, any appeal to him is unnecessary secondly if an appeal is allowed to the Court of the District Magistrate under the first proviso there may be two different decisions, one by the District Magistrate on appeal and another by the Sessions Judge on the reference. The principle of this proviso was recognised under the old law see Qamar Din v. Emp. 23 Cr L J 434 (Lah).

Where the order of a Subdivisional Magistrate under sec 123 is confirmed by the Sessions Judge, the order passed by the Sessions Court becomes the operative order, and no appeal lies therefrom to the District Magistrate as it were from the order of the Subdivisional Magistrate—L R R (1893 1901) 381. When a reference has been made to the Sessions Judge under sec 123 and disposed of no appeal lies to the District Magistrate—1900 P R 15 nor even to the High Court—9 Cal 8-8.

accept or rejecting a surety under Section 122 may appeal against such order—

(a) if made by a Presidency Magistrate, to the High Court,

(b) if made by the District Magistrate, to the Court of Session, or

(c) if made by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate to the District Magistrate

This section has been added by section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. We think that there should be a general right of appeal against the rejection of a surety, and we have provided for it in section 406A.—Report of the Select Committee of 1914

407 (1) Any person convicted on a trial held by any Magistrate of the second or third class or any person sentenced under Section 349 or in respect of whom an order has been made or a sentence has been passed under Section 380 by a Sub-divisional Magistrate of the second class, may appeal to the District Magistrate.

(2) The District Magistrate may direct that any appeal under this section, or any class of such appeals, shall be heard by any Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him and empowered by the Local Government to hear such appeals and thereupon such appeal or class of appeals may be presented to such Subordinate Magistrate, or, if already presented to the District Magistrate, may be transferred to such Subordinate Magistrate. The District Magistrate may withdraw from such Magistrate any appeal or class of appeals so presented or transferred.

Change:—The italicised words have been added by section 111 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. A similar amendment is made in section 408 also.

1103 'Convicted on a trial'—Since the word 'offence' is defined by section 4 includes an act in respect of which a complaint may be made under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act a person against whom an order under section 22 of that Act is made is a person 'convicted on a trial' within the meaning of this section, and an appeal against such conviction by a second or third class Magistrate lies under this section—29 Mad 517; Rodrika v Pupa Dada 46 Bom 58.

Second or Third Class Magistrate—If a second class Magistrate is holding a trial and after the hearing is complete, he is invested with first class powers and he convicts the accused in the latter capacity, he will be deemed to have held the trial as a second class Magistrate and the appeal will lie against his judgment at this trial to the District Magistrate. It is not the conviction but the holding of the trial by a second or third class Magistrate that determines the forum of appeal—Emp v Nga Pau 4 L B R 239 8 Cr L J 48. But where a Magistrate begins a trial as a second class Magistrate but before the hearing of the arguments he is invested with first class powers i.e., where part of the trial is held by him as a 2nd class Magistrate and part as a first class Magistrate, the proper tribunal for hearing the appeal from his conviction is the Sessions Judge and not the District Magistrate—Sheobhanjan v Emp 6 P L T 534 26 Cr L J 914 A I R 1925 Pat 472.

An Additional District Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate for the purposes of this sub-section and the District Magistrate may transfer an appeal to the Additional District Magistrate. See sec 10 (3)

(c) when any person is convicted by a Magistrate of an offence under Section 124A of the Indian Penal Code the appeal shall lie to the High Court

Change.—The italicised words have been added by section 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVII of 1923. Clause (a) which

referred to Europe in British Subjects has been omitted by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, VII of 1923

1105 'Convicted':—A person who is convicted but on whom no sentence is passed, the person being released on probation under section 562, is said to be 'convicted' within the meaning of this section and can appeal—Emp v Monohar, 1904 P R 24 1 Cr L J 1098 Hayat v Crown 1917 P R 20 18 Cr L J 401, Bahadur v Ismail 52 Cr L 463 29 C W N 151 If a Magistrate of the first class passes an order under sec 562 in a summary trial, section 414 will not apply but the case will be governed by this section, and an appeal will lie to the Sessions Judge—Emp v Hira Lal, 46 All 818 (830) 22 A L J 751 23 Cr L J 1244

Sentence under Section 319—When a case is referred to a District Magistrate under section 349, the fact that he is also invested with special powers under section 30 will not empower him to pass a sentence of five years' imprisonment, such a sentence is ultra vires having regard to the last clause of section 349 The appeal in such a case will lie to the Court of Session, and not to the High Court under proviso (b)—4 I B R 53

Sentence under Section 380—Where proceedings were submitted under section 380 by a second class Magistrate to a first class Magistrate, in order that the accused might be dealt with under section 562 and the latter convicted and sentenced the accused and the question arose under the old law as to whether an appeal lay to the Sessions Judge or to the District Magistrate, it was held that the sentence passed by the first class Magistrate under section 380 in a case submitted to him was unquestionably a sentence passed by such Magistrate, and the appeal lay to the Court of Session—Emp v Ishimappa, 17 Bom L R 893 This is now expressly laid down in the present section as amended

1106 Court of Session:—Where a Magistrate was authorised to try all offences throughout the whole District and there were two Sessions Divisions in the District an appeal from a sentence of the Magistrate will lie to the Sessions Division within whose jurisdiction the Headquarters of the Magistrate were situate, irrespective of the place where the offence was committed—30 Mad 136 Hiralal v Crown 1918 P R 7 P L R 48 19 Cr L J 310

Appeal heard without jurisdiction—Where an accused person was acquitted by a Sessions Judge in an appeal which he had no jurisdiction to hear, he may be re-arrested even after the expiration of the period to which he was originally sentenced to be imprisoned and may be made to undergo the rest of his term—Ratanlal 17

1107. Proviso (b)—The reason for this proviso obviously is that when a long term of imprisonment has to be undergone, the question whether the offence is proved should be tried in appeal by a Court of a higher grade than it would be tried by if the sentence were less—4 I B R 53 The sentence of imprisonment exceeding four years in this proviso must be taken to mean the substantive sentence of imprisonment apart from any sentence of imprisonment in default of fine Therefore an appeal from a sentence awarding 4 years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 100, and in default of fine, to six months' rigorous imprisonment, lies to the Court of Session and not to the High Court—Ahuda Bakhsh v Crown, 1918 P. R. 19 19 Cr L J 742

An appeal from the conviction and sentence of less than four years' imprisonment by an Assistant Judge lies to the Sessions Judge, and not to the High Court simply because by the time the appeal is filed the Assistant Sessions Judge has been promoted to the position of Offg Sessions Judge (and is therefore incompetent to hear the appeal against his own order). The proper procedure in such a case would be to file the appeal before the Offg Sessions Judge who on the receipt of the appeal would either send it to the High Court or would postpone its hearing till the return of the permanent incumbent—Garib Lal v Crown 3 P. L. J. 192 19 Cr L J 442

1108. Concurrent sentences:—Under section 35 (3), concurrent sentences cannot be aggregated together for the purpose of raising the status of the forum of appeal—Gurusahay v Emp 3 P. L. J. 138, Tulsi Ram v K E 11 A. L. J. 111 35 All 154. Therefore, where an Assistant Session Judge or a Magistrate specially empowered under sec 30 passes several sentences of imprisonment upon an accused each of which is for a term of four years or under, and the sentences are ordered to run concurrently, the appeal from the conviction and sentences lies to the Sessions Court and not to the High Court—Lakshmi v K E 23 C. I. J. 595, Gurusahay v Emp 3 P. L. J. 138, Sher Muhammad v Crown 1901 P. R. 25

Magistrate acting under section 30—Under this proviso, where a person is convicted by a Magistrate invested with enhanced powers under section 30 and sentenced to imprisonment for more than four years, an appeal lies to the High Court and not to the Court of Session—Ahmad Khan v Crown 1916 P. R. 5 17 Cr L J 299 1916 P. L. R. 122

If the appeal is presented to the Sessions Judge instead of to the High Court, and the Sessions Judge disposes of the appeal, the proceedings before the Sessions Judge are void under sec 530 (f)—In re Abdullah v Rang 386 (387) 26 Cr L J 293

1109. 'All or any of the accused':—This amendment provides that in a trial in which more than one person are accused and in which by reason of the sentences passed an appeal lies in the case of some persons to the Sessions Judge and of others to the High Court, the appeal of all shall lie to the latter tribunal—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). If several persons are tried jointly, and the Assistant Sessions Judge passes a sentence of over four years' imprisonment on some of the accused, and a sentence of less than four years on the others, the appeal by the latter will also lie to the High Court and not to the Court of Session—Palani v Emp 17 M. L. J. 248, Richie v Emp 13 A. L. J. 272 16 Cr L J 153. Q. E. v Jaisingh, 1900 P. R. 12, Debi Dutt v K. F. 24 A. I. J. 151 27 Cr L J 175 (The contrary view held in 41 M. L. J. 561 is hereby overruled). Even if in such a case, the persons over whom sentences of over four years were passed did not appeal to the High Court the appeal of the other persons over whom sentences of less than four years were passed would lie to the

High Court and not to the Court of Session—Har Dayal v Emp 37 All 471 13 A L J 719- 16 Cr L J 606, Ismad Khan v Emp, 1916 P R 5

Proviso (c)—Where the accused was convicted by a District Magistrate under section 124A I P C, and sentenced to two years imprisonment, and was in the same trial convicted of an offence under section 153A I P C and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment the two sentences must be aggregated and considered as one sentence under section 35 (3) for the purposes of appeal and the appeal against the single sentence will lie to the High Court. It is not necessary that the prisoner will file an appeal against the conviction under section 141 to the High Court, and another appeal against the conviction under section 153A to the Court of Session—38 Cal 214

He can only question the extent or legality of the sentence—Emp v Ikub Ali 31 C 1 J 122 3 Bom 83. When a person has been convicted on his own plea by a Presidency Magistrate no appeal shall lie to the High Court, except as to the extent or legality of the sentence, although he is sentenced for a term exceeding six months or to fine exceeding Rs 200—3 Bom 83. Where a charge has been framed against an accused person under section 221 (7) of this Code and such person has pleaded guilty to the charge that he is a previous convict the Appellate Court under section 412 is precluded from opening the question whether the accused is a previous convict or not—4 N L R 163

Extent and legality of the sentence—Under this section, the right of appeal when the accused has pleaded guilty is limited to such matter as may be a special ground of complaint with respect to the sentence (as distinguished from the conviction itself) whether on the ground that the sentence is beyond what the circumstances of the case required, or that the sentence is illegal or not authorized by law—5 Bom 85. Although the Appellate Court may reject an appeal on the ground that the accused has pleaded guilty before the lower court still the extent and legality of the sentence will have to be considered by the Appellate Court—Ratanlal 954. and in order to consider the legality of the sentence the Appellate Court must satisfy itself that the plea of guilty was properly made after the nature of the offence was explained to and understood by the prisoner—22 Bom 75 acted person in cases in which a Court of Session [* * *] passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only or in which a Court of Session or District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class passes a sentence of fine not exceeding rupees fifty only

Explanation—There is no appeal from a sentence of imprisonment passed by such Court or Magistrate in default of payment of fine when no substantive sentence of imprisonment has also been passed

Change—This section has been amended by section 24 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1913. Under this section is now amended a right of appeal is given against convictions by District Magistrates or Magistrates of the first class where they pass sentences of imprisonment even for a period of one month or less. Under the old law (section 416) only a European British subject could appeal against such sentence. We consider that outside the presidency towns in the case of all persons both European and Indian there should be an appeal against any sentence of imprisonment passed by a Magistrate. This involves a substantial modification of the general law of the land and will to a certain extent increase the work of the Sessions Courts. Nevertheless we are of opinion on general grounds and apart from the particular case of the European British subject that an appeal should lie against any sentence. It is to be noted that short sentences of imprisonment should where possible be avoided and the number of sentences of one month and under passed by District Magistrates and first class Magistrates should not as far as we can judge be very large. In the case of a sentence passed in a trial by a Court of Session we would allow no appeal in respect of a sentence of one month or under.—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee Para 19

This section also gives a right of appeal against a sentence of whipping

1113 Sole sentence of imprisonment—Where the accused was sentenced to 14 days imprisonment and to pay the cost of court fees the sentence is a sole sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month and the order to pay the court fees is no part of the sentence and is not a sentence of fine added to imprisonment, so as to make it appealable (see 415)—10 Cal 687, 11 Mad 423 20 Mad 188 1 Weir 724 (Cottrell—22 Mad 153 5 M H C R App 28)

Fine—Compensation awarded under section 22 of the Cattle Trespass Act is not a fine and therefore an appeal lies from the order awarding compensation less than rupees fifty.—Rodrigs v Papa Dada 46 Bom 58

Aggregation of sentences—Where a person is charged with two separate offences in one trial, the amount of the whole punishment awarded for the two offences must be regarded as one sentence for the purpose of determining whether an appeal lies or not—3 C L R 511, 1 Bom 223 See section 415

Passing appealable sentence at the request of accused—When a Magistrate at first passed a non appealable sentence, and shortly afterwards at the request of the accused enhanced the sentence to make it appealable, and on appeal the Sessions Judge struck out the added sentence as illegal and declined to hear the appeal on the ground that the sentence as originally passed was not appealable, it was held that as the Magistrate had passed an appealable sentence, an appeal lay under this section, whether that sentence was passed legally or illegally and that the Sessions Judge was bound to hear the appeal on the merits—35 Bom 418

414 Notwithstanding any thing hereinbefore contained, there shall be no appeal by a convicted person in any case tried summarily in which a Magistrate empowered to act under section 260 passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding three months only, or of fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only, or of whipping only	414 Notwithstanding any thing hereinbefore contained, there shall be no appeal by a convicted person in any case tried summarily in which a Magistrate empowered to act under section 260 passes a sentence [* * ] of fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only [ * *]

This section has been amended by section 25 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act VII of 1923. By this amendment, certain sentences passed on summary convictions which were originally non appealable (viz, imprisonment for three months or less, or whipping) are now made appealable. Under the old law, only European British subjects could appeal from such sentences.

If a Magistrate of the first class passes an order under sec 562 in a summary trial, this section does not apply, because an order under sec 562 is not a sentence of imprisonment or fine, but section 408 will govern the case and an appeal will lie to the Court of Session—Emp v Hira Lal 46 All 828 (82) 22 A I J 751 25 Cr II J 1244

415 An appeal may be brought against any sentence referred to in section 413 or section 414 by which any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned are combined, but no sentence which would not otherwise be liable to appeal shall be appealable merely on the ground that the person convicted is ordered to find security to keep the peace

Explanation—A sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is not a sentence by which two or more punishments are combined within the meaning of this section

1114. Combination of sentences—Where the accused was sentenced to one day's imprisonment and a fine of fifty rupees, the fact that the accused was not actually sent to jail does not prevent the combination, the passing of the sentence of imprisonment is sufficient, and the two sentences of imprisonment and fine may be combined for the purposes of appeal—33 All 310

Security to keep the peace—The imprisonment to be undergone in default of furnishing security to keep the peace is not a part of a substantive sentence. If the substantive sentence is not in itself appealable, it does not become so, merely because the person convicted has been ordered to find security to keep the peace—Maighu v A F 7 O C 338 1 Cr I J 1054

The words "security to keep the peace" refer only to those cases where the accused is ordered to find security to keep the peace under this Code and not where he is ordered to do so under any local enactment. Thus, where the accused was sentenced in a summary trial to three months' imprisonment, (which was non appealable) prior to the amendment of sec 414) and further ordered under sec 31A of the Rangpoor Police Act to give security, it was held that this section did not apply and the sentence passed was appealable—4 I B R 359

Again this section applies where the accused is ordered to give security to keep the peace and not where he is required to furnish security for good behaviour—4 I B R 359

415A Notwithstanding anything contained in this Chapter, when more persons than one are convicted in one trial and an appealable judgment or order has been passed in respect of any of such persons, all or any of the persons convicted at such trial shall have a right of appeal

This section has been added by sec 114 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923, to remove the conflict of opinion which existed under the old law as will be evident from the undernoted cases

1115. Where several persons are tried and convicted at one trial, some of whom are sentenced to appealable sentences while the rest are awarded non appealable sentences, all of them will be able to appeal the fact that non appealable sentences are passed on some of them does not, by virtue of sec 413 take away their right of appeal. Sec 413 applies to the case where only a non appealable sentence is passed and not where non-appealable as well as appealable sentences are pronounced—Crown v Naurati 1915 P R 30 4 I B R 354, Jaisukh v Crown 1916 P R 16 Sheopal v A F 15 O C 380, Lal Singh v Emp. 38 All 195, Biswanath v Em

22 Cr I J 297 (Pt.) Section 413 curtails the right of appeal only in cases in which there is no sentence upon any convicted person above the limit prescribed by sec 413 but if any of the convicted persons in the same case has received any punishment above that limit, the right of appeal of any other person receiving a sentence below that limit is not at all curtailed but he along with the one who received a higher punishment has the right uncontrolled and uncurtailed—Pheku v K J 4 P I J 435 20 Cr I J 545 (per Justice Prasad J) This view has been adopted in the present section.

The contrary view was taken in 7 B H C R 35, 5 B H C R 24, 7 M H C R App 5 In re Umma, 16 M I T 33, 40 Mad 591 4 P I J 435 (per Atkinson J) 39 All 293 Crown v Umar 10 S L R 156, In re Annasami 24 M I T 182 24 Cr L J (77) (All), in these cases it was held that the language of section 413 was imperative and took away the right of appeal under such circumstances, and the accused against whom non appealable sentences were passed could not acquire the right by reason of the fact that they were tried jointly with some other persons who received appealable sentences—24 M I T 182 This view has not been accepted by the Legislature and is overruled by the present Amendment.

Where a person has been ordered to be released on probation of good conduct under sec 562 (which order is appealable under sec 408) and other persons have been awarded non appealable sentences, the latter persons also will be entitled to appeal by operation of the provisions of this section—Bahadur v Ismail 32 Cal 463 29 C W N 151 26 Cr I J 455

This section which has been repealed by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923 stood as follows:—

‘416 Nothing in section 413 and 414 applies to appeals from sentences passed under Chapter XXXIII on European British subject’

That is it laid down that in respect of those sentences which were non appealable in the case of Indian subjects an European British subject had a right of appeal. This distinction is now abolished and both European and Indian subjects are placed on the same footing, and given equal rights of appeal.

417 The Local Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an original or appellate order of acquittal passed by any Court other than a High Court.

Appeal on behalf of Government in case of acquittal.

If on trial an accused is acquitted and no appeal is preferred by the Government against his acquittal, he must be deemed to be innocent of the charge made against him and the Sessions Judge (in an appeal by the other accused against his conviction) ought not to pass any remarks impugning the correctness of the acquittal. If the Sessions Judge passes any such remarks, the High Court will order those remarks to be expunged from the record—Ibdu lillah v Emp 25 Cr I J 1245 (1st)

1116 Appeal against acquittal:—The High Court has no authority to entertain an appeal under this section except upon an appeal by the Local Government—19 W R 55 6 C I R 245 14 Mad 363 The intention of the Legislature is that there should be no interference by the High Court with acquittal even though improper, except upon a formal appeal by the Local Government—3 Bom 150 The law, by leaving the right of appeal against judgments of acquittal to the Local Government, prevents personal vindictiveness from seeking to call in question judgments of acquittal by way of appeal and evidently intends that such interference shall take place only in cases where there has been a miscarriage of justice so grave as would induce the Local Government to move in the matter—22 Cal 164

The power of appeal under this section should be sparingly used by the Government, but the discretion to exercise that power is not subject to the control of the High Court—21 Bom I R 1034 Emp v Mohi, 26 Bom I R 113 25 Cr I J 86 Crook v Pr 11 1917 P R 43 19 Cr I J 85

The High Court will not even re issue an order of acquittal except at the instance of the Local Government—5 A I R 4 It will not exercise its revisional jurisdiction in the case of an acquittal, because an appeal can always be made by the Local Government against such order under this section—15 Bom 349 6 C I R 245 Juant v Haricharan 26 Cr I J 516 (Pr) 15 S I R 171 (Contra—1 All 139 2 All 448, 2 S I R 25 where it is held that it is competent for a private prosecutor to apply to the High Court in the case of acquittal to exercise its powers of revision when there is a material error in the proceeding in the case) See note 1204 under sec 439

The High Court should not entertain an application by a complainant to revive an order of acquittal after the Local Government has declined to direct an appeal against it—8 I B R 356

Even the District Magistrate is not competent to refer the case to the High Court—K E v Chandika 24 O C 4 Where the prisoners convicted by a Magistrate are acquitted on appeal by the Sessions Judge, it is not competent for the District Magistrate to transmit the proceeding to the High Court to have the Sessions Judge's order of acquittal set aside—6 C I R 245

1117 Public Prosecutor:—Only the Public Prosecutor can file an appeal under this section. The Local Government cannot direct any other person to appeal. The Legal Remembrancer is a Public Prosecutor within the meaning of this section. Legal Remembrancer v Tularam 23 C W N 76 46 Cal 544 By a notification published in the Calcutta Gazette on the 24th June 1886 the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal became the ex officio Public Prosecutor in all cases before the High Court on its Appellate side except in cases coming from the Presidency Magistrates or the Magistrates in Calcutta. So also, by a notification in the Behar and Orissa Gazette on the 1st April 1912 the Legal Remembrancer of Bihar and Orissa became the ex officio Public Prosecutor for that province. But the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal cannot be deemed to be Public Prosecutor for the province of Behar when he has not been specially appointed as a Public Prosecutor for that province even the fact that the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal has been directed by a letter of the Government of Behar to file an appeal in the Calcutta High Court under section 417 Cr P C against an order of acquittal passed in a Behar case does not make him a Public Prosecutor for Behar, when the letter did not specially appoint him as such and especially when there is already a Public Prosecutor for the province of Behar. And the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal therefore cannot file the appeal—Deputy Legal Remembrancer v Gaya Prosad 41 Cal 425

A private prosecutor can neither present an appeal under this section nor apply in revision—14 Mad 363 7 Cal 477

1118 High Court.—An appeal will lie under this section only to the High Court. Where a District Magistrate entertained an appeal from an order of acquittal passed by the subordinate Magistrate it was held that the District Magistrate acted without jurisdiction—7 Mad 213, 26 Mad 48. So also a Sessions Judge has no right to entertain an appeal against an order of acquittal—20 Cal 633 2 C W N celvi

1119 Order of acquittal.—The withdrawal of a complaint by a complainant operates as an order of acquittal—19 W R 55. A judgment passed by the Sessions Judge following the verdict of the jury acquitting the accused is a judgment of acquittal for the purpose of appeal by the Local Government—2 Cal 273. The words 'appellate order of acquittal' mean and include all judgments of an Appellate Court by which a conviction is set aside—24 W R 41

The 'acquittal' contemplated by this section need not be acquittal upon all the charges. Where in a case tried by jury an accused charged with murder was acquitted of that charge but was convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder this section did apply and an appeal by the Local Government would lie in respect of the charge of murder, even though the judgment of the Sessions Judge was not a judgment of absolute acquittal—2 Cal 273

The Local Government can appeal only against an order of 'acquittal' it is not open to the Government to appeal against an interlocutory order, e.g. an order refusing to add or alter charges—16 Bom 414

1120 When appeal will lie.—Although the right of appeal against an order of acquittal conferred under this section on the Local Government is unlimited—2 Cal 273, Crown v Irjan 1917, P R 43 still an appeal by Government from orders of acquittal should be made only in cases of some importance—1868 P R 15 and where there has been a grave miscarriage of justice—2 Cal 164. The High Court will not interfere merely because it might itself sitting as a Court of original jurisdiction have arrived at a different conclusion—1903 P R 11, 1918 P I R 70, 1916 P W R 7. Emp v Ram Karan 26 P I R 205 7 Lab L J 528 26 Cr L J 1141 4 All 148, 3 P I R 196, but it must be shown, before an appeal can be accepted, that the judgment of the Lower Court was so clearly wrong or perverse that its main the Lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence, an appeal will lie, and the High Court has jurisdiction to convict the accused—

1121 Procedure on appeal.—There is no distinction in this Code as to the mode of procedure which governs an appeal by the Government from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction and sentence. Both appeals are governed by the same rules and subject to the same limitations—17 Cal 485 20 All 459 So also, with regard to the considerations of evidence an appeal from an acquittal does not stand on a different footing from an appeal from a conviction. No distinction is drawn in the Code between the two kinds of appeal, as regards dealing with the evidence in the appeal—Dy Legal Remembrancer v Matukdhar 20 C W N 128 Emp v Sakharani 21 Bom L R 1054 If the High Court thinks that the lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence and should have convicted, the High Court can convict the accused in the same way as it can acquit an accused in an appeal against a conviction, if it thinks that the lower Court ought to have acquitted. In this respect the Code makes no distinction between an appeal from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction—Emp v Moti 26 Bom L R 113 25 Cr I J 486 Emp v Sakharani 21 Bom L R 1054 Emp v Kadir Bux 9 S L R 17 But it would be improper for the High Court to consider the appeal on grounds not contained in the objection urged on behalf of the Government—19 Bom 51, 17 C P I R 75

An appeal by Government against acquittal must be considered on its merits just as any other appeal always must be. The onus is on the appellant and the onus is all the heavier if the judgment appealed from is one which approaches the consideration of the question from a correct point of view and gives the accused the benefit of a reasonable doubt which exists in the mind of the Judge—Emp v Autar, 47 All 306 23 A L J 25 26 Cr I J 676 A I R 1925 All 315

In a criminal appeal by the Government to the High Court the arrest of the accused may be ordered pending appeal—1 Cal 281 2 All 340 In capital cases in which the Government appeals under this section, it is undesirable that the prisoner's fate should be discussed while he remains at large, in such cases the Government should apply for the arrest of the accused under section 42—9 All 528 Where, on an appeal under this section the accused is arrested and convicted, and sentence is passed on him the sentence will run from the date of the committal of the accused to jail and not from the date of the arrest or of the sentence—C I R 349

Limitation.—An appeal under this section must be presented within six months from the date of the order appealed against (See Art 15 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908)

418 (1) An appeal may lie on a matter of fact as well

Appeal on what matters as a matter of law, except where the admissible trial was by jury, in which case the appeal shall lie on a matter of law only

Explanation—The alleged severity of a sentence shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be a matter of law

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) or in Section 423, sub-section (2), when, in the case of a trial by jury, any person is sentenced to death, any other person convicted in the same trial with the person so sentenced may appeal on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law

Change:—Sub-section (2) has been newly added by sec. 115 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reason is stated below.

1122 Scope of section—This section is applicable alike both to appeals by Government (see 417) against an order of acquittal and to appeals by convicted persons against conviction and sentence—17 C P I R 73 (92). Therefore where in a case tried by jury, the Local Government appealed to the High Court under section 417 against an order of acquittal, and the grounds of appeal were all questions of fact the High Court rejected the application because under this section an appeal in the jury-case can lie only on a question of law—10 CrI 1029.

A Judicial Commissioner sitting on the original side and holding a sessions trial is to be deemed a Sessions Judge and not a Judge of the High Court and an appeal from his decision lies under this section to a Bench of the Judicial Commissioners Court—Khadabur v Emp 26 Cr. I J 312 (F B) A I R 1925 Sind 249.

1123 Trial by jury—Where the trial was by jury the appeal will lie on a matter of law only. By restricting appeals from cases triable by jury to matters of law only, this section gives finality to the verdict of the jury where there has existed no error of law nor misdirection and where the Judge has concurred with the majority—Ratanlal 730.

The words 'where the trial was by jury' mean where the trial was in fact held by jury and not where the trial ought to have been held by jury. And therefore where the accused was tried by jury in a case which ought to have been tried with the aid of assessors no appeal would lie except on a question of law the trial would be treated as one by a jury—25 Bom (No 23 Bom 696) 25 Cal 555 3 Bom I R 278. But in 3 Cal 765 24 W R 30 Ratanlal 961, 18 W R 59 it was held that in such a case the trial would be deemed as one held with the aid of assessors treating the verdict of the jury as the opinion of the assessors, and the prisoner would not lose his right of appeal on the facts. In 26 Mad 243 where a person was charged with an offence triable by jury, and the jury acquitted him of that charge but found him guilty of an offence triable with the aid of assessors Benson J held that the verdict was to be treated as an opinion of assessors and that an appeal lay on the facts of the case but Bhashyam Aiyangar J held that the jury had authority under section 238, in trying an offence triable by jury, to find as an incident to the trial that certain facts were proved in the trial which constituted a minor offence and to return a verdict of guilty on such offence though such offence might not be triable by a jury, and therefore in this case the verdict was to be treated as a verdict on a trial by jury and an appeal would lie only on a point of law.

In a case where a person is tried by a jury, and there is also another charge which is tried by the Judge with the same jury as assessors, an appeal will lie on a matter of fact—18 Cr L J 346 (Mad)

1124 Matter of law.—An appeal under this section from cases tried by jury lies on matters of law only, and the Appellate Court can not go into the facts of the case. If it were to do so, it would be substituting the decision of the Judges of that Court for the verdict of the jury who had the opportunity of seeing the demeanour of witnesses and weighing the evidence with the assistance which this affords, whereas the Judges of the Appellate Court can only arrive at a decision only on a perusal of the paper-evidence—21 Cal 955, 39 All 348, 23 C W N 661. If there is no question of law involved in the case, the High Court has no power to interfere, however absurd or perverse the verdict may be—14 Mad 36.

Every petition of appeal in cases tried by jury should state clearly in what respect the law has been contravened. The Court will not hunt through the records and find out the illegality if any. The parties must point out in their petition of appeal wherein there has been a departure from the law. Unless the exact contravention of law is pointed out, the petition of appeal is liable to be rejected—1 W R 21.

Examples of matters of law.—The question as to the admissibility of evidence which has been rejected by the Sessions Judge is a matter of law—2 Bom 61, so also, the question as to whether the evidence which had been admitted by the Sessions Judge ought to have been admitted is a matter of law—27 Bom 626, 23 C W N 661, so also an omission to consider relevant evidence—7 Cal 263, or a misdirection to the jury—25 Cal 230, 23 C W N 661, or a non-direction by the Judge on a question of prime importance in favour of the prisoner—27 Bom 624. But the High Court will not interfere with the verdict of the jury merely because the Sessions Judge admitted an inadmissible evidence regarding an unimportant matter which had only a remote bearing on the question in issue and the admission of which could not have affected the verdict of the jury—Keramat v A F 42 C I J 528, 27 Cr I J 277, A I R 1926 Cal 14.

The High Court on a point of law as to the admissibility of evidence can review the whole case and determine whether the admission of rejected evidence would have affected the result of the trial—2 Bom 61, 10 Bom 749.

When High Court can go into facts.—Where a Judge does not agree with the verdict of the jury and submits the case to the High Court under section 307, the whole facts of the case may be gone into by the High Court. The clear provisions of section 307 allowing the High Court to consider the entire evidence are not in any way curtailed by section 418 or 423 and the High Court can interfere with the verdict of the jury if it thinks proper to do so—9 All 420, see also 39 All 348.

So also, the High Court can go into the facts when a case is referred to it under section 374 for a confirmation of the sentence of death—19 W. R. 57, 2 C. W. N. 49. In short, in a case tried by a jury, the High Court can enter into facts only on a reference under section 307 or 374, and not on an appeal under this section.

Sub-section (2):—Where in a Sessions trial of several accused, one of the accused was sentenced to death and the other to lower punishments, and all of them appealed, it was held under the old law that the High Court, on a reference under section 374 in respect of the person sentenced to death, could go into the facts but in dealing with the appeal of the other persons the High Court must be confined to matters of law and could not enter into the facts—2 C. W. N. 49. This anomaly is now removed by sub-section (2). This clause provides that when in the case of a trial by jury, one person is sentenced to death and another to a lower punishment, the second accused may appeal on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law. This is intended to remove the anomaly under the existing law that a High Court acting under section 374 could consider the facts of the case as regards the former accused, but on an appeal of the second accused could only intervene on a point of law.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

419 Every appeal shall be made in the form of a petition

in writing presented by the appellant or his pleader, and every such petition shall (unless the Court to which it is presented otherwise directs) be accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against, and, in cases tried by a jury, a copy of the heads of the charge recorded under Section 367.

1125 Scope of section:—This section prescribes the form under which a petition of appeal is to be presented. It applies even where the accused is in jail, section 420 deals only with the mode in which the petition of appeal is to be presented when the petitioner is in jail, and does not dispense with the other formalities prescribed by this section—1831 A. W. N. 48. Section 420 is not derogatory to the general rule laid down in section 419. The latter section (419) applies as much to a prisoner in jail, as to any other appellant and requires that the petition shall be prepared in a certain form, while section 420 is only concerned with the manner of presentation of an appeal from jail—13 All. 171.

1126 Contents of petition:—A petition of appeal in a case tried by jury can be made only on a question of law and the petition should state clearly in what respect the law has been contravened—1 W. R. 21 (cited under section 418).

A petition of appeal containing defamatory statements against the Magistrate will not be entertained. Such petition may be returned for representation after eliminating the scandalous remarks—15 Bom. 488. A petition of appeal containing a false statement will not make the petitioner liable to punishment for the false statement, because a crimina appeal is a continuation of the criminal case, and the appellant has got all the privileges of the accused—12 Mad 451 (cited in Note 981 under section 342)

1127 Presentation of petition:—As regards presentation no special method is enjoined in the Code, and the question is one of administrative convenience alone. Therefore an actual presentation to an officer of the Court, such as a Bench Clerk (in the High Court) or to one of the Judges, its members, is valid—29 M L J 101. But depositing a petition of appeal in a box kept for the convenience of parties (in the compound of a Court house) and intended for the deposit of papers for the Court is not a proper presentation, because the box is not intended for appeals and also because a petition of appeal might have been deposited there by a person who could not legally present it—19 Mad 324.

The petition should be presented in person, the transmission of it by post is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section—2 Weir 467, Ratanlal 464. 15 Mad 137.

Presentation by Pleader—The petition should be delivered to the proper officer of the Court, either by the appellant or by his pleader—15 Mad 137. Presentation of appeal by the vakils gomasta or clerk is equivalent to presentation by pleader, if the vakil has signed the petition and has been duly authorised by a vakalatnama—2 Weir 469, 20 Mad 87. But presentation of the petition through a person who is not the clerk of the pleader, and over whose action and conduct the pleader has no control, is not a proper presentation—21 Mad 114. Where a petition of appeal was prepared on behalf of three accused and signed under vakalat by their pleader, and was presented by another pleader who held vakalat only from one of the accused, it was held that there was a proper presentation of the petition of appeal on behalf of all the accused—2 Weir 476. But where the prisoners had conflicting interests to each other, and where each of the prisoners made confessions exonerating himself and incriminating the other, it would be improper for one pleader to present an appeal on behalf of both and to represent both who had conflicting interests—1830 P R 13.

The word 'pleader' includes a 'mukhtar' as well as any other person authorised by the appellant and the presentation of the petition through them would be proper—Imp 1. Sitarani 6 Bom 14. In re Suba Itala 1 Mad 304. This is now made clear by the present definition of the word 'pleader' in Section 4 (r) as amended in 1923 by which a mukhtar has been placed on the same footing as a pleader.

1128 Copy of Judgment—It is in the discretion of the Appellate Court to admit an appeal without its being accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against, where injustice might accrue to the appellant by insisting on a strict compliance with this section. But in such cases before hearing the appeal, the Court should have before it a copy of such judgment or order which it may get by sending for the record—Imp 1. Sitarani, 5 Bom L R 704.

Where there are several accused in a case, and all of them prefer a joint appeal, only one copy of the judgment appealed against is required to be filed, and it is not necessary that there shall be a distinct appeal petition by each of the convicted persons separately accompanied by a separate copy of the judgment—3 Bom F R 704 Batasha v Emp, 18 Cr L J 512 (Oudh)

A copy furnished in the prisoner's own language is sufficient—Ratan Lal 82 See notes under Section 371

420 If the appellant is in jail he may present his petition of appeal and the copies accompanying the same to the officer in charge of the jail, who shall thereupon forward such petition and copies to the proper Appellate Court

1129 This section deals with the manner of presentation of an appeal by a prisoner in jail but it does not dispense with the formalities prescribed by section 419 These formalities must be observed see 1891 A W N 48 and 13 All 171 cited in Note 1125 under section 419

Where the petitioner is in jail every facility such as pen ink, paper and even a writer should be allowed to him to enable him to prepare the petition of appeal—13 W R 69 1 B 11 C R 16

There is nothing in this section to indicate that it is intended to deprive the appellant in jail of the opportunity of being heard in appeal Therefore, where the appellant is in jail notice of the date of hearing should be given either to him or his pleader so that he may have a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of his appeal—2 Weir 472

Where a jail appeal has been presented through the officer in charge of the jail and has been dismissed under sec 421 no further appeal can be preferred through Counsel under section 419 ante—24 O C 304 44 All 729 In re Kunhanmad 46 Mad 382 (392) Ram Jutar v Emp 11 O F J 536 1 O W N 324 25 Cr L J 1313 The reason is that when a right of appeal has once been exercised and that appeal has been disposed of the accused will not be allowed to appeal again—44 All 759

A jail appeal can be heard and disposed of by a Vacation Judge—In re Kunhanmad 46 Mad 382 (392)

421 (1) On receiving the petition and copy under Section 419 or Section 420, the Appellate Court shall peruse the same and, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering it may dismiss the appeal summarily

Summary dismissal of appeal. Provided that no appeal presented under Section 419 shall be dismissed unless the appellant or his pleader has had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same.

(2) Before dismissing an appeal under this section, the Court may call for the record of the case, but shall not be bound to do so

1130 Appellant not bound to appear:—An appeal should not be dismissed merely because the appellant or his pleader failed to appear to support the petition, but the Appellate Court must consider whether there exist sufficient grounds for its interference, and must judicially determine the appeal on the merits—Ratanlal 593, Ram Bharose v. Emp. 14 A L J 327, 5 N H R 76, 46 Mad 382 (402), Baldeo v. Emp. 24 Cr L J 475 (Pat.) If the appellant does not appear but leaves the question of admission or rejection of the appeal to be determined by the Appellate Court on the papers, the Appellate Court is bound to peruse the papers and the appellant is not bound to appear a second time by counsel or in person—Ratanlal 739. But if the Appellate Court thinks that the presence of the prisoner (appellant) is necessary for the purpose of disposing of the appeal, the Court can direct that the prisoner be brought before it—2 Weir 473.

'No sufficient ground for interfering'—The appellant's pleader should be allowed, if necessary, to refer to the certified copies of the evidence to show that there were sufficient grounds for interfering. Where the Judge disallowed the pleader to refer to the evidence, he acted erroneously—11 O C 360.

Where there are in the memorandum of appeal allegations of withholding witnesses of refusal to grant warrants and summonses to witnesses, and of disregard of certain evidence filed in the case, there were sufficient grounds for interference—Ratanlal 916. So also, where the grounds of appeal disclose reasons for discrediting the witnesses for the prosecution, there are sufficient grounds for interference and the Appellate Court ought not to dismiss the appeal—29 Mad 236.

If no sufficient grounds for interference are shown, the Appellate Court should not interfere, but should dismiss the appeal—5 All 386.

1131 Summary dismissal of appeal:—Although this section gives the Appellate Court power to dismiss an appeal summarily, that power must be exercised with judicial discretion. Appeals which are complained both in law and fact ought not to be summarily dismissed—19 Cr L J 228 (Cal.) 3 P L J 38, 22 Cr L J 349 (Cal.) Where there has been a dispute as to facts and where the credibility of witnesses for the prosecution has been impugned, it is proper for the Appellate Court to call for the record and look at the evidence, and not to dismiss the appeal summarily—Padurath v. Emp. 24 Cr L J 477 (Pat.) The summary dismissal of an appeal is not justified where there were disputed questions of fact in the case and the number of witnesses and documents were large and the Court of first instance had discussed the evidence and come to certain findings—Rahimuddin v. Emp. 22 Cr L J 349 (Cal.)

An order of summary rejection of appeal under this section is final. Such an order is not open to review and it is immaterial whether such order is made before or after the papers have been called for—4 Bom 101, 19 Bom 732, 1887 P R 24. But the Madras High Court holds that if the appeal has been dismissed for default of the pleader's appearance, and if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Appellate Court that there is a reasonable excuse for the non-appearance of the pleader, the Appellate

Court may rehear the appeal on the merits—7 M H C R App 29, In re Kunhammad 46 M L 382 (403)

When an appeal is dismissed under this section, the Court has no power to alter (diminish or enhance) the conviction and sentence—2 Weir 475, Ratanlal 304 Ratanlal 384, Ratanlal 74 If the Appellate Court wishes to alter the sentence, it cannot do so summarily under this section, but must proceed according to Secs 422 and 423—2 Weir 474 Ratanlal 384

Withdrawal of appeal—A petition of appeal presented for admission may be withdrawn, before it is dismissed under this section—5 C L R 372

Dismissal of a connected appeal—Where two accused presented two appeals, the fact that the Appellate Court admitted the appeal of one of the appellants, does not affect his power to dismiss the other appeal summarily under this section—5 C W N 332

1132. Judgment and record of reasons.—An Appellate Court in rejecting an appeal summarily under this section is not bound to write a judgment—21 Cal 92 20 Bom 540 25 Mad 534 Nagar Mohd v Hara Singh, 26 P L R 616 27 Cr H J 23 2 P L J 695 9 C W N 623, 13 N L R 169 19 Cr L J 316 (Bur) 1 B R (1906) 2nd Qr 49 But it is advisable that a Court which dismisses an appeal under this section should briefly record its reasons for such dismissal in view of the possibility of such order being challenged by an application for revision—1895 A W N 68 8 All 514 36 All 496 Gurbani v Emp 2 P L J 695 Gobind v Emp 2 P L J 10 19 Cr L J 304 (Pat), 17 All 241, 13 N L R 169 Jagannath v Emp 25 Cr L J 1237 (Pat) Brij Mohan v Emp 26 Cr L J 4 (Oudh) Though ordinarily an Appellate Court in rejecting an appeal summarily is not bound to record a judgment, still the Court should not dispose of an appeal under this section otherwise than by a judgment showing on the face of it that it has applied its mind to a consideration of the evidence on the record, and of the pleas raised by the accused both in the Court below and in his memorandum of appeal—38 All 393 Jauhar Ram v Gyan Chaud 21 Cr L J 139 (Pat), 1 P L J 318, 2 P L J 10 Where in a case in which the evidence was voluminous the Appellate Court without considering either the evidence of the witnesses or the documents, disposed of the appeal practically in a single paragraph the appellate judgment was not in accordance with law and the appeal must be reheard—Narain Prosad v Emp, 1 P L J 716

The Appellate Court need not go to the length of writing an elaborate judgment, but should notice briefly and clearly what objections were urged on appeal and how they were disposed of—32 Cal 178 It should record at least so much as would satisfy the High Court, when an application for revision is made that it has fully considered all the questions in issue and has appreciated the simplicity or gravity of the case—2 P L J 615 Where no reason is given the summary dismissal would involve either a remand of the appeal to be admitted and heard, or an examination of the evidence by the High Court—19 Cr L J 304 (Pat), 19 Cr L J 316

1133 Proviso—Right of appellant to be heard:—The proviso lays down that no appeal under section 419 shall be dismissed without giving the appellant or his pleader an opportunity of being heard. But this proviso does not apply to jail appeals presented under sec 420 and therefore the Appellate Court is not bound to give the accused any time to engage counsel. But under Rule 50 of the Madras Rules of Practice seven days' time is allowed before a jail appeal is circulated to the Judges. So an appellant has sufficient opportunity of engaging counsel if he wishes to do so.—In re Annamalai 46 Mad 382 (400)

It is not competent to the Appellate Court to reject an appeal summarily without giving a reasonable opportunity to the appellant or his pleader of being heard.—Rangachari v Emp 29 Mad 236, 2 P L T 10, 12 C W N 248, Ranga Reddy v Emp 23 M I J 371 13 Cr L J 710. If the appeal is rejected under this section without hearing the appellant or his pleader, the Appellate Court may be directed to rehear the petition of appeal and to give the appellant an opportunity of being heard.—Ratnivil 703. Where the Appellate Court rejected the appeal summarily owing to default of the pleader's appearance, and satisfactory reason for non appearance was shown the Court should rehear the appeal on the merits.—7 M H C R App 29 46 Mad 382 5 N I R 76. Where the notice for hearing the appeal was served in the afternoon of 21st March on the appellant's pleader at Amalner asking him to be present on the 22nd March at Jalgaon or any other place where the camp of the District Magistrate might be and on the day in question the District Magistrate was encamped at Idhar, at a considerable distance from Amalner, so that the appellant's pleader could not appear at that place and the appeal was consequently dismissed held that the order of dismissal must be set aside as there was no sufficient notice to the appellant's pleader of the date and place of hearing.—In re Iyjun 22 Bom I R 188. Where the District Magistrate called upon the appellant's pleader to argue the appeal on the same day that it was presented, and on the pleader asking time the Magistrate refused to grant him time and rejected the appeal, it was held that the appellant's pleader was not afforded a reasonable opportunity of being heard.—7 Bom I R 89 Samthal v Emp 36 Cal 383 13 C W N 681 Furka Hussan, In re 47 M I J 661 48 Mad 383 20 I W 623. But where the Appellate Court heard the appellant's pleader in support of the appeal and then sent for the records of the case, but disposed of the case without hearing the appellant's pleader a second time, held that the Appellate Court did not act illegally.—2 S I R 39.

Even when an appellant is in jail reasonable notice should be given either to him or his pleader so that he may have a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal.—2 Weir 472, 3 A L J 103.

Reasonable notice of the day on which the appeal is to be heard must be given to the appellant or his pleader, so that he may have a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of his appeal.—Pombay Cattle 18,9 H L J p 473. A general notice posted in the Court that appeals will be heard for admission only on the first Court-day next after presentation is not a compliance with the provisions of this section. The Court should fix a time in each particular case, so as to enable the appellant or his pleader to be heard—5 Mad 11

If the hearing of the appeal is adjourned to another date, notice of the adjournment should be given to the appellant—20 Cr L J 271 (Pat) Where a Magistrate disposed of an appeal before the day fixed for the adjourned hearing, and without giving notice to the appellant or his pleader, it was held that the procedure was illegal—2 Wrie 475

1134 Sub-section (2)—Although the Legislature does not make it obligatory on the part of the Appellate Court to send for the records before dismissing an appeal, still the practice of summarily dismissing an appeal without calling for the records is always inconvenient and must not be adopted—1883 A W N 145 If questions of fact are argued in the appeal, the appeal ought not to be disposed of under section 421 without sending for the original records of the Court below.—In re Turka Hussain 48 M L J 385 47 M L J 661 26 Cr L J 411 Where the grounds of appeal disclose reasons for discrediting the witnesses for the prosecution, the Appellate Court ought to call for the records—Rangachari v Emp 29 Mad 236

A Magistrate is not bound to call for the record in an appeal in which the only question is a mere question of fact and the judgment of the Court below is so plain and clear that calling for the record would be a mere waste of time But when the judgment of the lower Court is a long and intricate judgment requiring careful consideration, the Appellate Court ought not to refuse to call for the record—3 P L J 389

After the record is sent for and received, the Appellate Court ought to hear the pleader and can not dismiss the appeal summarily without hearing him—Lalit Kumar v A E, 42 C L J 551 27 Cr L J 382, Surendra v A F 42 C L J 554 27 Cr L J 412 See Note 1139 under sec 423

1135 Revision—Where an appeal has been dismissed summarily under this section without recording any reasons or judgment the High Court can either go into the case on its own account and examine the evidence, or can remand the appeal to the Lower Appellate Court to be admitted and heard—Ram Kant v Emp 19 Cr L J 304 (Pat) Though the practice usually is to remand the case to the Lower Appellate Court and ask for a judgment from that Court after a regular hearing, the High Court has a discretion to go into the case itself, and if necessary, to consider the questions of fact as if in first appeal—13 O C 309, 19 Cr L J 316 (Bur) If the High Court finds that the case is one which should not have been dealt with summarily the High Court will send back the case ordering the Appellate Court to hear it on its merits and pass a judgment—19 Cr L J 316 (Bur) Where the Sessions Judge summarily dismissed an appeal from the conviction of a Magistrate, the High Court itself, finding that the evidence on which the conviction was based was insufficient, set aside the conviction and acquitted the accused, instead of remitting the appeal for a rehearing on the merits—10 C W N 446 See also 13 O C 309

422 If the Appellate Court does not dismiss the appeal summarily, it shall cause notice to be Notice of appeal

given to the appellant or his pleader, and to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf, of the time and place at which such appeal will be heard, and shall, on the application of such officer, furnish him with a copy of the grounds of appeal; and, in cases of appeals under Section 417, the Appellate Court shall cause a like notice to be given to the accused

1136 Restrictive order for admission:—A restrictive order for admission of a criminal appeal is not contemplated by this section, and must be deemed to be ultra vires. Therefore, where a criminal appeal was admitted for consideration of the sentence only, it was held that the whole appeal should be heard and that the appellant could not be restricted to any selected ground out of those specified in his petition—Nagar v. Emp. 18 C. W. N. 147, 41 Cal. 406, Gaya Singh v. Emp. 4 Pat. 254, 6 P. F. T. 381, 26 Cr. L. J. 86. Except where there are express words as in secs. 412 and 418, the Code does not provide for an appeal for the limited purpose of reviewing only a part of the judgment. The appellant has a right to be heard fully on the merits and the Judge is bound by sec. 424 to record a complete judgment—Ratanlal 826

1137 Notice:—Notice to the appellant of the time and place of hearing is obligatory, and it is a material error in procedure to dispose of an appeal without giving such notice—2 Weir 475. Where a criminal appeal filed through a counsel is admitted, it cannot be dismissed summarily without giving notice to the accused for after an appeal is admitted the Court cannot act under sec. 421—Ta. Pu. v. Emp. 3 Bur. L. J. 18, 25 Cr. L. J. 933

*To whom to be given:—*Notice may be given to the appellant or his pleader. But the attention of the pleader should be directed to the notice, when notice is given to the pleader only the mere fact that the pleader of the appellant is present in Court when an order is made admitting an appeal is not sufficient—10 C. I. R. 57

The word 'pleader' includes mukhtar and notice to the mukhtar is sufficient for the purposes of this section—6 Bom. 14

If the appellant could not be found at the address given by him, the notice of the hearing of appeal or a copy of it should be left at the address given—Ratanlal 809

In case of appeals under sec. 417, notice must be given to the accused

Where the Court passes an order, awarding compensation to the accused under sec. 250, and the complainant appeals, notice should be given of the appeal to the Public Prosecutor or the officer appointed by the Local Government, but no notice to the accused is necessary—41 M. L. J. 172, 31 M. L. 801, 27 M. L. J. 621. But in such a case it is desirable that notice should be given to the accused so as to afford him an opportunity of supporting the order passed in his favour, although there is no express provision of law directing the giving of notice to the accused in such a case—29 M I 187 38 M I 1091 25 Cr I J 209 (Lah)

Although this section does not require any notice to be given to the complainant still in appeals from orders under sec 545, (directing that the expenses properly incurred by the prosecution be defrayed out of the fine), it would be better in practice to give notice to the complainant also. But the absence of such notice will not afford any ground for interference in revision—14 N I R 131

Notice should also be given to such officer as the Local Government appoints—29 M I 187 In Bengal notice should be given to the Legal Remembrancer so far as the High Court is concerned. In other cases, the District Magistrate has been appointed as the officer to receive notices of appeals. If the rule is granted against the order of a Sessions Judge, he is the proper person to show cause—7 C W N 80, Calcutta Gazette, 1893, Part I, page 120. In Bombay District Magistrates should be served with notice—Pombay Gazette 1883, Part I, page 182 24 Bom L R 1150. The same is the rule in the Punjab Oudh and C P See Punjab Gazette 1883 Part I page 53 Oudh Crim Digest p 27 C P Gazette, 1883, Part II, page 101. In Madras, the Public Prosecutor is the officer to be served with notice in case of appeals to the Sessions Court and the High Court—Fort St. George Gazette 1884, Part I, page 30. In other cases, the District Magistrate is the proper officer. Thus, in an appeal before the Joint Magistrate notice should be served on the District Magistrate—1915 M W N 540

Omission to give notice to the District Magistrate is a mere irregularity, according to the Madras High Court—Iellavauambalam v Solai 39 Mad 505 28 M I J 693 but according to the Bombay High Court, such omission is an illegality and not merely an irregularity—Emp v Shivlingappa 24 Bom I R 1150. But objection on the ground of absence of notice should be made by the District Magistrate and not by the complainant and the High Court will not interfere in revision at the instance of the complainant where the objection on the ground of absence of notice to the District Magistrate comes not from the District Magistrate but from the complainant—25 Bom I R 251 Deendra v Shethappa 26 Cr L J 751 (Bom). But where an appeal is heard by the District Magistrate who is himself the officer authorised to receive notice, no formal notice to him is necessary—41 M I J 172. But in another Madras case, where an appeal was originally heard by the District Magistrate and was ultimately heard by a Joint Magistrate it was held that this fact did not relieve the Joint Magistrate of his duty of giving notice to the District Magistrate—Id Mustafa v Shanmug 25 Cr I J 1389 A I R 1925 Mad 375

Time and place of hearing—The notice must specify the exact date of hearing. It is not enough that the Magistrate had directed that the appeal would be heard in a certain month (e.g. in January)—1881 A W N 46. So also, a general notice posted in the Court house that the appeal will be heard for admission on the first Court day next after presentation of the appeal is not sufficient. The particular date must be fixed—5 Mad 11

It is imperative on a criminal Appellate Court to hear the appeal at the time and place named in the notice of appeal—5 N I R 26. Therefore where a notice is issued fixing a particular place for the hearing of the appeal the Court ought not hear the appeal at a different place without giving notice of the change of place—1891 P R 2. If notice has been issued to an appellant to appear at the headquarters on a particular date and if on that particular date the officer who will hear the appeal moves out into camp he should fix a fresh date and issue a fresh notice. A general order directing appellants to follow the officer into camp is not sufficient—1903 P R 11

423 (1) The Appellate Court shall then send for the record of the case if such record is Power of Appellate Court in disposing of appeal not already in Court. After perusing such record and hearing the appellant or his pleader if he appears and the Public Prosecutor if he appears and in case of an appeal under Section 417, the accused if he appears the Court may if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering dismiss the appeal, or may—

(a) in an appeal from an order of acquittal reverse such order and direct that further inquiry be made or that the accused be retried or committed for trial as the case may be, or find him guilty and pass sentence on him according to law

(b) in an appeal from a conviction (1) reverse the finding and sentence and acquit or discharge the accused or order him to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court or committed for trial or (2) alter the finding, maintaining the sentence, or with or without altering the finding reduce the sentence or (3) with or without such reduction and with or without altering the finding alter the nature of the sentence but subject to the provisions of Section 106 sub-section (3) not so as to enhance the same,

(c) in an appeal from any other order, alter or reverse such order,

(d) make any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper

(2) Nothing herein contained shall authorize the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him

1138 Powers and duties of Appellate Court:—It is the duty of the Appellate Court, in dealing with an appeal preferred to it, to consider the evidence both oral and documentary, and to apply its mind to the case before recording a judgment therein. Where the Appellate Court fails to do this, the judgment cannot be said to be a judgment in accordance with law—P I R 716. The rule by which a Criminal Appellate Court is to be guided in dealing with a criminal appeal is that it has to come to a conclusion for itself upon the evidence on the record, assisted so far as it might be by such reasons or arguments as it might elicit from the conclusions and reasons contained in the judgment of the original Court. If the Appellate Court entertains any doubt about the correctness of the conviction or the commission of the offence, it should discharge the accused—23 CrI 347 1898 P R 6 4 L B R 340. If the Appellate Court is unable even with the aid of the Magistrate's finding of fact, to form an independent judgment as to whether the prisoners had committed the offence or not, the accused ought to be acquitted—20 W R 13. In an appeal from a conviction and sentence, it is for the Appellate Court to be satisfied affirmatively that the prosecution case is substantially true and that the guilt of the accused has been established beyond all reasonable doubt. It is not for the appellants to satisfy the Appellate Court that the first Court had come to a wrong finding—Kanchan v Emp 47 CrI 374.

It is the duty of the Magistrate to look into the evidence of both sides in order to come to a decision. Where the Appellate Court did not think it necessary to deal with the evidence adduced by the defence in the case, because no reference to that evidence was made by the counsel for the appellants, and that evidence was practically ignored by him, held that the Appellate Court acted illegally in doing so—40 CrI 376.

The power of an Appellate Court to pass sentence is measured by the power of the Court from whose judgment or order the appeal has been made. Therefore an Appellate Court when passing a sentence on appeal cannot pass a sentence which the original Court was not competent to pass—Sitaram v Emp 7 N I R 109, 2 Weir 487, Emp v Muhammad Yakub 45 All 594 39 CrI 157 12 Mad 45. Thus, where a second class Magistrate passed a sentence of 4 months imprisonment, but the District Magistrate on appeal altered the sentence into a fine of Rs 400, held that the sentence passed by the Appellate Court was ultra vires because the second class Magistrate could not have awarded a fine of Rs 400 (see 32)—Emp v Muhammad Yakub, 45 All 594.

When an inspection of the scene of the occurrence is material either to the case for the prosecution or for the defence, it is desirable that the Appellate Court should inspect the spot—1911 P W R 16

When an Appellate Court does not dismiss an appeal summarily, it must dispose of it in the manner provided by this section. It has no power to refer to the High Court for decision a question of law arising in an appeal—7 L B R 251

The Appellate Court must peruse the whole record, and not merely the judgment of the lower Court. A decision based upon a perusal of the judgment alone is not valid, and the appeal must be reheard—14 Cr L J 182 (Cal). If the records of the case are lost, it is the duty of the Appellate Court to order a new trial—1889 A W N 55, 1885 A W N 117

If the appeal is not dismissed summarily under sec. 421, the Appellate Court is bound to peruse the record and consider whether there is any ground for interference with the acquittal or conviction, even though the appellant does not appear. The Appellate Court must dispose of the appeal on the merits, and is not entitled to dismiss an appeal for default of appearance of the appellant. An order for dismissal of an appeal for non-appearance is not contemplated by this section—20 Cr L J 744, 5 A L R 76, 13 All 171, 50 Cal 92. Ramchandra v Emp, 21 A I J 100, 14 A L J 327, Shiam Behary v Emp, 20 Cr L J 271 (Pat), Baldeo v Emp, 24 Cr L J 475 (Pat). Neesa Lal v Emp, 4 P L T 552

In dealing with a case under this section, there is no restriction on the powers of the Appellate Court to dispose of the case in any of the manners provided by this section. It can acquit the accused, or order a retrial or order the accused to be committed, etc.—Tajm Framnik v Q F, 25 Cal 711. Ramprasad v Emp, 26 Cr L J 1000 (Nag)

Sufficient ground for interference—An appellant is not precisely in the same position before an Appellate Court as he is before the Court trying him but must satisfy the Court that there is sufficient ground for interfering with the order of conviction. If no sufficient ground has been shown, it is the duty of the Appellate Court not to interfere—5 All 36

1139. Dismiss the appeal:—Where an appeal is admitted and dealt with under this section the Appellate Court can dismiss the appeal only on the merits and has no power to dismiss it summarily—1 Bom J R 225, Ram Han v Sintuk, 23 Cr L J 733 (Cal), Neesa Lal v Emp, 4 P L T 552, Ta Pu v Emp, 3 Bur L J 18, 25 Cr L J 933

In dismissing an appeal under this section on the merits, the Appellate Court is bound to write a judgment and the judgment must comply with the requirements of sections 424 and 36. On failure to do so the judgment may be set aside and the appeal directed to be reheard—1 Bom L R 225

1140. Right of parties to be heard:—If the appellant is present or is represented by a pleader, the appellant or person or his pleader must be heard—13 All 171, 20 Cr L J 271. But where the Appellate Court disposed of the appeal on the merits after perusing the records and considering the grounds of appeal, the judgment of the Appellate Court would not be set aside on the mere ground that the pleader for the accused was not heard in the Appellate Court (the pleader being prevented from appearing in time on account of a railway strike)—Olayet Khan v K-F, 1 Pat 589 (590)

A complainant cannot claim as of right to be heard in the appeal. The matter is one which may be left in each case to the discretion of the Court—7 M H C R App 42. A private prosecutor as such has no right to be heard but the Court may grant permission in any particular case—1880 P R 29, 9 C W N 15.

If the Public Prosecutor does not appear on behalf of the Government a valid private prosecutor to support the prosecution may be heard—Weir 476.

The counsel for the appellant has a right of reply—11 C W N 411. There is nothing in the language of this section to preclude the appellant or his pleader from replying to the arguments of the Public Prosecutor, and as a matter of principle such right of reply should be conceded to him. The practice of the High Court has been uniformly in favour of allowing this right to the appellant or his pleader—1917 P R 21, 38 Cal 307. The Oudh Court holds that although the appellant's counsel has no right of reply, still it is a privilege which should not ordinarily be refused—Praji v Emp 11 O I J 603, 1 O W N 471, 25 Cr L J 1169. Pahra v Emp 25 Cr L J 1173 (Oudh).

1141 Clause (a) —Appeal from acquittal:—Clause (a) of this section can apply only to the High Court because section 417 which provides for appeals against orders of acquittal requires that such appeals shall lie to the High Court—7 Mal 213. Therefore a Sessions Judge has no power to set aside the order of acquittal and direct the commitment of the accused to the Court of Session—2 C W N 411, or to direct further inquiry to be made in a case of acquittal by a Magistrate. Such a power can be exercised only by the High Court—20 Cal 633. So also a District Magistrate has no power to entertain an appeal from an order of acquittal and is incompetent to reverse a Subordinate Magistrate's order of acquittal and direct a rehearing—Mid 213, 6 Mad 478.

The discretionary powers of the High Court under this clause will be exercised only when it is satisfied that the case is of sufficient consequence to justify it in acting under this very exceptional section—7 M H C R 339. In appeals against acquittals the High Court ought not to interfere unless the trying Judge was clearly wrong and the judgment is either perverse or based on obvious error of procedure—16 Cr L J 529 (Mad). The indications of error in a judgment of acquittal ought to be clear and more palpable and the evidence more cogent and convincing in order to justify its being set aside than would be necessary in the case of a judgment of conviction—1904 P R 7, 21 Cr L J 349. See Note 1120 under section 417.

The High Court, in exercising jurisdiction in the matter of appeals against acquittals, should confine its exercise to the particular acquittal complained of by the Government. At the same time it would not be proper for the High Court to consider the appeal on grounds not contained in the objection urged on behalf of the Government—19 Bom 51 17 C P L R 74. In 12 B H C R 1 it has been held that a ground of objection not taken in the petition of appeal may be allowed, if it has not prejudiced the accused and sufficient time has been given to the other side to be prepared for the same.

Acquittal—This clause confers a power to direct further inquiry only in respect of a case of an appeal from an order of acquittal and not in a case in which an order of discharge or dismissal may have been passed—27 Cal 126.

1142 Clause (b) —Appeal from conviction:—In an appeal from a conviction, the Appellate Court may, if it likes, take further evidence (section 428) but cannot direct further inquiry—19 A L J 961.

'Reverse the finding and sentence'—Before an Appellate Court can set aside a conviction it must be satisfied that the conviction is wrong. It seems a logical consequence of this that when without finding the conviction to be wrong the Appellate Court set it aside, the appellate order would be ultra vires—17 C P L R 97.

An Appellate Court is not competent to set aside a conviction merely on the ground that all the witnesses cited for the defence have not been examined. The proper course in such a case is to have the evidence taken of the other witnesses before disposing of the appeal—2 Weir 481. A conviction ought not to be reversed unless the admission of the rejected evidence would have affected the result of the trial—2 Bom 61.

The proper procedure on appeal in a case where the Lower Court had refused to take the defence of the accused is to set aside the conviction and sentence passed by the Lower Court, and order the Magistrate to begin the proceedings anew against the accused from the stage when his evidence was refused—1884 P R 28.

After reversing the finding and sentence, the Appellate Court can order the accused either to be retried or to be committed for trial. The Appellate Court cannot itself frame a charge against the accused, and hold a regular trial—G C Sircar v. A. F., 3 Rang 68 4 Bur L J 29 26 Cr L J 1119 A I R 1925 Rang 230.

1143 Re-trial.—A Sessions Judge has power to order a new trial when the case comes before him in appeal. This power should however be sparingly exercised and a retrial should not be ordered unless there are grave reasons for doing so—13 A L J 477.

Before quashing a conviction and ordering a new trial on the ground that though the accused was shown by the evidence to have committed some offence, he has been convicted under a wrong section, the Appellate Court must come to a certain conclusion as to the offence which the accused was shown by the evidence to have committed, and it ought to consider whether, if the evidence showed that the accused should properly have been convicted of another offence than that he was charged with, he would be prejudiced by amending the conviction. Before ordering a retrial, the Appellate Court is bound to see what possible object could be served by a fresh trial—2 Weir 480

When retrial may be ordered—(1) A retrial may be ordered where the trial is held to be illegal on the ground of want of jurisdiction of the Court that tried the case—1885 A W N 293 3 Bur L T 9 Thus where an offence triable by a Magistrate of the 1st class or Court of Session was tried by a second class Magistrate, the Appellate Court may order the accused to be tried by a 1st class Magistrate or by the Court of Session—8 All 14 2 Weir 482 2 Weir 484 In 20 Cal 412 it has been held that where a trial was void for want of jurisdiction it is not necessary for the Appellate Court to order a retrial, and therefore where the Appellate Court in such a case merely discharged the accused and did not order a retrial, the omission to order retrial would not prevent the Magistrate from taking further proceedings against the accused (2) If in an appeal from a conviction the Judge finds that the evidence discloses the commission of a more serious offence, he may set aside the conviction and sentence and order the accused to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction or committed for trial according to the nature of the evidence against him—11 C W N 1 (3) A retrial would be proper where the accused was rightly acquitted of one offence but the Appellate Court comes to the conclusion that he ought to have been tried for another—36 Mad 457 (4) If the Appellate Court is of opinion that the appellant ought to have been convicted of an offence different from that with which he was charged in the Lower Court the Appellate Court ought to annul the conviction and order a retrial—1882 A W N 112 (5) A retrial may be ordered in a case in which the Appellate Court sets aside the conviction on the ground of misdirection to the jury—4 C W N 576 (6) An Appellate Court in discharging the accused on the ground of misjoinder of parties has power to add a direction that the accused should be retried—28 Cal 104 (7) A retrial ought to be ordered if it is found that the accused has not been properly convicted—3 C W N 332 (8) An Appellate Court may order a retrial if it is of opinion that the proceedings before the Magistrate have been irregular—1883 A W N 99 (9) Where the Lower Court has committed an error in procedure in convicting the accused upon evidence which was not given in their presence the Appellate Court is competent to order a retrial—2 Weir 481 so also a retrial may be ordered where the conviction is reversed on account of an irregularity in the procedure by which material evidence was excluded—Ratanlal 938 36 Mad 457 (10) A Sessions Judge has power to direct a retrial to be had upon a charge framed in whatever manner he thinks fit on the ground that the accused has been misled in their defence by the absence of a charge or by a defect in the charge—7 C W N 301, see also 9 N L R 42 (11) Where the trial Court has failed to record a judgment in conformity with section 367, the proper procedure for the Appellate Court is to reverse the order of the Court below and to remand the case for a trial de novo—(1920) M W N 120

Where the Sessions Judge on appeal annuls the conviction of the accused on the ground of want of jurisdiction of the Magistrate who tried the case, but omits to order a new trial, the Judge is not precluded from passing such order subsequently. The order of retrial does not amount to an alteration of the judgment annulling the conviction, within the meaning of sec 369—3 Mad 48.

Where the High Court on appeal set aside the verdict of the jury who convicted the accused, and observing that it would be open to the Crown to proceed further with the case if so advised, directed the petitioner to be released on bail until fresh trial if any, it was held that the order amounted to an order of retrial—46 Cal 212.

Scope of retrial—Where an Appellate Court reverses the verdict of a jury and orders a retrial, such retrial, unless the Appellate Court has limited the scope, must be taken to be one upon all the charges originally framed—22 Cal 377, 13 Cr 1 J 497 (Cal). Where an order of remand is passed by an Appellate Court under section 423, the Court cannot restrict the evidence to be taken to that mentioned in its order, but it should order the case to be retried in the view of the instructions contained in its order. The accused is entitled to adduce such additional evidence as he may desire—3 C 1 J 303. Thus, where in an appeal from a conviction, the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and ordered a retrial but at the same time directed that the evidence already on the record should be treated as evidence in the case, it was held that the direction was contrary to the provisions of secs 423 and 428 of the Code, and was therefore illegal—3 P 1 W 224, 14 Cr 1 J 77.

When retrial should not be ordered—The mere fact that the Appellate Court finds the decision of the Lower Court not so satisfactory as it should have been, does not authorise the Appellate Court to pass an order remanding the case to the Lower Court with instructions to write out a proper judgment—32 Cal 1069. Where a Sessions Judge on appeal thinks that the evidence of some more witnesses, who were not examined in the Lower Court, is necessary, he should proceed under sec 428 (1) and can not order retrial on that ground—31 Cal 710, 16 A L J 325. Where the evidence recorded by the Magistrate is as full as the law requires, and there is no irregularity in the procedure, it is not competent to a Sessions Judge on appeal to order a retrial. He must consider the case on the evidence before him and proceed to judgment—Ratanlal 530, 1 Bur L J 32, the mere fact that an inadmissible or irrelevant evidence has been admitted by the Lower Court does not justify a retrial. Such evidence may be left out of consideration—1 Bur L J 32. Where there is no evidence on the record to warrant a conviction for the offence charged, an order for retrial is not justified—Ramprasad v Emp, 26 Cr L J 1000 (Nag). A I R 1926 Nag 53.

'By a Court of competent jurisdiction'—Under this section when an Appellate Court orders a retrial, it can specify the Court by which the appellant is to be retried. There is nothing in this section which prevents such specification of the Court—Ratanlal 367.

If the Appellate Court finds that the accused had committed an offence which the Lower Court was not competent to try, the Appellate Court ought to order a retrial by a Court competent to try the offence—8 All.

14, 2 Weir 484. Even if the Lower Court was competent to try the offence, the Appellate Court may order the retrial by another Court of competent jurisdiction—L B R (1893—1900) 238

Under the provisions of this section, the retrial, if ordered, must be by a Court of competent jurisdiction 'subordinate to the Appellate Court, and therefore an Appellate Court cannot direct a case to be retried by itself—Ratanlal 482. But in 30 Mad 228 and 2 Weir 481, it has been held that the words 'Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court' are not to be taken as words of limitation, and do not exclude the Appellate Court from itself trying the offender when the offence is within the jurisdiction of the Appellate Court.

The Appellate Court may order the retrial to be held by any Court of competent jurisdiction. The High Court has power under this section to order a retrial of the appeal by the Lower Appellate Court—1913 P L R 7

1144. Order of commitment.—If the Appellate Court finds that the accused has committed an offence which the Lower Court was not competent to try, the Appellate Court may order retrial by a Court of competent jurisdiction and if there is no Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to the Appellate Court it ought to direct the committal of the accused to the Sessions—2 Weir 484. Where the accused has committed an offence triable exclusively by the Sessions Court, and has been tried by a Magistrate the Appellate Court is competent to direct a committal to the Sessions—8 All 14. Hasan Raza v Emp 20 A L J 368. Even if the offence be not exclusively triable by the Court of Session, the Appellate Court is still competent to direct a committal to the Sessions—23 Cal 350. This section gives the Appellate Court the power to order an accused person to be committed to the Sessions, when it considers that that is the procedure which should have been adopted by the Magistrate in the case—16 Bom 580. 15 All 203. Thus a commitment may be ordered by the Appellate Court if it is of opinion that the Magistrate, though of competent jurisdiction to try the case was not competent to punish the accused adequately—1893 P R 16.

When the Appellate Court directs a commitment to the Court of Session in investigation preliminary to commitment is not necessary—2 Weir 471.

An order of commitment passed by the Sessions Judge on appeal under this clause can be revised by the High Court under sec 439—Ram Samraj v Emp 11 O L J 748. 1 O W N 525. 25 Cr L J 1375.

Commitment to itself.—This section does not authorize a Sessions Court to commit a case to itself, but only empowers it as a Court of Appeal to direct a competent Magistrate to make a commitment to itself. Reading this section with sec 193 it is manifest that except in cases in which a Court of Session is expressly empowered to take cognizance of an offence as a Court of original jurisdiction, it has no power to do so unless a commitment has been made by a Magistrate duly empowered thus to do so—1907 A W N 178.

1145 Alteration of finding:—Where the accused were charged by the lower Court with several offences, and were convicted of the graver offences and acquitted of the minor charges the Appellate Court can alter the finding of the lower Court and convict the accused of the minor charges and acquit them of the graver offences—35 Mad 243 But in convicting an accused of an offence with which he was not charged in the lower Court, the Appellate Court can act only in accordance with the provisions of secs 237 and 238 of the Code—7 M L T 79, Emp v Sakharan 8 Bom L R 120 G C Sircar v Emp 3 Rang 68 4 Bur I J 29 Thus where on an appeal from a conviction of murder, the Appellate Court comes to the conclusion that the offence of murder is not proved but that there is evidence on the record to support a conviction for an offence against property, the Appellate Court ought to acquit the accused of murder, but it cannot alter the conviction of murder into a conviction of an offence against property because the latter offence is so widely different from the former that it is illegal under sec 237 or 238 to convict the accused of the latter offence when he is charged only with the former—Hall v Crown 4 Lah 373 Queen Emp v Yusuf 20 All 107 Where the Court of Session had convicted an accused of an offence under sec 409 I P C and the High Court on appeal found that the conviction was not sustainable under that section the Court refused to alter the finding into a conviction for some other offence (e.g. an offence under sec 161 I P C) for which the accused had not been charged or tried and which was of an entirely different nature from the offence with which he was charged—8 All 120 Where the accused was charged with and convicted of an offence under sec 457, I P C and on appeal the Sessions Judge altered the charge and recorded a conviction under sec 411, I P C, held that the Appellate Court had no power to so alter the charge as to make it necessary for the accused to meet an entirely different case from that with which he was charged in the trial Court—Mula v Emp, 23 A I J 924 26 Cr L J 1494 A I R 1926 All 33 But where the prosecution has established certain acts constituting an offence and the Court has misapplied the law to those acts by charging and convicting the accused for an offence other than that for which he should have been properly charged and it appears that in spite of such error of the Court, the accused has by his defence endeavoured to meet the accusation of the commission of those acts then the Appellate Court may alter the charge or finding and convict him for an offence which those acts properly constitute, if the accused is not at all prejudiced by the alteration of finding—26 Cal 863, 1890 A W N 86 Such an error is one of form rather than of substance and the alteration by an Appellate Court of the charge or finding into a more serious offence would not necessitate a retrial for that offence Therefore, where a person is convicted of an attempt to commit an offence, the Appellate Court if it thinks that the acts of the accused constitute the substantive offence itself, may convict him of the substantive offence without ordering a retrial—26 Cal 863

The Appellate Court in altering a finding under this clause cannot act in contravention of the provisions of section 239 of this Code Thus the petitioner and four others were tried jointly, the other four being convicted of an offence under section 454 of the I P Code and the petitioner was convicted of abetment thereof. On appeal the Appellate Court acquitted the petitioner of the offence of abetment but convicted him under secs 411 and 414 I P C. Held that the conviction by the Appellate Court cannot be maintained, because under sec 239 the petitioner could not have been tried in the original Court jointly with the four accused under sections 411 and 414 of the I P C while they were being tried under section 454 I P C—1903 P R 38

Where an accused was convicted of a composite offence the Appellate Court may alter the conviction into one of the elements of the composite offence. Thus, where the accused was convicted of house breaking by night, under sec 457 I P C and the Appellate Court altered the conviction to one under sec 414 I P C, it was held that sec 457 I P C applied to a composite offence, and under sec 238 of this Code an accused may be convicted of any element of the composite offence, and that under this section it was competent to the Appellate Court to alter the finding—Ratanlal 293

Under this section, the Appellate Court can, in an appeal from a conviction, alter the finding of the Lower Court and find the appellant guilty of any offence of which he has been acquitted by that Court, notwithstanding the provisions of sec 403 of the Code—23 Cal 975, 34 All 115. Thus, where the Magistrate acquitted the accused under sec 148 I P C and convicted him under sec 325 I P C it was open to the Sessions Judge to alter the conviction under sec 325 into one under sec 148 I P C—34 Mad 545. Similarly, where in such a case the Lower Court has found only one of the accused guilty of murder and acquitted the others of murder but convicted them of other offences an appeal against the conviction of murder opens out the entire case and the Appellate Court may find all the three persons guilty of murder—Dulla v Emp, 16 A I J 918. Where in the trial Court the accused was charged with murder (sec 302 I P C) but was convicted of culpable homicide (sec 304) the appellate Court can convict the accused of murder—On Shwe v Emp, 1 Rang 436

If the Appellate Court finds that the sentence is illegal or inadequate, and does not think it expedient to order a new trial he may alter the conviction in order to legalise the sentence—3 L B R 112

In altering the finding of the Lower Court the Appellate Court is not bound by any preliminaries of complaint under sec 198. Thus, on an appeal from a conviction under sec 182 I P C the Appellate Court is competent to alter the conviction to one under sec 500 I P C notwithstanding that there was no complaint by the aggrieved party—25 All 534

The word 'finding' is not limited to a finding upon a point of law, as distinct from a finding upon a point of fact—3 P L J 565

1146. Alteration when improper:—(1) It is illegal for the Appellate Court to alter the finding so as to convict the accused of an entirely different character. Thus, under secs 237 and 238, it is illegal to alter a conviction into one under sec 366 I P C, because the charge involves different elements and different questions of fact from the former—Emp v Sakharani 8 Bom L R 120, G C Sircar v K. E., 3 Rang 68 4 Bur I J 29 26 Cr I J 1119 so also, it is illegal to alter a conviction under sec 379 I P C into one under sec 143 I P C.—27 Cal 660 So also it is improper to alter a conviction under secs 211 and 109 I P C into one under sec 193 I P C—3 C W N 367 or to alter a conviction under sec 468 I P C into a conviction under sec 471 I P C—Ikbar v Emp 8 N I J 87 26 Cr L J 1358 or to alter a conviction under sec 147 into one under secs 448 and 323 I P C—30 Cal 488 or to alter a conviction for wrongful confinement into one for assault—5 C W N 296 See Note 1145

(2) It would be improper and unfair to the accused for the Appellate Court to convict him of a more serious offence to which he had never pleaded at the trial, especially if the new offence was not cognate to the offence for which he was tried and convicted, and if there were circumstances of aggravation to which he had not pleaded guilty—26 Cal 863 3 I B R 232

(3) An Appellate Court is not competent to alter the finding of a Magistrate, so as to convict an accused person of an offence which the Lower Court is not competent to try—7 All 414

(4) When a person has been charged with a certain offence and has been convicted of that offence the Appellate Court cannot, on finding that the conviction is not sustainable, convict the accused of abetment of that offence—33 Mad 264 11 B H C R 240 See Note 771 under sec 238

Notice to appellant—If a Judge on appeal finds that the evidence recorded discloses a different offence, he may alter the finding of the Court below but in doing so, he ought to give intimation to the accused or to his pleader of what he proposes to do and thus give him an opportunity of showing cause against the new conviction—3 L B R 483 The powers conferred by this section on an Appellate Court are not intended to be used in such a way as to spring up a new case on the accused without giving him any notice of the charge he has to meet—16 Cr I J 599 (All)

Alternative conviction—The Appellate Court is not competent to alter a conviction for an offence into one for that offence or another offence in the alternative Thus it is improper to alter a conviction under sec 411 I P C into a conviction under either sec 349 or 411 I P C in the alternative, the accused not having been charged under sec 379 I P C in the Lower Court and having had no opportunity of meeting such a charge—Ratanlal 368

1147 Reduction of sentence:—Where the Lower Court passes only a single sentence on a conviction for two offences the Appellate Court, if it acquits the appellant of one of the offences ought not to maintain the sentence in its entirety but must make some reduction of sentence unless it thinks that the sentence ought not to be reduced, in which case it should refer the matter to the High Court for enhancement of the sentence—30 Mad 48, 2 Weir 4871 But no reduction of sentence by the Appellate Court is necessary, if the inference can be drawn that the trying

Magistrate did not intend to pass any sentence on the conviction which is set aside on appeal—7 M L T 81

Where a Magistrate in convicting a person of two offences passed a single sentence of imprisonment and fine, it was held that separate sentences ought to have been passed, and that the Appellate Court in reversing the conviction for one offence cannot regard the imprisonment as imposed for one offence and the fine for the other, and reduce the sentence by eliminating the fine—Ratanlal 409

1148 Clause (b) (3) —Enhancement of sentence:— So as not to enhance the same —No Appellate Court can enhance the sentence passed by the Lower Court—Ratanlal 618, 4 W R 20 The Code of 1872 gave power to Appellate Courts to enhance the sentence, but that power has been taken away by the Codes of 1882 and 1898, and is now vested only in the High Court in the exercise of its power of revision. See Sec 439 and 6 Al 622 And therefore if the Appellate Court finds the appellant to be guilty of a graver offence, the Court has no power to enhance the sentence and the proper course would be to let the conviction stand as it is or to have the case referred to the High Court—2 Weir 486

What amounts to enhancement of sentence —(1) Where an accused is convicted and sentenced by the Lower Court on two separate charges, and the Appellate Court reverses the conviction on one of the charges, the Appellate Court cannot return under the whole sentence but must reduce the sentence, the retention of the sentence has virtually the effect of an enhancement of sentence—22 Bom 760 Ratanlal 618 1887 P R 45, 24 Cal 316 1916 I R 31 30 M L 48 3 N L R 67 Thus, where a person was convicted by a Magistrate of rioting and theft and was sentenced for the first offence to four months and for the latter offence to two months rigorous imprisonment and the District Magistrate on appeal acquitted the accused of rioting but upheld the conviction for theft and the sentence of six months rigorous imprisonment it was held that the effect of the order was to enhance the sentence for theft which he had no authority to do under this section—24 Cal 316 But where only one offence has been committed, and the Magistrate erroneously splits it up into two offences and passes two sentences the Appellate Court can join the two offences into one offence and maintain the whole of the original sentence such maintaining of sentence does not amount to an enhancement of sentence (because no conviction has in fact been reversed)—3 N L R 67

(2) Where the accused was convicted of robbery and hurt and sentenced to six months imprisonment for robbery and one day's imprisonment for hurt, and the Sessions Judge on appeal aside the conviction for robbery, but confirmed the conviction for hurt and sentenced the accused to six months imprisonment, it was held that the Sessions Judge had no power to pass such sentence but the High Court could confirm such sentence if it would meet the ends of justice—24 Cal 317 (Note)

(3) Where an Appellate Court reduced a sentence of 4 months rigorous imprisonment into one of 3 months, but added a sentence of fine of default six weeks' rigorous imprisonment, such sentence amounted to an enhancement of the original sentence, and was in excess of the powers of the Appellate Court—17 All 67, Empress v Meda 1887 A W N 100 So also where the first Court passed a sentence of six months' imprisonment but the Appellate Court altered it to a sentence of four months imprisonment and a fine of Rs 100 or in default 2 months' imprisonment, held that the sentence of the Appellate Court amounted to an enhancement, because the accused even after he had undergone the two months imprisonment in default of payment of fine would still be liable to pay the fine—A E v Sakada 23 All 497, 3 A I R 90, so also where one week's imprisonment awarded by the first Court was altered by the Appellate Court into a fine of Rs 50 and in default one week's imprisonment, it was held that it amounted to an enhancement of sentence—1916 P W R 5 Where the Court of first instance sentenced the accused to rigorous imprisonment for 2 months and to a fine of Rs 50 or in default one month's rigorous imprisonment, and on appeal the Appellate Court changed the sentence to one of one month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 200 or in default 2 months' rigorous imprisonment held that the Appellate Court's sentence amounted to an enhancement of the sentence passed by the trial Court, for supposing the fine was not paid, the accused would still have to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment and still be liable to pay the fine—Bhola Singh v A E 3 Pat 638 (639) 5 P L T 622 25 Cr L J 1186 A I R 1924 Pat 563 (Contra—23 Bom 439) [But now see the proviso to section 386 which lays down that if the accused has undergone the full term of imprisonment awarded in default of payment of fine the fine will not be levied] If the aggregate sentence of imprisonment (i.e. the substantive sentence of imprisonment plus the imprisonment in default of fine) imposed by the Appellate Court is less than the period of the original sentence, the imposition of fine does not amount to an enhancement of sentence—30 Mid 103, 27 Cal 173, 36 All 485 1915 P R ~

(4) A sentence of fine is always considered lighter than a sentence of imprisonment—23 Bom 439 therefore the alteration of a sentence of fine into one of imprisonment is an enhancement of the sentence within the meaning of this clause, and the Appellate Court has no power to alter a sentence in this way—18 All 301, 18 Bom 751

(5) Where the Lower Court imposed fine and imprisonment, and the Appellate Court, in lieu of imprisonment, imposed an additional fine, thus increasing the amount of fine imposed by the Lower Court, it amounted to an enhancement of sentence—2 Weir 487

(6) The addition of imprisonment by the Appellate Court to a sentence of fine only imposed by the Lower Court is an enhancement of sentence The appellant was convicted of causing simple hurt and was sentenced to fine only, on appeal, the Appellate Court altered the conviction to one of causing grievous hurt (which is punishable with imprisonment and fine) under Sec 325 I P C and in order to make the sentence legal under that section, recorded a sentence of one day's rigorous imprisonment It was held that the Appellate Court had no power to so enhance—2 Weir 486

(7) The addition of a sentence of whipping by the Appellate Court, although the sentence of imprisonment is reduced, amounts to an enhancement of the sentence—2 Weir 487 But in 15 W R. 7 it has been held that the alteration of a sentence of whipping into one of imprisonment may amount to an enhancement of punishment In this case their Lordships expressed a doubt as to which sentence was the more severe "The Legislature has not supplied us with any data from which the comparative severity of the two sentences of whipping and rigorous imprisonment can be determined, and it is impossible to say how many lashes would be equivalent to a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for a specified period"—Mitter J The two sentences are of so dissimilar a nature that they do not admit of comparison, and it is advisable for the Appellate Courts not to substitute the one for the other

(8) Where in a criminal appeal, the terms of imprisonment are reduced but a punishment of solitary confinement is imposed, such an imposition of solitary confinement, though the imprisonment is lessened, is an enhancement of the sentence—1890 A W N 170

(9) The substitution of rigorous imprisonment in place of simple imprisonment amounts to an enhancement of sentence—Emperor v Muhammad Yakub Ali 45 All 594

(10) The Appellate Court, in altering a sentence, cannot award a sentence which the original Court could not have passed If it does so, it will amount to an enhancement of sentence See Note 113b ante

What does not amount to enhancement—(1) An additional order passed by the Appellate Court directing the accused to furnish security to keep the peace does not amount to an enhancement of sentence—1905 P R 21, 20 Cr L J 302 (All) 20 Cr L J 760 (Nag) Such power has been expressly conferred on a Court of Appeal by section 106 (3) and a Judge is competent in appeal to demand such security—Ibid

(2) An order passed by the Appellate Court directing the accused person to pay the cost of the complaint under sec 31 of the Court Fees Act (now 546A of this Code) does not amount to an enhancement of sentence, because the order of costs is not a penalty or sentence passed in the case but is an incidental order under clause (d) of this section—Emp v Karuppanna 29 Mad 188, Thimiah v King Emp, 47 Mad 914 (915) Although the fees ordered to be paid are to be recovered as if they were fines, still there is no warrant for treating the same as part of the fine imposed as punishment for the offences—In re Vemuri Seshanna, 26 Mad 421, Thimiah v A E, 47 Mad 914 (915)

If conviction is confirmed some sentence must be passed—If the Court of appeal affirms a conviction, it should, if it disapproves of the sentence passed by the Lower Court, pass some other sentence, even though a nominal one It cannot reverse the sentence absolutely while upholding the conviction Every conviction must be followed by sentence—Ratanlal 545

1149 Clause (d)—Amendment:—Under this clause the Court can make any amendment that may be just or proper Thus, where the accused was convicted under section 325 I P C, and on appeal the parties applied to compromise the case, the High Court acting under section 423 (d) amended the order of conviction by substituting for it an order that the offence should be compromised—32 All 151 Where the Sessions Judge had directed certain property to be handed over to the Magistrate as unclaimed property, the High Court amended the order by directing that the Magistrate should dispose of the property according to law—189 A W N 26 The Sessions Judge can amend the order of the Magistrate by directing a greater amount of property to be restored to the complainant than the amount restored by the Magistrate—3 A L J 770

Amendment means amendment of the main order of the Court below and the Appellate Court cannot make any amendment when there has not been an appeal against the main order of the lower Court Thus where the Magistrate in passing a judgment of acquittal has made some unfavourable remarks about the credibility of certain witnesses, the High Court cannot amend the judgment by directing those remarks to be expunged from the judgment when there has been no appeal to the High Court against the main order of acquittal—44 All 401 But this is no longer good law in view of sec 561A which empowers the High Court to expunge remarks from the lower Courts judgments, irrespective of the fact whether there has been an appeal against the main order or not See Note 1214 under sec 439 But the ruling in 44 All 401 would apply to lower Appellate Courts and those Courts would have no power to expunge remarks from the lower Courts judgment unless there be an appeal from the main order in the case.

1150 Incidental or consequential orders:—(1) An order under sec 104 demanding security from the appellant is an incidental order Sec 104 (3) gives the Appellate Court power to pass such order in appeal even where the original Court was not competent to do so

(2) An order under sec 106 passed by the Original Court may be set aside in appeal and the appellate order setting aside the order for security is an incidental order within the meaning of this section—Abdul Hakeem v Amir 30 Cal 101

(3) An order under sec 471 (1) directing the accused to be committed to a lunatic asylum, is clearly an order which the acquitting Court, whether original or appellate not only has the power to make, but is bound to make under sec 423 (d)—8 L B R 290

(4) An order under sec 517, 520 or 522 of the Code is a consequential or incidental order within the meaning of this clause and can be passed by the Appellate Court—29 Cal 724 46 Mnd 162 (164) Therefore an order in a case of criminal misappropriation, directing restoration of property which is found to have belonged to the complainant, is clearly a consequential or incidental order and one which is under the circumstances just and proper—3 A L J 770

An order of the Appellate Court setting aside an order passed by the Lower Court under sec 522, is an incidental order within the meaning of this clause—19 C W N 990 See also 29 Cal 724 Where the accused was convicted under secs 35- 111 448 I L C and the convicting Magistrate passed an order under sec 522 of this Code restoring possession of the property (which was the subject matter of the offence under sec 448 I P C) to the complainant, but the accused was afterwards acquitted on appeal, it was held that the Appellate Court had power, under section 423 (d) and sec 522 read together, to order restitution of the property to the accused—27 All 415

(5) Under this clause the Appellate Court can exercise the powers conferred by sec 562 of the Code—24 All 306 The Court before which he is convicted' in sec 562 is not limited to the Court of first instance, but includes the Court of appeal—29 Mad 567 This is now expressly provided by sub-section (2) of section 562

(6) An order by the Appellate Court directing the accused to pay the costs of the complainant under sec 31 of the Court Fees Act (now 310A of this Code) is no part of the penalty or sentence passed in the case and therefore not an enhancement of sentence, but is an incidental order under this clause—Emp v Karuppana 29 All 188 Thimiah v A P 47 All 914 (915) The contrary view taken in Q E v Tanavelu 22 Mad 151 decided under the Code of 1882 which did not contain clause (1) is no longer correct

(7) Where a case was tried by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates and the judgment was signed by one of them only the District Magistrate on appeal without in any way interfering with the order of the Bench of Magistrates sent back the case so that the judgment might be signed by the other Magistrates—41 All 217

Orders which cannot be passed—The only consequential incidental orders which fall within the purview of this clause are orders which follow as a matter of course being the necessary complement to the main order passed, without which the latter would be incomplete and ineffective (such as directions as to the refund of fines paid by acquitted appellants or on the reversal of acquittals any direction as to the restoration of compensation paid under sec 250) for which no separate authority is needed Therefore where the Magistrate in acquitting the accused has made certain remarks in his judgment about the credibility of a certain witness, the High Court cannot expunge those remarks from the record such expunction not being consequential or incidental to the main order viz the order of acquittal of the Court below, especially where there has not been an appeal against the order of acquittal of the lower Court—44 All 401 But see Note 1143 above and Note 1214 under sec 431 An Appellate Court can not award compensation under sec 250 because such order is not a necessary complement of the main order of acquittal only the Magistrate by whom the case is heard in the first instance can pass such order—28 All 625, 39 Cal 157 An order of confiscation under the Indian Forests Act VII of 1878 cannot be regarded as an order incidental on a conviction under that Act, under sec 34 of that Act, the confiscation is regarded as a punishment in addition to any other punishment prescribed for the offence Therefore an Appellate Court cannot pass such order—27 Cal 450 The High Court cannot award the costs incurred in a revision petition filed against an order passed under Ch XII—Varappa v Indramani 48 All 262 See this case cited in Note 478 under sec 148

1151 Sub-section (2):—Interference with verdict of jury—The High Court cannot alter or reverse the verdict of the jury unless it is of opinion that the verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge—32 Mad 179 Emp v Smither, 28 Mad 1, 10 Bom L R 565, 27 Bom 626. When the Court is of that opinion, it can reverse the verdict, but the power ought not to be exercised lightly, especially when the verdict is one of acquittal and unanimous—10 Bom L R 565. The High Court cannot, on an appeal from the unanimous verdict of the jury interfere with it, in the absence of a misdirection by the Judge, when there is some circumstantial evidence of the guilt—46 Cal 635.

'Erroneous'—To enable the Appellate Court to interfere with the verdict of the jury, the verdict must be erroneous. The effect of this clause is to prevent the High Court from reversing the verdict of the jury, on account of any misdirection by the Judge or misunderstanding of the law by the jury, unless such misdirection or misunderstanding is on points material to the verdict, so that the verdict may be said to be tainted with error in the process in which it has been arrived at—21 Cal 955. The word 'erroneous' is not to be read as meaning 'wrong on the facts'. It must be read in connection with the words that follow, as meaning that the verdict has been vitiated and rendered bad or defective by reason of misdirection or misunderstanding of the law—21 Cal 955, 27 Bom 626, Rational 452. It is the duty of the Appellate Court to ascertain whether the process or method which the Judge directed the jury to follow as to the acceptance or discarding of evidence or as to the view taken of the law, was erroneous on any material point but it is not the duty of the Appellate Court to determine for itself whether the verdict is a conclusion of fact was right or wrong. To hold the latter view would be tantamount to holding that an appeal would lie upon the facts from the verdict of a jury, in the face of the provisions of sec 418—21 Cal 955. Moreover the High Court will not be justified in setting aside the verdict of a jury even though it be erroneous unless the Court is satisfied that the prisoner is prejudiced by the error and that there has been a failure of justice—5 W R 80, 25 Cal 230, 25 Cal 561, 5 B H C R 85. When there is no error in matter of law, and there was some evidence to go to the jury, the High Court cannot interfere—5 W R 13, 14 Cal 164.

'Misdirection'—See notes under sec 297.

'Misunderstanding'—There must be misunderstanding by the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge, the verdict will not be set aside on the ground that the counsel for the accused (and not the jury) had misunderstood the expressions used by the Judge, specially when it appeared that the expression used by the Judge was perfectly intelligible and could not have the meaning suggested by the counsel for the accused—10 Cal 1079.

'Verdict must set aside in its entirety'—The term 'verdict' in this sub-section means a verdict on all the charges, and not merely the verdict upon each charge separately. Therefore if in a trial there are several charges in which there is an acquittal on some and a conviction on the other charges, and the verdict is found to be erroneous on appeal, the Appellate Court must set aside the verdict in its entirety. Where the Appellate Court in such a case reverses the verdict of the jury and orders a retrial, the retrial, unless the Appellate Court has limited the scope, must be taken to be one upon all the charges originally framed—22 Cal 377, 16 C W N 909, 1904 P R 12

1152 Power of High Court upon interference with verdict:—

The High Court, on setting aside a verdict of the jury on the ground of irregularity, has jurisdiction to order a retrial—Bani Madhab v Emp, 46 Cal 212. Once the verdict of the jury is set aside under this subsection, there is no restriction on the power of the Appellate Court to deal with the case, of which it has complete seizure, in any of the manners provided in this section. Its power is not restricted to directing a retrial, and it may also reverse the finding and sentence and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be retried, or alter the finding and maintain the sentence, or, without altering the finding, reduce the sentence—Taju Pramanik v Q E 25 Cal 711. After reversal of the verdict of the jury, in an appeal against an acquittal, the High Court may under clause (a) order a retrial or further inquiry or commitment or may find the accused guilty and pass sentence on him according to law—Emp v F H Smither, 26 Mad 1. It is open to the High Court to order a new trial of the accused by a new jury when it is found that the verdict of the jury is tainted with prejudice and is based on rumours as to the prisoner's previous conduct—2 Weir 384.

It is doubtful whether the High Court has power to decide the case itself. When a case has been tried before a jury, and the conviction has been set aside on the ground of misdirection, the accused is entitled to have his case retried before a jury and as a matter of procedure and in justice to the accused this course should be adopted—4 C W N 576. Where a verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge the Appellate Court has no option but to set aside the verdict and order a retrial. Were the Appellate Court to go into the facts in such a case, it would be substituting the decision of the Judges of that Court for the verdict of the jury, who have the opportunity of seeing the demeanour of the witnesses, and weighing the evidence with the assistance which this affords, whereas the Judges of the Appellate Court can only arrive at a decision on a perusal of the paper evidence—21 Cal 955, 22 Cal 377, 39 All 348.

Power to go into facts—From the above remarks it is evident that the High Court is not competent to go into the facts of the case, and the appeal must be limited, as laid down in section 418, to points of law—39 All 348. Even the High Court is not competent to go into the facts to ascertain whether the verdict of the jury is actually erroneous on the facts—25 Cal 230. It is not competent for the Appellate Court to look at the evidence with a view to see whether another jury might not have arrived at a different verdict—39 All 348. Contra—26 Mad 1, where it has been held that in order to determine whether the verdict is erroneous it is absolutely necessary for the High Court to go into the facts and to consider the evidence in the case before passing orders on it.

The powers of the High Court under section 307 are however, wider than the powers under this section. When a reference is made under sec 307, the power of the High Court is not restricted, as under this section only to cases where there has been an error of law in the proceeding below, but the High Court is authorised under that section to go into the facts—see 21 Cal 955, 9 All 420.

424 The rules contained in Chapter XXVI as to the judgment of subordinate appellate Courts shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to the judgment of any Appellate Court other than a High Court.

Provided that unless the Appellate Court otherwise directs, the accused shall not be brought up, or required to attend, to hear judgment delivered.

1153 Appellate Judgment.—When an appeal is dismissed summarily under sec 421, no judgment is required to be written. See Note 1132 under Sec 421.

But if the appeal is dismissed not summarily but under sec 423 after notice given under sec 422 the Court must deliver a judgment that would fulfil the conditions laid down in sec 367. Omission to write a judgment is not an irregularity cured by sec 537 (1) of the Code—17 Bom L R 1089.

Contents of judgment.—The judgment must fulfil the requirements of sec 367, that is it must contain the point or points for determination raised by the memorandum of appeal, the decision thereon and the reasons for that decision—17 Bom L R 1083, 37 Cal 91, 4 N I R 84. See Note 1031 under sec 367 under heading 'Appellate Judgment'.

If the appellate judgment is not in accordance with law, the High Court may remand the appeal for rehearing and delivery of a proper judgment—7 C W N 30, 37 Cal 104, 1912 P W R 43, 2 Bom L R 223.

425 (1) Whenever a case is decided on appeal by the High Court under this Chapter, it shall certify its judgment or order to the Court by which the finding, sentence or order appealed against was recorded or passed. If the finding, sentence or order was recorded or passed by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate, the certificate shall be sent through the District Magistrate.

(2) The Court to which the High Court certifies its judgment or order shall thereupon make such orders as are conformable to the judgment or order of the High Court; and, if necessary the record shall be amended in accordance therewith

426 (1) Pending any appeal by a convicted person, the Appellate Court may, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, order that the execution of the sentence or order appealed against be suspended, and, if he is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond

(2) The power conferred by this section on an Appellate Court may be exercised also by the High Court in the case of any appeal by a convicted person to a Court subordinate thereto

(3) When the appellant is ultimately sentenced to imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, the time during which he is so released shall be excluded in computing the term for which he is so sentenced

1154 Pending an appeal —A sentence cannot be suspended until an appeal has been actually preferred and is pending. Where a Magistrate postponed the execution of the sentence for a stated period, at the request of the accused, to allow him to appeal it was held that the suspension of the sentence was bad in law—12 W R 47. A sentence can not be suspended in the absence of an appeal—5 M H C R App 1

“ Appellate Court —The power conferred by this section to suspend the sentence can be exercised only by the Appellate Court—2 Weir 536. The sentence cannot be suspended by the Magistrate or Judge who passed it—12 W R 47. 4 M H C R App 1. So also, a Sessions Judge has no power to suspend the execution of a sentence passed by a second Class Magistrate, because the appeal from that Magistrate will not lie to the Sessions Judge—2 Weir 536

Sentence —An order of detention passed by a District Magistrate under sec 10 of the Reformatory Schools Act (VII of 1897) is not a sentence within the meaning of this section, nor is it a punishment enumerated in sec 53 of the Penal Code. A Sessions Judge has therefore no power to suspend its operation under this section—16 Cr I J 134 (Mad)

Release on bail —The Appellate Court can exercise the powers conferred by this Section and release the accused on bail, whether the offence is bailable or not—5 M H C R App 1

Exclusion of time —It is only when the convicted person has been released (and not where his sentence has been illegally suspended) that the term during which the sentence is suspended shall be excluded in computing the sentence—2 Weir 536

427 When an appeal is presented under Section 417,

Arrest of accused in the High Court may issue a warrant appeal from acquittal directing that the accused be arrested and brought before it or any subordinate Court, and the Court before which he is brought may commit him to prison pending the disposal of the appeal, or admit him to bail.

The warrant of arrest is not an order to the prejudice of the accused within the meaning of Sec 439 (2) and can therefore be issued without previous notice to him—8 I B R 290

428 (1) In dealing with any appeal under this Chapter,

Appellate Court may the Appellate Court, if it thinks additional evidence to be necessary, shall take further evidence or direct it to be taken record its reasons, and may either take such evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate, or when the Appellate Court is a High Court, by a Court of Session or a Magistrate

(2) When the additional evidence is taken by the Court of Session or the Magistrate it or he shall certify such evidence to the Appellate Court and such Court shall thereupon proceed to dispose of the appeal

(3) Unless the Appellate Court otherwise directs, the accused or his pleader shall be present when the additional evidence is taken but such evidence shall not be taken in the presence of jurors or assessors

(4) The taking of evidence under this section shall be subject to the provisions of Chapter XXX, as if it were an inquiry

Powers of Civil and Criminal Courts compared—A Civil Court has ordinarily no power to take evidence of its own motion it has to decide the case on the evidence induced by the parties. But a Criminal Court stands on a different footing. Section 540 enables the Magistrate at any stage of the inquiry or trial to examine any witness he may find necessary in order to come to a proper conclusion. Section 428 also in general terms empowers the Appellate Court to take additional evidence—8 M I T 418

1155 Object and scope of section—The object of this section is the prevention of a guilty man's escape through some careless or ignorant proceedings of a Magistrate, or the vindication of an innocent person wrongfully accused where the Magistrate through the same carelessness or ignorance has omitted to record the circumstances essential to the elucidation of truth—18 W R 31, Ikhtar v A F 6 P I T 431 26 Cr I J 1171 A I R 1925 Pat 526

The power under this section can be exercised only by the Appellate Court. A Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate not acting as an Appellate Court is not authorised to take additional evidence or order it to be taken—6 C I J 231. But the High Court acting as a Court of revision, under Sec. 439 has the power of an Appellate Court to direct evidence to be taken—Ibid.

A proceeding under section 125 is neither appellate nor revisional consequently this section has no application to an order under section 125. Therefore, when a District Magistrate finds that an order directing the furnishing of security is irregular, he should set it aside, he has no jurisdiction to remand the case in the Magistrate for further evidence—20 Cr L J 221 (Pat).

Enquiry by Police.—This section does not warrant an Appellate Court setting a case to the Police for investigation if it had been originally started by a complaint in Court—1900 A W N 130.

1156 When additional evidence should be taken, and when not:—Additional evidence may be taken under this section only if the Appellate Court thinks it to be necessary and the necessity for taking such evidence must be apparent from something on the record and cannot be derived from external information—3 I B R 114. The mere fact that some fresh evidence has been discovered after the filing of the appeal does not empower the Appellate Court to allow the fresh evidence to be adduced unless the Court thinks it necessary—Gurnamurthi v Read 9 M I T 323. When the Original Court has taken all the evidence produced by the prosecution which had ample opportunities to do so and that evidence has failed to sustain the charge an Appellate Court will not except in every exceptional circumstances direct that additional evidence should be taken—5 All 217. This section does not empower an Appellate Court to take additional evidence in a case where there is no evidence legally capable of sustaining the charge. But where the conviction by the lower Court has been based upon some prima facie evidence which might legally sustain the charge, but which in the opinion of the Appellate Court is not quite satisfactory the Appellate Court may under this section direct additional evidence to be taken—18 W R 31. Where the Lower Court has refused to examine certain witnesses for the defence and the accused has been prejudiced in his defence by such refusal, the Appellate Court may direct the Lower Court to take the evidence of such witnesses and to certify the same to it—1 Mad 375. 3 P I J 632. Similarly where the prosecution had preferred to adduce evidence and the Magistrate had prevented them from doing so the Appellate Court could call for fresh evidence under this section—Jiremath v Las 36 Mad 45. 22 M L J 73. 12 Cr I J 585. Where the Appellate Court thinks that the evidence of some more witnesses who were not examined, in the lower Court is necessary it cannot order a retrial on that ground but should proceed under this section by summoning and examining those witnesses—16 A I J 325. 31 Cal 710. See also 1 P I J 99.

The Appellate Court will take additional evidence to supply a defect in formal proof (e.g. proof as to whether the sanction for the prosecution was granted by the proper authority), when the conviction for a serious charge is sedition which is otherwise sustainable, is likely to be upset for want of such proof—Lakshirajulu Varlu v King Emp 42 Mad 585.

Recording reasons—Before taking additional evidence the Court must record its reason for so doing—42 Mad 885, 8 M 1 T 418. But omission to do so is a mere irregularity curable by sec 531—9 M 1 T 406.

Revision of order allowing additional evidence—The powers of an Appellate Court to take additional evidence should not be unduly restricted. The scope of sec 428 is prima facie not limited by any consideration save that the Appellate Court should be of opinion that additional evidence is necessary and should record its reasons. In India the onus is placed upon the Court not merely to listen to the evidence but to inquire to the utmost into the truth of the matter and so to secure justice. Accordingly if any restriction is to be placed upon the power conferred on the Appellate Court by sec 428 it certainly cannot be that negligence or inadvertence on the part of the prosecution is to be allowed to effect a miscarriage of justice. On the contrary the enactment is directed to the attainment of justice even at a late stage of the proceedings by the introduction of further materials which the Court considers to be essential to a just decision of the case. Consequently the Court of Revision will not always interfere with the order of the Appellate Court allowing additional evidence, even where the Court of Revision might itself, in the exercise of its discretion as an Appellate Court have declined to admit such evidence. To justify interference in revision the Court must be satisfied that the Appellate Court committed an error of law which has prejudiced the accused on the merits—Akhatar v Emp (P) T 431 26 Cr I J 1171 A I R 1925 Pat 326.

1157 Procedure—This section empowers an Appellate Court to merely call for additional evidence and not to call upon the Lower Court to give its finding upon such evidence. Where the Appellate Court calls for such finding of the Lower Court the order of the Appellate Court will be set aside—9 M 1 T 406 1914 M W N 778. When the subordinate Court is directed to take additional evidence, it shall merely certify the evidence to the Appellate Court and is not entitled to give any finding on such evidence, such duty being left to the Appellate Court—3 B I R A C 62, and if the Magistrate gives any finding on such evidence, the Appellate Court cannot accept such finding but must form its own conclusion upon the evidence so taken—14 Cr I J 797 (Mad) 1914 M W N 778.

The accused persons were convicted by the trial Court without any examination under sec 342 and the Appellate Court directed as follows:

'The lower Court will examine the accused under sec 342 and call upon them to adduce any defence evidence. If they choose to give any and if examination of the defence witnesses be well submitted the record to this Court. The appeal will then be heard by me on the merits.' It is that the Appellate Judge's procedure was erroneous. He appears to have followed the provision of the Civil P Code rather than of the Crim P Code. He should have set aside the convictions and sentences and remanded the case to the first Court for that Court to deal with the case on the merits. If in compliance with sec 342, as if it were before that Court again for the first time—Uthman Samad v R 40 C I J 319 26 Cr I J 313 A I R 1925 Cal 172.

This section does not provide that the accused should be re-examined under sec 342 after the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution is taken on remand. The examination of the witnesses after remand may be made even in the absence of the accused and the provisions of sec 342 do not apply to sec 428—Mohiuddin v Emp 4 P L J 288; 1 P L J 154; 26 Cr L J 811; A L R 1925 P L J 414.

1158 Power of Appellate Court after taking additional evidence:—The Appellate Court cannot consider and determine a new case disclosed by the additional evidence except in so far as to affirm or modify or set aside the sentence under appeal or to act as otherwise provided by sec 423 (b). An Appellate Court cannot under this section pass a fresh sentence, which may be subject to further appeal. Under the 1898 Code the Appellate Court is directed to dispose of the appeal finally and not to pass a new judgment sentence etc. (is under the old Code of 1861) which may be further appealed against—27 Cal 372 (overruling 2 W R 13).

The Appellate Court can rehear the appeal after obtaining the additional evidence. Both under the Criminal Procedure Code and under sec 107 of the Government of India Act of 1925 the High Court has full jurisdiction and power in criminal revision to direct the Lower Appellate Court to rehear on appeal after obtaining additional evidence certified by the trial Court—Mahomed v A P 3 P L J 632.

1159 No further appeal:—An appellant whose appeal is dismissed by an Appellate Court, after it has taken additional evidence under this section, has no further right of appeal. According to sec 420 except in certain cases, judgments and orders passed by an Appellate Court upon appeal are final—27 Cal 372; 8 W R 51; 15 W R 33. If additional evidence is taken, it does not entitle a party to appeal from a finding upon such evidence to the High Court upon the merits, treating it in substance as an original judgment—6 B H C R 14.

1160 Sub section (3)—In only one instance is a Court of Session authorised to record evidence in the absence of the jury or the assessors and that is when additional evidence is called for by the Appellate Court. But in no other cases can the presence of the jurors be dispensed with and therefore, where in a trial for murder the Sessions Judge, relying on a statement made by the deceased, convicted the accused and the necessary evidence to prove that statement was not recorded by the Judge until after the assessors had been discharged, it was held that the error vitiated the trial and it was not covered by the provisions of sec 537—15 All 136.

429 When the Judges composing the Court of Appeal
 Procedure where Judges are equally divided in opinion, the case of Court of Appeal are with their opinions thereon, shall be equally divided. laid before another Judge of the same Court, and such Judge, after such hearing (if any) as he thinks fit, shall deliver his opinion, and the judgment or order shall follow such opinion.

1161 Scope of section:—This section applies not only to appeals but to revision proceedings as well. Therefore, if two learned Judges differ in a Criminal Revision case, section 439 read with sec 429 requires the case to be decided by a third Judge—40 Mad 276, 27 Cal 892 (at p 910) 27 Cal 501 (at p 505). See sec 439 (1).

The principle of this section applies also to a reference under sec 37. In case of difference between the Judges on a reference under sec 37 the rule of this section is to be followed—15 Bom 452.

A third Judge to whom a case has been referred under sec 429 does not constitute a Division Bench, and therefore he cannot make a reference to a Full Bench—Islim v Hinday 29 C W N 475 41 C L J 35-26 (Cr L J 915).

Case:—Where upon a difference of opinion between two Judges the case is laid before a third Judge, the whole case is referred to the third Judge and not merely the point or points on which the Judges differed and it is the duty of the Judge to whom the case is referred, to consider all the points involved before he delivers his opinion, and it will be recorded in the opinion of such Judge that the judgment will follow—38 Cal 204. But in a later case of the same High Court it has been held that the third Judge cannot differ from the referring Judges on a point on which both the referring Judges agreed unless there are strong grounds for doing so—22 C W N 445. In other words it lays down that the third Judge can consider only the points on which the referring Judges have disagreed, and not all the points. To remove this conflict of opinion it was proposed by the Select Committee of 1916 to add the following proviso to this section: 'Provided that if either of the Judges composing the Court of appeal so require the appeal shall be reheard before them and another Judge or if the Chief Justice so directs, before three other Judges, and the judgment or order shall follow the opinion of the majority of the Judges so rehearing the case.' But the Joint Committee of 1922 deleted this proviso as it was disapproved of by many Judges and also because the difficulty which the amendment intended to meet was of rare occurrence. A similar proviso was intended to be added to section 378 and it was omitted by the Joint Committee for the same reason. See clauses 98 and 113 of the Report of the Joint Committee of 1922.

But there can be no question that where there are two accused, and the Judges are agreed in opinion with regard to one of them but are divided in opinion as regards the other the case which is laid before the third Judge is only the case of the prisoner with regard to whom the Judges are divided in opinion—38 Cal 202.

430 Judgments and orders passed by an Appellate Court upon appeal shall be final

Finality of orders on appeal except in the cases provided for in

Section 417 and Chapter XXXII

See 27 Cal 372 and 6 B H C R 64 cited in Note 1153 under sec 48

1162 A sentence is said to be final when it cannot be set aside or interfered with by any Court or authority, whether on appeal or otherwise—12 Cal 536

Where the Sessions Judge rejected a criminal appeal on the ground that it was barred by limitation, the rejection was final and the Sessions Judge was not competent, on a later representation by the prisoner, to admit the appeal again—19 Bom 732 1887 P R 24 An order of summary rejection of an appeal is final, it is immaterial whether the order is passed before or after the papers are called for—4 Bom 101 An order passed by a Sessions Judge declining to interfere with a sanction granted by the Lower Court is final and is not open to review or revision except in the manner laid down in Chapter XXXII—23 Bom 50 But an order rejecting an appeal summarily for non appearance of the appellant is an improper order and it is open to the Court to rehear the appeal and deal with it—7 M H C R App 29, 46 Mal 382 (403) 5 N I R 76

431 Every appeal under Section 417 shall finally abate on the death of the accused, and every other appeal under this Chapter (except an appeal from a sentence of fine) shall finally abate on the death of the appellant

1163 The Code has made no provision for the continuance of the appeal by the heir or devisee or executor of the deceased convict or by any other person The appeal abates on the appellant's death—2 Bom 564, 19 Bom 714 But an exception is made as regards an appeal from a sentence of fine An appeal against a sentence of fine should not abate by reason of the death of the accused, because it is not a matter which affects his person, but one which affects his estate—Select Committee's Report (1898) See also 1919 P R 8

The principle of this section applies also to revisions, and therefore where a fine inflicted upon an accused was a heavy one and its recovery from the estate would entail hardship on the widow, it was held that the application for revision filed by the accused did not abate on his death as regards the sentence of fine and the High Court in revision remitted the fine—Daulat Ram v Crown 1919 P R 8

Compensation awarded under Section 250 is recoverable as if it were a fine, therefore an application for revision against an order of compensation does not abate on the death of the applicant, but can be prosecuted by his legal representatives—1908 P R 24

CHAPTER XXXII

OF REFERENCE AND REVISION

432 A Presidency Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, refer for the opinion of the High Court any question of law which arises in the hearing of any case pending before him, or may give judgment in any such case subject to the decision of the High Court on such reference and, pending such decision, may either commit the accused to jail, or release him on bail to appear for judgment when called upon.

1164 This section empowers only a Presidency Magistrate to refer a question of law. No other Magistrate has power to make a reference. A District Magistrate cannot refer. He can only bring a case before the High Court by way of revision—1 S L R 4. A Sessions Judge has no power to refer a case to the High Court on a point arising in an appeal pending before him—13 A I J 477.

Under this section there can be a reference to the High Court only on a question of law and not on a question of fact—Ratanlal 838, Ratanlal 539. And the High Court, upon a reference under this section, can deal only with the particular points of law referred to it, it cannot deal with the facts of the case, nor any other objection against the proceeding of the Court of the Presidency Magistrate—33 Cal 113.

The Magistrate can refer a question which has arisen in the hearing of the case. He cannot make a reference on a question of law where the accused has been merely placed before him and the hearing of the case has not begun—1 Bom L R 521.

433 (1) When a question has been so referred, the High Court shall pass such order thereon as it thinks fit, and shall cause a copy of such order to be sent to the Magistrate by whom the reference was made, who shall dispose of the case conformably to the said order.

(2) The High Court may direct by whom the costs of such reference shall be paid.

1165 In a reference by a Presidency Magistrate to the High Court as to whether on the facts stated any offence has been committed by an accused person, the prosecution has to make out that the accused has committed the offence, and therefore the counsel for the prosecution has the right to begin—19 Cal 380.

The order passed by the High Court on a reference under section 432, is conclusive both as to the merits of the case and as to the quantum of punishment—1890 A W N 225.

The High Court sitting in appeal cannot review an order passed by it under this section—Ratanlal 638.

434 (1) When any person has, in a trial before a Judge of a High Court consisting of more Judges than one and acting in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, been convicted of an offence,

Power to reserve questions arising in original jurisdiction of High Court the Judge, if he thinks fit may reserve and refer for the decision of a Court consisting of two or more Judges of such Court any question of law which has arisen in the course of the trial of such person, and the determination of which would affect the event of the trial.

(2) If the Judge reserves any such question the person convicted shall, pending the decision thereon, be remanded to jail, or, if the Judge thinks fit, be admitted to bail, and the High Court shall have power to review the case or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine such question and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the Court of original jurisdiction, and to pass judgment or order as the High Court thinks fit.

1166 Reference discretionary—The words 'may reserve and refer' show that it is in the discretion of the single Judge whether or not he will reserve a point of law for the opinion of the High Court consisting of two or more Judges—in B II C R 75 and thus discretion of the single Judge is not reviewable under clause 26 of the Letters Patent—Ibid.

When reference can be made—A reference can be made when the point of law has arisen in the course of the trial where a point is raised before the accused is called upon to plead it cannot be referred to the Full Bench, because the point cannot be said to have arisen in the course of the trial—28 Cal 211.

Right to begin—Where on the application of the prisoner's counsel, a question of law has been reserved for the decision of the Court under this section the counsel for the prisoner has the right to begin—8 Bom 200.

1167 Sub-section (2)—High Court's power to review the case—The High Court in considering a point of law reserved under this section can review the whole case if it is of opinion that any evidence has been improperly admitted or rejected and can affirm or quash the conviction—1 Cal 207, 3 B II C R 358 17 Cal 642 4 C W N 433 2 Bom 61, 32 Bom 111.

This is the only section which enables the Division or Full Bench of the High Court to review the judgment of a single Judge exercising original criminal jurisdiction. The powers of a single Judge in a matter with which he has jurisdiction to deal are the powers of the Court and cannot be in any way controlled (except as under this section) by a Division or Full Bench of the Court. As no appeal lies, no revision lies—1909 P R 1. In the absence of any reservation of a question of law by the trying Judge, the High Court is precluded from re-opening a question which has been decided by the single Judge presiding at the trial—32 Bom 111.

The High Court can review the judgment or order of a Judge passed in the exercise of his original jurisdiction. A Division Bench of the High Court has no power to alter or review the order of a High Court pro-mounted in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction—7 All 672, 10 Bom 176, 5 W R 61, 23 Bom 50, 19 Bom L R 695

The Code does not include any provision for reviewing the judgment of subordinate Courts. The High Court can only revise such judgment under the ample powers conferred by section 437—19 Bom 732

435 (1) The High Court or any Sessions Judge or

District Magistrate or any Sub-divisional Magistrate empowered by the Local Government in this behalf may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its or his jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying itself or himself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court, and may, when calling for such record direct that the execution of any sentence be suspended and, if the accused is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond pending the examination of the record

Explanation—All Magistrates whether exercising original or appellate jurisdiction shall be deemed to be inferior to the Sessions Judge for the purposes of this sub-section and of s. 437

(2) If any Sub-divisional Magistrate acting under Sub-Section (1) considers that any such finding, sentence or order is illegal or improper, or that any such proceedings are irregular, he shall forward the record, with such remarks thereon as he thinks fit, to the District Magistrate

(3) Omitted

(4) If an application under this section has been made either to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, no further application shall be entertained by the other of them

Change:—The italicised words at the end of sub-section (1) and the Explanation have been added and sub-section (3) has been omitted by s. 116 of the Crim. Pro. Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. Sub-section (3) stood as follows:—

“(3) Orders made under sections 143 and 144 and proceedings under Chapter XII and section 176 are not proceedings within the meaning of this section

By reason of the omission of this sub-section the above orders and proceedings are now subject to revision under this Code. See notes under sss. 143, 144, 145-148, and 176

In moving for this amendment, i.e., the omission of subsection (3), Dr Gour observed :—The intention of this amendment is to preserve to the High Courts revisional jurisdiction in cases disposed of under sections 144, 145, etc. Honourable Members are aware that not only the Chartered High Courts but all the non-chartered High Courts such as the Chief Courts and the Courts of the Judicial Commissioners do, under various local Acts possess a statutory power of revision in such cases.

Now, sir, I ask the House a simple question. If it is a fact that all the Courts, chartered and non-chartered possess this power, then I say clause (3) of section 435 is superfluous—may mislead. If it is a fact that they do not possess that power in that case I ask the House to endorse my opinion that this power is both salutary and necessary. It will not be denied that this power has in fact been exercised under section 107 of the Government of India Act and other Local Acts. If so this clause conflicts with the express provisions of section 107 of the Government of India Act. It creates utter confusion. If the High Courts have power under section 107 of the Government of India Act to exercise the general power of superintendence over the subordinate Courts, what object is served by inserting this clause that orders under sections 143, 144 and 145 shall not be open to revision under section 435. I have therefore confidence that this House will vote for my amendment and place the powers of all the High Courts beyond any shadow of doubt. And I hope that the Government out of sheer consistency will accept my amendment.—Legislative Assembly Debates 8th February 192, pages 206—207.

1168 To whom application should be made.—The revisional jurisdiction of the District Magistrate and Sessions Judge is concurrent with that of the High Court. But although the three tribunals have concurrent powers the aggrieved party should in the first instance seek his remedy before the lower tribunal and not in the High Court direct. In the matter of applications in criminal revision to the High Court, it is a recognised rule of practice that a previous application to the Lower Court (District Magistrate or Sessions Judge) should be considered an essential step in the procedure irrespective of whether such lower Court has or has not power to grant the relief claimed, and that failure on the part of the applicant to submit his application to the Lower Court will operate as a bar to the application being entertained by the High Court.—43 All 437, 14 Cal 88, 36 Cal 643, 48 Cal 534, 50 Cal 423, Ratanlal 491, 14 Bom 331, C. P. D. L. 47, 1887 A. W. N. 105, 1890 A. W. N. 164, 41 All 367, 28 All 268, 30 All 116, 3 P. L. J. 302 (1923) M. W. N. 837, 18 I. W. 236. Sat Narain v. Emp. 25 O. C. 37. A person invoking the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court is bound according to the rules of that Court to apply first to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate. If the latter considers that a case for revision is made out he reports the matter to the High Court under section 438 with a view to the High Court exercising its revisional powers under sec. 439. If the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate considers that the application should not be entertained he rejects it, leaving the aggrieved party to apply to the High Court direct.—Ibdu Wahid v. Abdullah, 45 All 650 (661, 662). Thus, where the District

Magistrate dismisses a complaint under the provisions of sec 203, the High Court will not entertain an application by the complainant asking for further inquiry under s 436, when no application for that object has been made to the Sessions Judge—28 All 268 But when an application to the High Court for revision has already been heard and the rule granted the High Court will not afterwards discharge the Rule on the ground that the petitioner ought to have moved the Sessions Court in the first instance but will proceed to dispose of the Rule on the merits—Hidal Matlob v Nanda Lal 30 Cal 432 So also, the High Court will not allow a point to be raised for the first time before it, when such point was not taken by the petitioner in his revision application presented to the Sessions Judge. The object of requiring an application for revision to be presented first to the Lower Appellate Court is that the High Court in dealing with the matter may have before it the reasoned opinions of two Courts on the points at issue and this object will be largely defeated if applicants are allowed to take in the High Court points which they did not press in their application in revision in the Court below—Emp v Hurul Mal 45 All 526 (528)

1169 Call for record—The powers of a Sessions Judge to call for and examine the records under this section are powers which can be exercised at all times—Weir 538 Records may be called for even after the prisoner has served out his sentence—7 All 135 Even after the death of the prisoner pending an appeal before the Lower Appellate Court the High Court has the right to call for the records and make such order thereon as it may deem to be due to justice—2 Bom 564 When records are called for under this section the inferior Courts must forward the original records and not merely copies thereof—Raunlal 128

The Courts enumerated in this section have power to call for the records of subordinate Courts for the purpose of satisfying themselves as to the correctness, legality or propriety of the orders passed by the lower Courts. The object of the Legislature in this section is to set right some patent defect or error. In the absence of some well founded suspicion it is inexpedient for the High Court to scrutinize orders of discharge or other orders passed by the lower Courts which upon the face of them bear token of careful consideration and appear good and lawful. This section does not give the High Court a roving commission either in the direction of stamping with approval the proceedings of a Lower Court or in the direction of questioning about and looking to see if possibly under a fair record there lies some trace of possible error—Emp v Dukes 1809 A W N 135

"Any Proceedings"—Under the Code of 1872 the words were 'judicial proceedings' and the High Court could call for and examine the records of a judicial proceeding only but now the High Court can call for and examine the record of any proceeding e.g. an order by a Magistrate under section 517—2 Weir 538

It is competent to the High Court to call for the record of any proceeding of an inferior Criminal Court and revise the same whether it is of a preliminary or final nature—1891 A W N 102 Hence, where the District Magistrate passed a preliminary order calling upon a witness who gave evidence before him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for perjury, the High Court was competent to revise the order—14 A L J 85.

1170. Power of revision after prior refusal.—An accused person has no right to come in revision more than once. Where his first application for revision has failed the Court has a discretionary power not to entertain a second application at all based on the same point as the first—Furp v Kohna Puri 45 All 11 (12). In 5 Bur I T 3rd it has also been held that when a Magistrate has already dealt with a case in revision and decided that there was no cause for interference he cannot subsequently direct further inquiry, because such an order would be one reviewing the prior order and is prohibited by sec 369. The Madras High Court also holds that once a criminal revision case has been dismissed by the High Court for default of payment of printing charges, it is a final disposal and it is not competent to the High Court to rehear the case or entertain a fresh application for revision because there can be no review of the prior order of dismissal—44 M I J 27. So also if a revision petition is dismissed for default of appearance of the pleader who filed it the High Court is not competent to restore to its file such a petition—In re Ranga Rao 23 M I J 371. But the Calcutta High Court holds that there being no provision in the Code for dismissing a revision petition for default of appearance the order of dismissal is no 'judgment' at all within the meaning of sec 369 and the High Court is not debarred from rehearing the revision petition—46 Cal 60.

The Allahabad High Court has laid down in a recent case that if a matter has once come before the High Court in revision not on the application of the accused but on the motion of the Sessions Judge who has referred the matter to the High Court and the High Court looks into the matter and comes to the conclusion that there is no ground for revision the accused is not thereby deprived of his right to apply to the High Court in revision—Furp v Kohna Ram 45 All 11 (12). The Burma Chief Court likewise holds that where a Sessions Judge of his own motion called for proceedings in which a Magistrate had discharged certain accused persons but finding on record no cause of interference returned the proceedings to the Magistrate without taking further action and where subsequently the complainant applied to him to have the case reopened and the Sessions Judge holding himself to be barred from taking further action returned the application to be presented to the Chief Court it was held that the mere fact that he Judge had declined to interfere suo motu on a prior occasion did not preclude him from hearing the complainant and if the arguments led him to do so from altering his view—Tun Mying v Kaul San 81 B R 377.

1171. Inferior Criminal Court.—Inferior.—The term 'inferior' must be constructed to mean judicially inferior, i.e. a Court over which the Court proceeding under sec 435 has appellate jurisdiction—10 Cal 268. 'Inferior' means one who is statutorily incompetent to hold or exercise equal powers. It carries with it the idea of subordination.

which means 'inferiority in rank'—9 Bom 100. The term 'inferior' in this section includes the term 'subordinate' as used in section 436. The reason for the employment of the term 'inferior' in Sections 435 and 437 is that in both these sections the Court of Session and the District Magistrate are combined and the Magistrates other than the District Magistrate though subordinate to him are not directly subordinate to the Court of Session. It was therefore necessary to employ a term applicable to the relation of the Magistracy both to the supervising authority and to the appellate tribunal—8 Mad 18.

The District Magistrate is competent under this section to call for and deal with the record of any proceeding before any Magistrate of whatever class in his own district—12 Cal 473. A first class Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate for the purposes of this section—1894 P R 10, ~ All 853. The District Magistrate can call for and examine the record of any first class Magistrate within the district even though the latter has been appointed as an Additional District Magistrate—1908 P R 25. Contra—12 Bur L J 46, where it has been held that a District Magistrate cannot call for the record of any proceeding before an Additional District Magistrate. But now see the new sub-section (3) of section 10 under which the Additional District Magistrate is deemed to be inferior to the District Magistrate.

A District Magistrate is not competent to refer the proceedings of a superior Court (Sessions Court) to the High Court—41 Bom 47, 46 All 851 (855), 28 All 91, 36 All 378, 10 All 146, 9 All 362, 18 Cal 180, 6 C L R 345, 23 Cal 250, 2 N I R 149. If, therefore, the District Magistrate considers that there has been a miscarriage of justice in the Sessions Court, he should ask the Public Prosecutor to move the High Court—9 All 362, 12 All 434, 1 S I R 40, 1912 M W N 812, 2 N I R 149, 6 Bom 1 R 1099, 8 M L J 88. See Note 1198 under sec 438.

As a Court of revision the District Magistrate is not inferior to the Sessions Judge. But where he passes an order as a Court of original jurisdiction, he is inferior to the Sessions Judge—Emperor v. Balwant 24 Cr L J 616 (Oudh), 13 O C 108, 12 Cal 473, 1889 A W N 100. This is now made clear by the Explanation newly added. Even a District Magistrate empowered under sec 30 is also inferior to the Sessions Judge—fallon v. Crook 1904 P R 13. The Explanation further makes it clear that "for the purposes of this section a Magistrate exercising appellate jurisdiction is inferior to the Court of Session. The point was previously open to doubt"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). The District Magistrate sitting as a Court of appeal is an inferior Criminal Court to the Sessions Judge and the latter can refer an appellate judgment of the former to the High Court—3 Lah 23, Dardari v. Emp., 23 A I J 894, 26 Cr L J 1282.

The Court of a Presidency Magistrate is an inferior Criminal Court in respect of the High Court, and the High Court can call for the proceeding of such Court—Malik Pratap v. Khan Mahomed 36 Cal 994 (997), Charoobala v. Barendra 27 Cal 126 (129). A Municipal Magistrate appointed to deal with offences against the Calcutta Municipal Act is an inferior Court in respect of the High Court—Ram Gopil v Corporation of Calcutta, 52 Cal 962 29 C W N 898 26 Cr 1 J 1533

A single Judge of the High Court is not inferior to the Division or Full Bench of the High Court for the purposes of this Section—1909 P R 4, 1909 P R 8 but he may be so only for the purposes of Sec 434 See notes under Sec 434

'Criminal Court'—The High Court, etc., cannot, under the provisions of this section, revise an order passed by any Court other than a Criminal Court. A Magistrate hearing an appeal under Sec 86 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act is not a Criminal Court within the meaning of this Section—9 Bom L R 1147. A Court acting under section 3 of the F B & Assam Disorderly Houses Act is a Criminal Court within the meaning of this section, and the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere under secs 435 and 439—Rajani Akhmtawali v Primatha 37 Cal 287. The Secretary to the Government of Bengal issuing a warrant under the Goondas Act (Beng Act I of 1923) is such Secretary is not an officer or Court possessing criminal jurisdiction, and is not an inferior Criminal Court within the meaning of sec 435 of this Code, although under sec 4 (2) of the Goondas Act he is given all the powers of a Presidency Magistrate therefore the High Court cannot interfere, under sec 439, in the matter of the warrant issued by him—Bhimraj Benia v Emperor 51 Cal 460 (467 468) 26 Cr 1 J 10 A I R 1924 Cal 698. The term inferior Criminal Court in this section does not include a Civil Court exercising its powers under sec 476 infra—16 A L R 23

1172 Orders which are not open to revision—The proceedings which are open to revision are the proceedings of a Court. Therefore executive orders are not liable to revision under this section.

The following orders being executive (and not judicial) orders are not open to revision—

(1) A Magistrate's order directing the observance of Municipal By-laws which prohibit the slaughter of votive animals in private houses—1885 A W N 258

(2) An order under Sec 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act—1909 P R 11

(3) An order passed by a District Magistrate forbidding certain petition writers to practise within the precincts of his Court—1907 A W N 175

(4) An order of a Collector fixing a Mulhtar in a fulana proceeding for making certain false statements—10 C I R 14

(5) An order by a District Magistrate under Sec 3 of the Sind Frontier Regulation—5 S I R 54

(6) An order passed by a Magistrate under Sec 41 43 or 44 of the Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890)—15 S I R 126, Ritanlal 1622 Ritanlal 540, 12 Bom L R 1039

(7) A general order by a District Magistrate prohibiting unregistered pleaders from practising in the Criminal Courts in his district—L J 566

(8) A Magistrate's order under Sec 17 of Act V of 1861 appointing certain persons as special constables—20 O C 229

(9) An order by a District Magistrate for execution of a warrant issued by a Political Agent under Sec 7 of the Extradition Act—42 Cal 793

1173. Orders which are open to revision:—The following orders being judicial orders, are open to revision—

(1) An order by a Magistrate under Sec 94 of this Code, refusing to order the production of certain documents—19 Cal 52

(2) An order passed by a Magistrate under Sec 419 of the Calcutta Municipal Act—31 Cal 287, 34 Cal 341

(3) An order passed by a Magistrate under Secs 514 and 515 of this Code—1905 P R 15

(4) An order under Sec 517 of this Code—2 Weir 538

(5) An order by a Magistrate under Sec 113 of the Railways Act (IX of 1890)—1891 P R 13

(6) An order by a Magistrate under F B and Assam Disorderly Houses Act—37 Cal 287

(7) An order purporting to have been made under Sec 283 of the Cantonment Code (1899)—1909 P R 9

(8) An order passed by a Magistrate under Sec 161 (2) of the Bombay District Municipalities Act (III of 1901)—43 Bom 864

(9) An order passed by a Magistrate under Sec 2 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act directing either the return of the advance or specific performance of the contract—43 Bom 607

(10) An order passed by a Magistrate under the Upper Burma Ruby Regulation 1897 is open to appeal or revision under the Cr Pro Code, although under the Regulation no specific provision appears to have been made for appeal or revision—Haung Po Loon v A F, 2 Rang 123 (123)

When an order is passed by a judicial officer in a matter coming within the purview of law and justice and within the scope of the authority of the Courts, the mere fact that the officer passing the order states that he is acting not as a judicial officer but in his executive capacity does not oust the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court—1908 P R 4

Powers of High Court in revision:—See notes under sec 439

1174 Powers of other Courts in revision:—A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate cannot, after calling for records under this section take fresh evidence—1882 A W N 146 3 Bom I R 677

The powers of a Sessions Judge under this section may be put in force not only on matters coming before the Judge in Court, but also on matters coming to his knowledge on reliable information—2 Weir 538

A District Magistrate cannot take cognizance of a case by way of revision against a prisoner who has not appealed. Thus A and B were tried together and convicted of the same offence by a 2nd class Magistrate. A alone appealed but in hearing his appeal the District Magistrate took cognizance of the case against B also and set aside the conviction and sentence of both the accused, and ordered their retrial. Held that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to reverse the conviction and sen tence as regards B or to take cognizance of the case against him except by reporting it to the High Court—Rational 358 3 Bom I R 677

A Magistrate who calls for and examines the calendar of a case tried by a Subordinate Magistrate under this Section, does not act in a judicial proceeding and therefore cannot order the prosecution of any person under Sec 476, if the matter was not brought before him in a judicial proceeding—7 Mad 560, 15 M I J 489 But see sec 476 as now amended

Sessions Judges and District Magistrates when exercising their powers under this section should pay particular attention to the following points in the proceedings of the inferior Criminal Courts (1) the rash issue of process (2) the dealing with disputed claims of right under colour of a charge of criminal trespass or mischief, and convictions held of the former offence without a finding as to the criminal intent, (3) the indiscreet imposition of fines beyond the means of offenders (4) the light punishment by inferior Courts of offences requiring severe punishments in cases which ought to have gone up to a superior Court for enhanced punishment, (5) the imposition of heavy fines in addition to imprisonment with a view, in default of payment, to extend the term of imprisonment beyond the ordinary powers of the Magistrate to inflict (6) the exaction of excessive bail or excessive security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour (7) unnecessary delay in the trial of cases—Mad II C Rul 1st 12 1884 para 17

Suspension of sentence Release on bail—By the italicised words added at the end of Subsection (1) power is given to suspend a sentence or to release an accused on bail pending the examination of the record, thus avoiding the result should delay occur, that the sentence may have been served before orders are passed—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

1175 Sub section (4)—The intention of the Legislature in enacting this clause is to prevent the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate from simultaneously exercising their powers of revision and to prevent them from exercising their powers in such a way as would amount to one of them as it were hearing in appeal from or reversing an order passed by the other—4 O C 119

Under this section the District Magistrate and Sessions Judge have co-ordinate powers and therefore after an application for revision has been made to the District Magistrate no further application can be entertained by the Sessions Judge even though the Sessions Judge was not asked to revise the order passed by the District Magistrate in revision, but only to call for the record and report the Magistrate's order to the High Court—17 M I J 153 nor can the Sessions Judge act suo motu to call for the records under this section, after an application has been made to the District Magistrate—1912 P R 10 Where a complaint having been dismissed by the Dy Magistrate under sec 203 a fresh complaint was made before the District Magistrate in revision, who again dismissed the complaint it was not open to the Sessions Judge to order further inquiry into the complaint—Sheik Suddiq v Sheikh Chakuri, C W N 451 Similarly, the District Magistrate is prohibited by this section from entertaining an application for a direction to com accused, after a similar application to the Sessions Judge has been refused the reason for the prohibition being the avoidance of a conflict between the orders of the two District authorities having co-ordinate powers in the matter—26 Mad 477. But where an application for revision preferred to the Sessions Judge has been dismissed for want of prosecution the District Magistrate is competent to entertain a second application for revision and exercise his powers under this section—4 O C 119.

Where a District Magistrate called for the record of a case in which the accused had been discharged, and where the complainant subsequently presented an application to the Sessions Judge to have the order of discharge of the accused set aside and the Sessions Judge sent for the proceedings and after a perusal of them ordered the commitment of the accused for trial, it was held that the Sessions Judge's action was not illegal since no application was made to the District Magistrate, and as the District Magistrate's action in calling for the record was not equivalent to entering an application—8 I B R 365.

436 On examining any record under section 435

Power to order in or otherwise, the High Court or the quiry Sessions Judge may direct the District Magistrate by himself or by any of the Magistrates subordinate to him to make, and the District Magistrate may himself make or direct any subordinate Magistrate to make, further inquiry into any complaint which has been dismissed under Section 203 or sub section (3) of Section 204, or into the case of any person accused of an offence who has been discharged

Provided that no Court shall make any direction under this section for inquiry into the case of any person who has been discharged unless such person has had an opportunity of showing cause why such direction should not be made

Change:—This is the old section 437 and the old section 436 has been renumbered as sec 437. The reason is that the words "instead of directing a fresh inquiry" occurring in the old section 436 (now 437) refer to the inquiry which can be directed under the old section 437 (now 436) and it is therefore necessary to put the latter section first.

The words "person accused of an offence" have been substituted for the words "accused person" occurring in the old section. There have been different rulings as to whether the expression accused person in this section means any person accused of an offence and it is now made clear that it does.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). The proviso has been newly added. "We have added a proviso to this section to give effect to the rule laid down by the Courts that a fresh inquiry should not be made into the case of a person who has been discharged unless he has had an opportunity of showing cause"—Report of the Joint Committee (1912).

1175A Scope:—This section does not speak of Presidency Magistrates and the High Court has no power under this section to direct further inquiry into a case of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused by a Presidency Magistrate—Kedae Nath v Khetranath 6 C L J 705. Debi Bux v Jutmal, 33 Cal 1282 Charubala v Barendra 27 Cal 120 But the High Court can exercise such power under sec 439 see 36 Cal 994 28 Cal 652 and 26 Cal 746 cited in Note 182 under sec 203

1176 Who can direct further inquiry:—The mention of the three tribunals together, the High Court, the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate shows that the Legislature intended them to have the same power with regard to the matter dealt with under this section—15 Cal 608 32 Cal 220 But though the powers of the three tribunals are co-ordinate still as a matter of procedure the application should be made at first to the lower tribunal. Thus where a District Magistrate has dismissed a complaint under sec 203 the High Court will not entertain an application for revision under this section unless a previous application has been made to the Sessions Judge. The High Court will interfere only as a Court of last resort—28 All 268 1904 1 W N 232 So also where the District Magistrate and Chief Court have concurrent jurisdiction, an order under this section will be more conveniently made by the District Magistrate than by the Chief Court—1888 P R 7

Since the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have co-ordinate powers under this section to direct further inquiry it follows therefore that where a District Magistrate has directed an inquiry into a case and decided upon it the Sessions Judge is not competent to order further inquiry under this section—Shank Sidiq v Shank Chakuri 17 C W N 451 See Note 1175 under sub sec (4) to Sec 435 In like manner, when the Sessions Judge has made an order for further inquiry under this section, the District Magistrate cannot make a contrary order, but should submit the matter to the High Court through the medium of the Public Prosecutor—Queen Empress v Prithi 12 All 434 When a further inquiry has been refused by one of the officers it should not be ordered by the other if the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the order of the District Magistrate for further inquiry is wrong it is open to the Judge to refer the matter to the High Court under sec 438 but he has no power to review the order passed by the District Magistrate under this section—22 Cal 573

A District Magistrate can make or can direct a subordinate Magistrate to make further inquiry into a case in which an order of discharge may have been passed by himself or by a subordinate Magistrate—28 Cal 102 1902 P R 9

A Deputy Magistrate placed in charge of the current duties of the District Magistrate is not thereby invested with the jurisdiction of a District Magistrate unless this section—11 Cal 236

Further inquiry after prior refusal—When a District Magistrate has once decided under this section that there is no case for further inquiry he cannot subsequently order further inquiry such an order would be an order reviewing the earlier one and is prohibited by sec 309—5 Bur L T 37 So also, where a District Magistrate refuses to direct further in quiry, it is not competent to his successor in office, in the face of his predecessor's order, to direct a further inquiry—Ratta Singh v. Kart Singh 4 C W N 100. But a District Magistrate, who has once declined to order further inquiry on the ground that there was no cause for interference, is competent to order further inquiry on a new information being brought to his notice—O F. v. Krishnaji Ratanlal 522 (523).

1177 Who can be directed to make further inquiry.—The District Magistrate may be directed to make further inquiry, even though he exercises enhanced powers under section 30 of the Code—1904 P R 13. The District Magistrate may direct a subordinate Magistrate to make the further inquiry under this section. For the purposes of this section a first class Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate—7 All 833, 8 Mad 18. The District Magistrate has a discretion in selecting the particular Magistrate who is to make the further inquiry under this section and this discretion is vested in the District Magistrate and not in the Sessions Judge—10 Cal 20.

The further inquiry should ordinarily be made by the same Magistrate who held the first inquiry except in case of death or removal of such Magistrate in which case it may be conducted by another Magistrate—8 Mad 270, 8 Mad 351. See also 36 All 129 and 36 All 53. Where the further inquiry involves the taking and weighing of additional evidence, the function will generally be best performed by the same Magistrate who made the previous inquiry but it is desirable that the further inquiry should be entrusted to a different Magistrate because it is quite possible that the Magistrate who held the first inquiry might have been prejudiced against the accused—Ratanlal 38, 4 L R R 233. Thus where the Magistrate who held the first inquiry had already expressed an opinion that it was impossible to affix the guilt to the accused, the High Court ordered the further inquiry to be made by another Magistrate—Ratanlal 66. Where the Magistrate who had held the first inquiry had dealt with the case in a most unsatisfactory way it was held to be a good ground for directing the further inquiry to be made by a different Magistrate—5 Mad 220.

But the District Magistrate cannot direct the further inquiry to be held by a Magistrate inferior to the Magistrate who held the first inquiry. Where a case has been tried by a Magistrate specially empowered under section 30, and has ended in a discharge the District Magistrate should order the further inquiry to be made by the same Magistrate or by another Magistrate equally empowered, but not by a Magistrate who is not empowered under sec. 30 and who is therefore in a sense a Court of inferior jurisdiction to the Court which ordered the discharge—Lado v. Emp., 12 N L R 64.

When the District Magistrate has sent the case to a subordinate Magistrate for further inquiry under this section, the Sub-divisional Magistrate cannot withdraw the case to his own file from that of the subordinate Magistrate—Ratanlal 315. But when a case is sent to the Sub-divisional Magistrate for further inquiry he can transfer the case to a 2nd class Magistrate subordinate to him—2 Weir 563.

1178 In what cases can further inquiry be ordered:—
Dismissal of complaint:—Further inquiry may be ordered when a complaint is dismissed under sec 203 or 201 (3)—18 J P R 14, 2 Weir 563, 11 O C 261 1 N I R 18 But if a complaint was made in respect of an offence and the accused was convicted further inquiry cannot be directed in respect of another offence for which no charge was made in the complaint—27 Cal 138 Where a case was taken up not upon a complaint but upon a police report a Magistrate's order directing the case to be struck off is not a dismissal of complaint, and cannot be revised by the Sessions Judge—Ratanlal 521 No further inquiry can be directed when no complaint was made against a person and no regular process was issued against him—39 Cal 238 Where a complaint has been dismissed under sec 203 the revisional jurisdiction of the District Magistrate may be exercised even though there may have been some irregularity on the part of the officer taking cognizance upon the complaint This section also contemplates that where a complaint has in fact been dismissed under sec 203, the revisional jurisdiction of the District Magistrate may be invoked irrespective of the consideration whether the dismissal is legal or illegal—3 P I J 346 Where a complaint which contained several charges was dismissed in respect of one of the charges and the complaint was dismissed merely on the report of the President of a Panchayet without giving the complainant any opportunity to substantiate his case, it was held that there should be a further inquiry into the complaint—23 C W N 575 When a complaint has been dismissed under sec 201 by a Magistrate, a fresh complaint can be entertained by the same Magistrate or by some other Magistrate even though the order of dismissal has not been set aside nor a further inquiry has been directed by a Superior Court See Note 681 under sec 203

1179 Discharge of accused:—The District Magistrate may direct further inquiry where the accused has been discharged But it is not in every case of discharge that a further inquiry may be directed Where the order of discharge is not perverse or foolish and where the Magistrate has dealt at length with the evidence and recorded what appears as sound reasons for the discharge interference under this section is illegal—1902 P I R 394 1916 P W R 20, 3 Lah I J 97 21 Cr L J 571 (Lah), Khan Zaman v Emp 26 Cr I J 1357 (Lah) Although the word 'improperly' which occurs before the word discharged in sec 437, is omitted in this section still it is illegal to direct a further inquiry unless the order of discharge was improper i.e manifestly perverse or foolish or was based upon a record of evidence which was obviously incomplete—Emp v Kari 1911 P R 10 12 Cr I J 364 1916 P W R 20 Saurav v Crown 26 P I R 291 26 Cr L J 1393 24 Cr L J 369 (Lah) 24 Cr I J 622 (Lah) 20 Cr I J 592 (Lah) Nadi Baksh v Crown 1 Lah 216 Gopal Das v Maghi Kam 26 P L R 353 26 Cr L J 1508 7 Lah I J 252 21 Cr I J 571 Sheo Charan v Emp 21 N I R 88 12 N I R 94 18 V I J 1235 4 Lah I J 411 An order of discharge passed by a trial Court after full enquiry and after considering and recording all the evidence produced by the complainant, should not be lightly interfered with—Latif Muhammad v Crown 7 Lah

Where a person has been improperly discharged, no reference to the High Court is necessary, the District Magistrate can himself order a fresh inquiry—Ratanlal 213, 988 The intention seems to be to give revisional jurisdiction to the Sessions Court or District Magistrate in cases of improper discharge concurrently with that of the High Court, and thereby to obviate the expense and inconvenience which the necessity to resort to the High Court might in some cases entail—Q F v Bilasunatalambi 14 Mad 334 (338) Contra—8 Mad 336

No formal order of discharge is necessary, to enable the District Magistrate to direct further inquiry When an order is one of discharge in substance, though not in form, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is competent, upon motion being made by the complainant, to make an order for further inquiry—8 C W N 456 Where after the issue of warrant against certain persons, the Magistrate does not think it proper to proceed further and stops further proceedings the termination of the proceedings is in effect an order of discharge and is therefore subject to revision under this section—4 C W N 242 Where an accused was charged with offences under sections 323 and 307 I P C, and the Magistrate framed a charge under section 323 only and said nothing about section 307, held that this was equivalent to saying that there was no evidence against the accused of an offence under section 307 I P C and that in effect the accused was discharged of that offence The Court of revision could therefore order further inquiry in respect of that offence—42 All 128

This section applies where the accused has been discharged or discharged under sec 209 253 or 259 of the Code—33 Mad 83 and not where he has been acquitted No further inquiry can be directed when the accused has been acquitted by a Magistrate—20 Cal 633 8 Mad 296 4 C W N 346 5 C W N 72 7 C W N 403 Thus where a complaint in a summons case has been dismissed for default, the order is one under sec 247 acquitting the accused Such an order does not fall within the purview of sec 436—Bindra v Bhagunata 25 Cr L J 359 (Oudh) Even if an order of acquittal was passed in a warrant case without any charge having been framed or evidence for the defence taken still it cannot be a subject of revision under this section—1 A I J 415 If the order is in substance one of acquittal though the Magistrate styles it an order of discharge, no further inquiry can be ordered—1900 P L R 31, 17 Cr L J 95 (Mad) Thus, where in a summons case, the Magistrate follows the procedure of a warrant case and discharges the accused the order of discharge is one of acquittal and no order under this section can be passed—8 M L J 78 Similarly, after a charge has been framed in a warrant case the accused can only be acquitted under sec 258 and not discharged, and if the Magistrate erroneously passes an order of discharge, still there can be no order for further inquiry—38 Mad 585 Where after a full trial the accused persons were discharged the discharge was for all practical purposes as good as an acquittal and there should be no order for further inquiry—4 Lah L J 331

No further inquiry can be directed where the proceedings have been stopped under sec 349 and the accused has been released—1913 P R 9

No further inquiry can be directed in a case where the accused has been convicted. If in fact in such a case the Sessions Judge thinks that further inquiry is necessary he must report the matter to the High Court which alone can direct further inquiry in such a case—Ratanlal 407

Where the order is neither one of dismissal of complaint nor one of discharge of accused, no order for further inquiry can be passed. Thus, where on the acquittal of an accused the other accused against whom processes of arrest had been issued surrendered before the Deputy Magistrate, and he passed an order directing that the accused should not be proceeded against and that the warrant and other processes issued against him be withdrawn, the order was neither one of dismissal of complaint nor one of discharge of the accused, and the District Magistrate had therefore no jurisdiction under this section to set aside the order and direct the retrial of the accused—17 C W N 68

1180 No further inquiry where no accusation of 'offence'.—Further inquiry can be directed only in the case of an accused person the term 'accused' means a person accused of an offence and not a person against whom proceedings are taken under Chapter VIII—27 Cal 662 33 Cr 1 8. Therefore section 436 does not enable a Court to order further inquiry to be made in a case of discharge of a person against whom security proceedings were taken under Chapter VIII because such a person was not in the position of an accused person and could not be said to have committed an 'offence'—27 Cr 1 662 33 Cal 8, Emp v Roshan Singh 46 All 235, 1003 P R 42 Young Khan v A E 2 Rang 30 (31), 33 Mad 85 2 Bur L J 285 1911 P R 6 (Contra—21 All 107, 24 All 148 36 All 147, 16 Bom 661, 35 Bom 401 2 I B R 80). The word 'discharged' in section 119 means only 'permitted to depart' and does not mean the discharge of an accused as contemplated by this section therefore further inquiry cannot be directed in a case of discharge under sec 119—33 Mad 85 U B R (1914) 1st Cr 3 (Contra—36 All 147 1899 A W N 203 1903 P R 24 20 Cr I J 704). This is now made clear by the present amendment by the use of the words 'accused of an offence'. The contrary rulings cited above within brackets are now rendered obsolete. If a District Magistrate on examining the record of a security case, is of opinion that the person discharged by the subordinate Magistrate ought to be proceeded against he can, under sec 438 report the result of his examination of the record to the High Court, which will then pass the necessary orders. But he cannot direct further inquiry under sec 436—Emperor v Roshan Singh, 46 All 235

This section also does not apply to proceedings under sec 133 of the Code, since the person proceeded against under that section is not said to have committed an 'offence'. A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate acts without jurisdiction if he directs further inquiry into proceedings under that section—24 Cal 395 25 Cr 1 425, Prithpal v Emp, 2 O W N 549 26 Cr 1 J 1251. The only action which a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate can take in such case will be under sec 438—Prithpal v Emp,

2 O W N 549 Similarly, proceedings under sec 144 do not refer to any offence, and no further inquiry can be directed in a case under that section—27 Cal 158 So also this section does not authorise a Magistrate to direct further inquiry into a case under sec 145, as that section has no reference to any offence at all—20 Cr L 729 So again, the District Magistrate cannot direct further inquiry into cases under sec 488, since refusal of maintenance is not an 'offence' and the application for maintenance is not a complaint of an offence—17 C P I R 127, 5 Cal 536

1181. When further inquiry may be directed:—1 Sessions Judge or District Magistrate has jurisdiction under this section to direct further inquiry or a rehearing upon the same materials which were before the subordinate Magistrate, though there is no further evidence forthcoming—Haridas v. Virulhi 15 Cal 608 Q. E. v. Balasubramaniam 14 Mad 334 10 Bom 131 Q. E. v. Chaita 9 All 52, Dayanand v. Emp. 23 A L J 20, 26 Cr L J 736 1891 P R 14, 5 C P L R 20, Haider Khan v. A. F. 25 Cr L J 66 (Outh) 3 I R R 97 The expression "further inquiry" in this section does not mean that additional evidence must be forthcoming. Any mistake of law or irregularity in the proceedings will justify the District Magistrate in setting aside an order of discharge—Emp. v. Dabidas 14 C P L R 161 Further inquiry under this section does not in all cases mean taking of additional evidence, but may mean rehearing and reconsideration of the evidence already taken—1901 P R 2, 1901 P I R 32 Sheocharan v. Imp. 21 A L J 88 26 Cr L J 1537, 10 S L R 68 But in 1887 P R 63 and 8 Mad 336 it has been held that further inquiry in this section means the taking of additional evidence and not a mere rehearing of the same evidence which is the same thing as retrial and therefore where there has been a full inquiry by a competent Court and the accused has been discharged the Sessions Judge has no power under this section to direct a further inquiry unless further evidence has been disclosed—1900 P I R 31 And in a recent case the Calcutta High Court has also held that in cases where the trying Magistrate has discussed the evidence carefully and has given sufficient reason for the discharge of the accused and no fresh evidence is likely to be produced on further inquiry the superior Court should hesitate before exercising its powers under this section to order further inquiry, unless there are palpable errors in the decision of the lower Court—Ibid Rashid v. Momta 38 C L J 206

The District Magistrate is not competent to direct further inquiry in any and every case falling under this section. This section is limited by the words "on examining the record under sec 435" and that section lays down that a Court may call for and examine the record for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed and as to the regularity of any proceeding of such inferior Court. And therefore a District Magistrate cannot set aside an order of discharge and direct further inquiry, if he finds no irregularity, illegality or impropriety in the proceedings—Pran Khan v. A. E. 16 C W N 1078 13 Cr L J 764

Where a Magistrate has discharged the accused without considering the necessary evidence, the Sessions Judge ought to direct further inquiry in the case—13 Bom 376

Want of time is not a sufficient ground for refusal to order further inquiry, if the Court feels that an offence has been committed which should be inquired into—Birbhukhan v Jaurao 23 Cr 1 J 745 (Nag)

The power of ordering further inquiry under this section should be used sparingly and with great circumspection. Therefore where an accused person has been three times subjected to a Magisterial inquiry it would be in oppression on the accused to send him a fourth time before the Magistrate for inquiry on the same evidence which has been thrice pronounced to be insufficient and untrustworthy—Ritnalal 328 Where a complaint has been dismissed by the Magistrate after fully considering the police report and the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses and after finding that no offence has been made out and the Sessions Judge ordered further inquiry and upon the order of the Magistrate held that the Judge should not lightly set aside the order of dismissal but should do so only when it is clear that there has been miscarriage of justice—Jangal v Radha Kishen 26 Cr 1 J 866 A I R 1923 Pat 447 Sessions Judges and District Magistrates should use the powers under this section sparingly and with great caution and circumspection, especially in cases where the questions involved are mere matters of fact—1886 A W N 281 Q E v Chatur 1 All 52 The Divisional Court ought not to ordinarily interfere with an order of discharge passed by the trying Magistrate unless it is possible to come to only one conclusion on the evidence viz. that the accused is guilty—10 J W 630 3 Lah 1 J 9, Further inquiry cannot be directed on the bare possibility of an offence being disclosed on further evidence being taken. There must be something on record to indicate that such an offence was committed or there must be something to show that further evidence is available which has not been taken and which would support a charge for that offence—In re Ibrahim 43 M 1 J 564 Further inquiry ought not to be directed where there is no prospect of any public advantage from the case being reopened—In re Krishna Pillai (1923) M W N 56 The powers conferred by this section are not to be exercised promiscuously in all cases wherever the District Magistrate who has not seen the witnesses forms a different opinion of the value of their evidence from that which was formed by the Magistrate who has seen them—19 Bom 1 R 350 3 Lah 1 J 97 Umrao Khan v Fulp 21 A L J 194, 44 All 691, 4 Lah 1 J 411 When the nature of the case is such that Courts are liable to take different views of the evidence and of the probabilities such a case is not one in which further inquiry ought to be ordered specially when the Civil Court and a Magistrate have disbelieved the evidence for the prosecution—Chaudan v Kallu 8 A I J 45 Biudeshri v Fulp 18 A I J 1135 A District Magistrate cannot set aside an order of discharge passed by a Subordinate Magistrate and direct further inquiry solely on the ground that the latter has misappreciated the evidence—31 Mad 133 But see 10 S I R 68 and 4 Lah 1 J 411

A District Magistrate is not authorised to direct further inquiry under this section, when the essence of the matter between the parties is of a civil nature and the question is in reality one which ought to be fought out in a Civil Court—1 Bom J R 852

1182 Powers of Courts directing further inquiry.—(i) This section does not authorize a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate to take evidence or direct it to be taken supplementing the evidence given in the Lower Court. He is authorised to direct further inquiry, but not to take evidence or direct evidence to be taken. Under section 428 an Appellate Court dealing with an appeal may direct additional evidence to be taken and itself record such evidence. The High Court under section 439 has all the powers of an Appellate Court and can direct evidence to be taken. But no such powers are given to the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate under the present section—6 C I J 251

(ii) The District Magistrate directing further inquiry cannot direct that the accused be put on his trial. All that he can do is to direct further inquiry, leaving it entirely to the inquiring Magistrate to determine whether or not the evidence justifies the accused being charged and put on his trial—2 Bom L R 586, 1905 P L R p 65. An order for retrial should not be made in the guise of an order for further inquiry—2 C P L R 82

(iii) The District Magistrate directing further inquiry cannot suggest that the accused be committed to the Sessions; he must leave it to the judgment and discretion of the Sub Magistrate who is to make the inquiry and cannot fetter the Sub Magistrate's judicial discretion by any suggestion or direction—15 Mad 39. The District Magistrate is wholly wrong in directing a Subordinate Magistrate that he should pass such and such order in a case pending judicially before him—1918 P W R 10. In making an order for further inquiry it is improper for the Superior Magistrate to write a judgment which is practically a mandate to the Subordinate Magistrate—12 N I R 94

(iv) The Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate cannot, when directing further inquiry under this section, himself frame a charge or order the Sub Magistrate to frame the charge and try the accused. He might of course make the inquiry himself and frame a charge in course of it—32 Mad 220

1183 Powers and duties of the Magistrate making the inquiry.—(i) If the inquiry is directed to be held by a Magistrate other than the officer who held the first inquiry, he should take the evidence de novo and cannot proceed on the evidence already taken—9 A L J 310, 6 All 36, 4 L B R 233

(ii) The Magistrate can take further evidence which he had omitted in the first inquiry—13 Bom 376

(iii) The Magistrate is not bound to try the accused for the very offence for which he was originally discharged but is competent to try him for any other offence which may be established by the evidence—7 Mad 454

(iv) When further inquiry is ordered into a complaint dismissed under s c 203 the Magistrate cannot again act under sec 203, but must proceed under sec 204 and inquire into or try the case—11 C W N 316

After an order of further inquiry is passed, the complainant is entitled to produce and the Magistrate is bound to receive the whole evidence for the prosecution, and he is not authorized to again dismiss the complaint under sec 203 simply on a Police report—1918 P W R 10 But in a recent case of the Calcutta High Court it has been held that a Magistrate holding a further inquiry into a complaint which has been once dismissed under sec 203 can again dismiss the complaint under sec 203—25 C W N 312

(r) The Magistrate making the inquiry has jurisdiction to enquire as to whether a prima facie case has been made out against the accused and having been satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out he has jurisdiction to try and dispose of the case himself—5 P L J 47

(i) The Magistrate who is directed to make further inquiry is not competent to question the propriety of the order directing the inquiry but is bound to carry it out—to Bom 131

1184 Notice to accused—See the proviso newly added Although no notice to the accused was necessary under the old section still it was held in numerous cases that a Court did not exercise a proper discretion if before proceeding under this section he did not give the accused an opportunity by service of a notice to show cause against an order directing further inquiry—15 Cal 608 2 C W N 196 3 C W N 249, 1901 P R 2 1919 I L R 17 1 141 216 4 I L L J 411 5 Bom L R 877 1893 P R 17 L B R (1897-1901) 100 6 Bom I R 479 8 Bom L R 694 19 Bom L R 908 4 P L W 220 2 Weir 245 11 C W N 173 11 C W N 316 40 All 416 Unirao v Emp 21 A L J 194 Ganpaty 19 A I J 71 Jaswant 19 A L J 985, 15 A I J 627 6 All 367 12 A L J 167 1890 A W N 147 20 All 339 9 All 52 1898 A W N 60 24 O C 142 Where a man has been discharged after full inquiry by a competent Court a Revisional Court will exercise proper discretion in allowing him an opportunity of showing cause before ordering a further inquiry or before directing re opening of the case It is a principle of British Criminal Law that an order to a man's prejudice should not be passed without due notice to him—8 Bur L T 133 This is now expressly laid down in the proviso

The opportunity to show cause may be given even after the accused is arrested and brought before the Court—12 C W N 822 32 Cal 1090 1891 P R 14 1895 P R 17

Under the old law the non service of notice to show cause was held to be merely an irregularity—6 All 367 and the omission could not be held to invalidate the order or action of the Court unless there was reason to think that the accused was prejudiced thereby—U B R (1897-1901) 100 4 P L J 456 Under the new proviso the service of notice is imperative

Notice is necessary only where the accused has been discharged No notice would be necessary under this section where the complaint was dismissed under section 203 since the order under section 203 dismissing the complaint was not passed with a notice to the accused person or in his presence, and therefore would probably be unknown to him—15 Cal 608, 29 Cal 457 37 Cal 1090, 32 C I J 44 20 All 339 30 All 52

2 Bom L R 586, 5 A I J 74, Jagan v. Ram Pirbhan, 35 All 78, (Mray v. Imp) 47 All 72 23 A I J 451 Imp. v. Liaquat Husam 40 All 138. But where the accused person was given an opportunity of being heard before the complaint was dismissed under sec 203, a further inquiry ought not to be directed without giving notice to him. As he was present from the very commencement of the proceedings, it is proper that he should be given an opportunity of being heard before an order is made under this section—Jogesh Chandra v. Nilunja Behari 27 C W N 552.

When notice is issued under this section, the accused is not legally bound to avail himself of the opportunity given to him to show cause, and he is at liberty either to appear and show cause or to stay away—1893 P R 15.

1185 Recording reasons:—Before making an order under this section a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is bound to record his reasons and to state in what respect the trial Judge's conclusions are unsatisfactory—Sutan v. Crown 26 P I R 291 26 Cr L J 1393, 1830 A W N 147, 13 C W N 76. The wide jurisdiction to set aside an order of discharge cannot be properly exercised without having and assigning solid and sufficient reasons for doing so—15 Cal 608, 1913 A W N 638. The Magistrate should record his reasons for ordering further inquiry, because the High Court in the absence of such reasons cannot exercise supervision over the Magistrate's or Judge's proceedings, and also because it is fair to the person against whom the order is made that the reasons for directing such inquiry should be made explicit to him and that he should have notice of the grounds on which the further inquiry has been directed—L B R (1917) 2nd Qr 16 32 Cal 1090. Where the order of the Sessions Judge for further inquiry does not state any proper grounds it is liable to be set aside by the High Court—8 C W N 436, 3 S L R 7.

It is not ordinarily desirable that a District Magistrate in ordering a further inquiry should make a detailed examination of the evidence and give elaborate reasons because that might prejudice the trial afterwards, but it is desirable that he should give enough in the shape of reasons to show that his order is proper—32 Cal 1090. In a Burma case however where in an order for further inquiry the Sessions Judge simply stated "I have translated and considered the whole of the record, and the conclusion I have arrived at is that there should be a further inquiry" it was held that it contained ample reasons for the order—4 L B R 233.

1186 Interference by High Court:—An order of a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate setting aside an order of discharge is liable to be reviewed by the High Court as a Court of Revision. If in any case the High Court were to find that the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge had set aside an order of discharge on insufficient grounds or that while there were good grounds for setting it aside, the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge had made an order inappropriate to the facts of the case the High Court would be acting properly in revising the order—15 Cal 608. Where the order of the Sessions Judge did not state any proper grounds for directing a further inquiry, it was set aside by the High Court in revision—8 C W N 456 But where the Sessions Judge after going carefully through the evidence was of opinion that the finding of the trying Magistrate was either perverse or in all probability wrong or manifestly at variance with the evidence which he has recorded, and directed further inquiry held that the order of the Sessions Judge was not illegal or improper and the High Court would not interfere with the considered opinion of the Sessions Judge—Karthley v Jagannath 11 O 1 J 611 1 O W N 342 26 Cr 1 J 959

437 When, on examining the record of any case under

mitment Judge or District Magistrate considers that such case is triable exclusively by the Court of Session and that an accused person has been improperly discharged by the inferior Court, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may cause him to be arrested, and may thereupon, instead of directing a fresh inquiry, order him to be committed for trial upon the matter of which he has been, in the opinion of the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate improperly discharged

Provided as follows —

- (a) that the accused has had an opportunity of showing cause to such Judge or Magistrate why the commitment should not be made
- (b) that if such Judge or Magistrate thinks that the evidence shows that some other offence has been committed by the accused such Judge or Magistrate may direct the inferior Court to inquire into such offence

This is the old section 436 The old section 437 has now been renumbered as sec 436 For reason of this transposition see notes under the previous section

1187 Application of section—The words or otherwise do not mean in any other way whatsoever but in any other way provided by the Code—10 Cal 268 The reason for exercising the powers under this section must arise upon materials to be found on the record and not upon extraneous matter—1890 A W N 147 15 Cal 608

1188 Who can order commitment—The Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate have co-ordinate powers to order a commitment under this section—28 C 1 397 Ratanlal 85—A Sessions Judge may take action under this section though the District Magistrate has refused to call for the record and to direct a commitment of the case—43 Mal 350

The District Magistrate may act of his own motion quite independent of an order from the Court of Session—8 W R, 61

The word 'District Magistrate' in this section includes a District Magistrate specially empowered under sec 30 of this Code—1904 P L R 234 Also, a District Magistrate can, under this section, revise an order of discharge passed by a subordinate Magistrate of the First Class invested with powers under sec 30 of the Code, in a case which is triable exclusively by the Court of Session—12 V I R 94

The Joint Sessions Judge cannot exercise the powers of a Sessions Judge under this chapter and cannot order a commitment to the session in a case discharged by a Magistrate—In re Musa, 9 Bom 164

Secs 436 and 437 do not apply to Presidency Magistrates a Presidency Magistrate can himself revise the complaint after he has discharged the accused without any order of the superior authority—1 C W N 49, 28 Cal 652

1189 "Exclusively triable by Court of Session": To give jurisdiction to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, the accused must have been charged with an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session—1904 P I R 234 1 All 413 7 C L R 168 1897 P R 3 Therefore a Sessions Judge cannot direct commitment or order fresh inquiry in a case where the accused is discharged of an offence within the Magistrate's jurisdiction—Ratnalal 42, 1882 A W N 105, 20 Cal 633, 1 All 413 42 Mad 561 15 M I J 373 3 B I R 65

In a Burmah case, it has been held that the term "triable exclusively by the Court of Session" means either a case where the District Magistrate considers that the facts constitute an offence which is triable exclusively by the Court of Session or it might mean a case in which the District Magistrate considers that the sentence which the Magistrate could pass might not be sufficient and therefore it was a case which should be tried by a Court of Session—9 L B R 208 But the Allahabad High Court holds that a case does not come within this section merely because the offence could not in the opinion of the District Magistrate be adequately punished by a Magistrate—1908 A W N 189 Similarly the Madras High Court holds that the words are to be construed strictly and that it is not competent to the Sessions Judge to direct a commitment under this section if the offence is not exclusively triable by the Court of Session—42 Mad 561 This is also the view of the other High Courts See Ratnalal 42 20 Cal 633

Where the accused was charged with two offences, under sections 47A (triable exclusively by the Court of Session) and 408 I P C (not so triable) of which the principal offence was the latter one and the other was merely secondary, and the subordinate Magistrate refused to commit the accused to the Sessions and discharged him, held that the District Magistrate was competent under this section to direct the commitment of the accused even though the primary offence was not triable exclusively by the Court of Session because the two offences were intimately connected and formed part of the same transaction—16 Bom L R 80 So also, where an accused person appears to have committed culpable homicide, his conviction by a Magistrate of a minor offence does not prevent his trial for murder, etc The Sessions Judge, if he thinks there is a prima facie case, may call on the accused to show cause why a commitment should not be ordered and may thereafter order his commitment under this section if satisfied that there is sufficient cause for it—Ratanlal 337

1190 "Improperly discharged":—A Sessions Judge may direct a commitment even where the District Magistrate himself discharges the accused—7 All 853

The mere fact that a Magistrate has discharged the accused in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session without committing him to the Sessions, is not a ground of interference under this section—2 Weir 260. The District Magistrate or Sessions Judge before ordering the committal of the accused to the Sessions Court must come to a finding with reference to the evidence that the accused has been improperly discharged—1 P L J 97. The mere fact that the charge is in the opinion of the District Magistrate of such an important character that it should be considered by a Court of Session is not a sufficient reason for interfering with the order of discharge—1 P L J 97

It is the duty of the Sessions Judge in considering whether the accused person has been improperly discharged to consider all the grounds upon which such order of discharge has been passed including a consideration of the evidence which has not been believed or held to be sufficient to establish a prima facie case. Then only can he pass an order for the commitment of the accused or for further inquiry—7 C W N 77. The Sessions Judge has to consider whether it was open to the Magistrate to come to the conclusion to which he did come on the materials before him. That a different view could be taken on the evidence would not justify the Sessions Judge in ordering commitment. He must come to the conclusion that the finding of the Magistrate is not only wrong but perverse—Rubhanjan v P P 6 P L T 50 26 Cr L J 886. A I R 1925 Pat 599

The Sessions Judge can direct the committal of an accused person improperly discharged by the sub-Magistrate though no express order of discharge has been recorded by that Magistrate—10 L W 521

The section applies where the accused person has been discharged and not where he has been acquitted—20 Cal 633 23 Mad 225 where the Magistrate has in fact discharged the accused though he has used the expression acquitted and released. The Sessions Judge is competent to order a committal under this section—8 W R 41. Where on a complaint in respect of a sessions offence the Magistrate finding that no sessions offence had been committed tried the accused of a non-sessions offence and acquitted him it was held that this section did not apply. Even the acquittal of the accused in respect of the minor offence could not be construed to amount to a discharge in respect of the grave offence and no order under this section could be passed by the Sessions Judge—20 Cal 633. But in 24 Mad 136 this case was dissented from, and the acquittal of the accused in respect of the minor offence was held to be in substance a discharge of the accused in respect of the grave offence, and the Sessions Judge was therefore held justified in having made an order for further inquiry in respect of the grave offence and for committal to the Sessions. In the more recent case of 22 C W N 117 upon similar facts the Judges were divided in opinion, Trunton J holding the same view as in the Madras case cited above, and Richardson J upholding the view of 20 Cal 633.

This section applies not only where the accused has been expressly discharged, but also where he has been impliedly discharged. Thus, where on a complaint for an offence under sec 302 I P C the Magistrate disbelieving the evidence did not frame any charge under sec 302 or 304 I P C but framed only charges under secs 147, 323, 325 held that the action of the Magistrate amounted to an implied order of discharge in regard to secs 302 and 304 I P C, and an order directing commitment in regard to sec 304 can be made by the Sessions Judge—43 Mad 330. But the Oudh Court holds that the word 'discharge' means absolute discharge and not a partial discharge. Therefore where the police challan mentioned offences under secs 147 and 304 I P C, but the Magistrate after hearing the evidence for the prosecution framed a charge under secs 147 and 325 the accused could not be said to have been discharged, and the Sessions Judge was not authorised to order commitment for an offence under sec 304 I P C—Bilodar v A F 3 O W N 201 27 Cr I J 417 1 I R 1926 Oudh 104.

By an inferior Court.—For the meaning of 'inferior', see Note 1171 under sec 435.

A Subordinate Magistrate of the First Class invested with powers under sec 30 is inferior to the District Magistrate, and the latter can revise an improper order of discharge passed by the former in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session—12 N I R 94.

1191 Order for commitment.—Under this section the Sessions Judge can himself commit the accused. The words 'order him to be committed' do not mean more than 'pass an order for his commitment' and the intervention of a Magistrate for making the commitment is not necessary—10 Bom 310. There is nothing in this section to show that when a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge directs a discharged person to be committed for trial, the commitment must be made by the discharging Magistrate—Ibid. But of course it is not wrong to call upon the discharging Magistrate to make the commitment—9 Bom 100 28 Cal 397.

This section enables the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate to commit the accused person for trial only for the offence with which he was substantially charged in the complaint—19 W R 30. When the accused has been discharged by the subordinate Magistrate of one offence, the Sessions Judge is not competent to direct the accused to be committed for trial for another offence—2 Weir 549. Thus, where the police charge-sheet on which the subordinate Magistrate took cognizance of a case charged the accused with a minor offence and the grave offence of rape was not mentioned in it nor did the prosecution press for the framing by the Magistrate of a charge in respect of that offence and the Magistrate framed a charge only of the minor offence, it was held that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct the subordinate Magistrate to commit the accused to the Sessions for the higher offence—41 Mad 982.

ff on the evidence it appears that some other offence has been committed by the accused, the proper course is to order an inquiry under proviso (b)

Under this section, the Sessions Court has no power to commit when there is no legal evidence against the accused—24 W R 70.

A Sessions Judge, while directing a Magistrate under this section to make a commitment, has no power to direct the Magistrate to take the accused's defence or ask the accused to make a defence—4 N W P H C R 50

In ordering commitment, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate should specify the offence for which the accused is to be committed for trial—21 W R 41

1192 Further inquiry, whether can be ordered—A District Magistrate proceeding under this section is not restricted to ordering commitment of the accused who may have been discharged by a subordinate Magistrate he can also direct a further inquiry prior to making an order for commitment—18 Cal 75

Where after the discharge of an accused person, fresh evidence comes to light, the District Magistrate should not direct a subordinate Magistrate to commit the accused for it will amount to a committal for trial on the evidence of witnesses whom the accused has not had an opportunity of cross-examining. The proper course for the District Magistrate is to direct a fresh inquiry—2 Weir 550

When commitment should be ordered and not further inquiry—Where in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session the inferior Court has considered the whole of the prosecution evidence and there is no defect of procedure, and the Magistrate discharges the accused because in his opinion the evidence is insufficient or incredible then if the District Magistrate comes to a different conclusion upon the evidence his proper course is to make an order of commitment and not to direct further inquiry—12 N S R 94 Where in a case triable exclusively by the Sessions Court the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is satisfied that on the evidence taken there is a clear case for committal and there is no reason for desiring a further consideration by the Magistrate it would ordinarily be his duty to commit under this section without ordering a further inquiry—15 Cal 608

1193 Proviso (a) —Notice to accused—It is an essential condition precedent to an order under this section that the accused should have an opportunity of showing cause against his commitment. An order made without issuing such notice is bad in law and not maintainable—1888 A W N 236, 1 C L R 93 24 W R 70 6 M L J 372 15 M L J 373 Where some of the accused were not made parties to the revision petition to the District Magistrate against the order of discharge, and no notice had been ordered to be served upon them, and they had no opportunity of showing cause against the order of commitment made by the District Magistrate, held that the order of commitment made by the District Magistrate was clearly wrong and must be set aside so far as these accused were concerned—In re Mania, 48 Mad 874 49 M L J 155 26 Cr L J

1570 Where, however, a District Magistrate ordered the subordinate Magistrate to make a commitment to the Court of Session, without giving the accused any notice, but the committing Magistrate issued a notice before doing so, the defect was cured by sec 537—Ratanlal 899 A.O., where no objection was taken to the want of notice and the omission has not occasioned a failure of justice, the High Court will not interfere—7 Cal 662

The opportunity to shew cause mentioned in this proviso does not mean any opportunity but that the accused must have a special opportunity. Where the Sessions Judge who was trying a case of false evidence suddenly asked a witness in the course of his examination to explain why he should not be again committed for a trial for murder in respect of an act for which he had been previously discharged, and on answers given by the witness to the above question, ordered his commitment for trial for murder, held that the order was illegal since the accused had not been properly called upon to shew cause—Ratanlal 588

If a notice is given to the accused under this proviso, he is not under any obligation to appear and shew cause. He may or may not avail himself of the opportunity as he chooses—1893 P R 15

1194 Interference by High Court:—Under sec 439, the High Court has power to revise an order of commitment passed under this section by the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate—12 C. W. N 117. In the exercise of the powers of revision the High Court can, on the merits of the case, cancel an order of commitment passed by the Sessions Judge under this section. As for instance, where the order setting aside a discharge and directing commitment is made on insufficient or unreliable evidence—7 C. W. N 327 or where there is no prima facie case for commitment—Sheobhai v Emp 9 C. W. N 820

The order of a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate under this section directing commitment can be quashed by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional powers under sec 439 and not under sec. 215—27 Mad 54. Sec 215 refers only to a commitment actually made, and not to an order directing commitment contemplated by section 437. Therefore the High Court, in considering the order of a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate passed under section 437, may consider the facts as well as the question of law involved and is not limited to points of law only as under sec 215—30 Mad 224, Rash Behari v Emp, 12 C. W. N 117, Tin Kow v Emp, 1 P. L. T 153, Munshi Vander v Kori, 6 P. L. T 146 25 Cr. L. J 1089

But though the High Court possesses the powers to revise orders of commitment, it should exercise those powers most sparingly, and only where it is manifest that the Sessions Judge's order is improper, e.g., where there is no evidence to prove the offence charged—30 Mad 224, In re Mani Manicka, 48 Mad. 874 49 W. L. J 155. It is evident from this section that the fullest and widest discretion has been given to District Magistrates and Sessions Judges, and when an order of commitment has been duly made, the High Court should be most unwilling to interfere except upon strong grounds and under exceptional circumstances—26 All 564, 13 A. L. J 211

438 (1) The Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may, Report to High Court If he thinks fit, on examining under section 435 or otherwise the record of any proceeding report for the orders of the High Court the result of such examination and, when such report contains a recommendation that a sentence be reversed or altered, may order that the execution of such sentence be suspended and, if the accused is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond

(-) An Additional Sessions Judge shall have and may exercise all the powers of a Sessions Judge under this Chapter in respect of any case which may be transferred to him by or under any general or special order of the Sessions Judge

Change—The italicised words have been added by section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. 'In order to provide for the absence of a Sessions Judge, we think it is necessary to empower him to make a general order authorising the Additional Sessions Judge to exercise all his powers. We have provided for it specifically by this amendment'—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

1195 Who can report—The only Courts which can make a reference to the High Court are the Court of Session and District Magistrate. An Additional Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to exercise the powers of a Sessions Judge only in respect of cases transferred to him by the Sessions Judge—1903 A W N 28. In the absence of such transfer an Additional Sessions Judge has not the powers of a Sessions Judge under this section—1 L B R 119. A Joint Magistrate cannot exercise the powers of the District Magistrate—14 W R 25.

If he thinks fit—These words indicate that the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge is not bound to refer every case in which he may detect an error—20 W R 40.

1196 When reference may be made—A District Magistrate should refer all cases in which he considers the order of the Subordinate Court as illegal—2 Weir 564. When a Sessions Judge considers that the judgment or order is contrary to law or that the punishment is severe he may report the proceedings to the High Court—20 W R 60. Empress v Akhbar 1881 A W N 12. Where a District Magistrate is of opinion that a subordinate Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try a particular case the District Magistrate has no power to quash the proceedings of the Sub Magistrate but must report the case for proper orders to the High Court—23 Mad 540. So also if a Sessions Judge is of opinion that an order of a District Magistrate directing a further inquiry under sec 436 is wrong a reference to the High Court may be made under this section—22 Cal 573. A Sessions Judge cannot upon examining the monthly criminal return of a Magistrate order further inquiry under sec 436 into the case of a person who has been convicted. If he thinks any further inquiry necessary he should refer the case to the High Court under this section—Ratanlal 407

1197 When reference cannot be made:—(1) This section allows a reference only when the Court of Session is of opinion that the judgment or order is contrary to law, or that the punishment is too severe or inadequate but not on the ground of the insufficiency or incredibility of the evidence—1881 A W N 12, 17 C P L R 36, 18 W R 7

(2) A necessity for altering a conviction from one section to another for a cognate offence, when the accused has not been prejudiced by any such error is not a sufficient ground for a reference to the High Court under this section—9 Cal 847

(3) When a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge has himself the power to make the order which he proposes in his letter of reference, a reference under this section is unnecessary—28 Cal 102 Thus a case which regularly comes to the Sessions Judge on the appeal of a prisoner, cannot be referred to the High Court under this section but must be disposed of by the Sessions Judge—9 W R 5 11 W R 24 1914 P W R 7 13 A L J 477 15 Cr L J 472 (Mad) 2 Weir 565 Where the accused was charged with theft and discharged by the first class Magistrate and the District Magistrate referred the case to the High Court it was held that the High Court need not interfere in a case of a mere discharge the District Magistrate being competent to take steps himself should he deem it necessary—Ratanlal 290

(4) Where an appeal is preferred to the Sessions Judge, he cannot without disposing of the appeal under sec 423 make a reference to the High Court under this section—1884 A W N 130

(5) A reference can be made if the District Magistrate is of opinion that there is a case for revision, upon examining the record of the Sub-Magistrate's proceeding and not merely on the representation of the complainant against the Subordinate Magistrate's decision—Ratanlal 340 nor a reference can be made merely on the report of a Jail Daroga—1891 A W N 80

Reference in cases of acquittal—In the case of an acquittal by a Subordinate Magistrate if the Government does not appeal the proper course for the District Magistrate, if he is dissatisfied with an order of acquittal, would be to move the Local Government for exercising its powers under sec 417 and not to make a reference to the High Court under this section—1902 A W N 89 Ganga Singh v Ramzan 26 Cr L J 337 (Lah) The High Court will not ordinarily entertain a reference from the District Magistrate in such cases—In re Sheikh Aminuddin, 24 All 346, 25 All 128 1907 P W R 13, Crown v Achhar Singh 5 Lah 16 (19) 25 Cr L J 931, 44 Cal 703, 15 Mad 36, 19 W R 55, 1910 M W N 517 12 A L J 255, 35 M L J 665, 38 Mad 1028

Reference in Police Proceedings—This section does not empower a District Magistrate to refer to the High Court the proceedings of a Superintendent of Police as the latter is not a Court subordinate to the Magistrate—Ratanlal 133

1198 Power to refer proceedings of Superior Court:—The powers of the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate under this section are limited by sec 435, which speaks of proceedings of an inferior Criminal Court (as to which see notes under sec 435), and therefore the District Magistrate has no power to question the propriety of an order of the superior Court (Sessions Judge's Court) and to refer the matter to the High Court—Emp v Jannabai, 28 All 91, 41 Bom 47, Crown v Hissau 5 Lrh 11 (14) 25 Cr L J 928 Emp v Lobo 18 Bom 1 R 796, 6 C L R 245, Q E v Jahandi 23 CrL 249, Q E v Karamdi, 23 Cal 250, 18 Cal 186, 23 O C 392, 2 N L R 149, 36 All 378, 46 All 851 (855), 10 All 146, Emp v Faral Dad 24 Cr L J 573 (Lrh). Emp v Kassim 17 S L R 268 26 Cr L J 177 The Magistrate's power of making a reference is restricted to the records and proceedings of a Court subordinate to him, and so a Magistrate cannot ask a Sessions Judge to report a case to the High Court in which he thinks that the acquittal on appeal by the Sessions Judge was wrong—1882 A W N 135 It is never intended that a Subordinate Court should have the power of questioning the propriety of an order passed by an Appellate Court, for revision, simply on the ground that it considers that the original sentence was a proper sentence and should not have been reduced—8 Cal 875 If the District Magistrate thinks that there has been a miscarriage of justice in an appeal heard by the Sessions Judge, or if he is dissatisfied with a sentence passed by the Session Judge, he should not report the case to the High Court for orders under Sec 438 but should communicate with the Public Prosecutor and invite his attention to it—9 All 362, 46 All 851 (855), 1 S L R 40, 18 Cal 186, 6 Bom L R 1099 24 Cr L J 573 (Lrh), Ratanlal 601, Ratanlal 623, Emp v Kassim 17 S L R 268 26 Cr L J 177

1199 Power to refer question of law.—This section empowers the Sessions Judge and District Magistrate on examining the record of any proceeding under sec 435, to report to the High Court for order the result of such examination which means that the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is to report the incorrectness or illegality of the sentence or order and not that he should refer abstract points of law to the High Court—5 O C 316 There is no provision of law which enables a Judge to stop a trial already commenced and to refer to the High Court any questions of law arising on the merits in the case—Ratanlal 214 Where a Sessions Judge, after having asked the opinions of the assessors in a case tried before him, made a reference to the High Court on a question whether he had jurisdiction or not the High Court held that the Sessions Judge ought to have disposed of the question himself and that this section was never intended to be used for the purpose of sending questions to the High Court for opinion—2 All 771, see also O S C 71 The reference by the Sessions Judge in the Bombay and Allahabad cases cited above was contrary to law for another reason viz, that it was not made in respect of any proceeding of a Subordinate Court but in respect of a proceeding of his own Court from the actual decision arrived at by the trial Court, a reference to the High Court merely with the object of obtaining a ruling on a question of law ought not to be made—Emp v Madho Singh, 47 All 409 23 A L J 189 26 Cr L J 865

Where the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate does not really

Power to take evidence—Neither section 435 nor this section enables the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge to take further evidence with a view to reporting the case—3 Bom L R 677, 12 A L J 461

1200 Contents of the reference—(1) A Sessions Judge before he refers the case to the High Court is bound to call upon the inferior Court for an explanation of the order passed and should submit such explanation to the High Court together with the record—8 Cal 644

(2) The reasons for the reference should accompany the record—1891 A W N 80

(3) The order of reference should set forth the points on which orders are required—O S C 64

(4) The reference should contain a recommendation that the sentence be revised or altered—27 All 25 and the District Magistrate should also give a brief abstract of the case and the grounds upon which he recommends that the order or sentence he considers to be incorrect should be set aside by the High Court—9 Cr L J 502 (Mad)

But the report should not contain any representation of the complainant protesting against the Subordinate Magistrate's decision—Ratanlal 340

1201 High Court's power in dealing with reference—Where a District Magistrate referred a case tried by a Subordinate Magistrate and recommended the setting aside of the order of the Sub Magistrate, being of opinion that the Sub Magistrate in conducting the trial did not honestly and impartially apply his mind to the actual evidence before him and took a grossly biased and distorted view of the case it was held that it would not be right for the High Court to take the expression of opinion of the District Magistrate and to rely upon that opinion without satisfying itself upon the evidence and upon the conduct of the proceedings generally that the District Magistrate's opinion was right that is, the High Court would have to investigate the whole of the facts before it would come to the conclusion whether it ought to interfere in revision—44 Cal 703 Where the trial Court has fully considered the evidence and discharged the accused the High Court will not interfere, on a reference by the District Magistrate, unless it is shown that the order of the trial Court was either pervers or unreasonable—Emp. v Jagdamba 11 O L J, 334 1 O W N 245 25 Cr L J 1026

439 (1) In the case of any proceeding the record of

High Court's powers of revision which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders, or which otherwise comes to its knowledge, the High Court may, in its discretion, exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by sections* *423, 426, 427, and 428 or on a Court by section 338, and may enhance the sentence, and when the Judges composing the Court of Revision are equally divided in opinion, the case shall be disposed of in manner provided by section 429.

(2) No order under this section shall be made to the prejudice of the accused unless he has had an opportunity of being heard either personally or by pleader in his own defence.

(3) Where the sentence dealt with under this section has been passed by a Magistrate acting otherwise than under section 34, the Court shall not inflict a greater punishment for the offence which, in the opinion of such Court, the accused has committed, than might have been inflicted for such offence by a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class.

(4) Nothing in this section applies to an entry made under section 273, or shall be deemed to authorize a High Court to convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction.

(5) Where under this Code an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision shall be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed.

(6) Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, any convicted person to whom an opportunity has been given under sub section (2) of showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced shall, in showing cause be entitled also to show cause against his conviction

Change—This section has been amended by sec 111 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. In sub section (1) the figure '195' has been omitted this is consequential to the amendment made in sec 112. Sub section (6) has been newly added for reasons see post.

1202 Scope of section—The series of sections 435-439 must be read together. Of these section 435 is the principal section dealing with the grounds upon which revisional jurisdiction may ordinarily be exercised—15 Cal 608. Secs 435-438 prescribe the method by which the records of any Criminal case come to the High Court and the power of the High Court to deal with the record is in Sec 439. Secs 435-438 provide the machinery and sec 439 gives the power to dispose of the record—36 Mad 275. The words 'the record of which has been called for by itself' refer to sec 435, and the words 'which has been reported for orders' refer to sec 438.

Section 439 must be read along with and subject to section 435 if a case is outside the scope of section 435 section 439 cannot apply to it.
4 Cal 438

'Any proceeding'—Under the old Code of 1872, the words used in this section were 'judicial proceeding' instead of the words 'any proceeding', and the High Court could call for and revise the record of a judicial proceeding only, but under the Code of 1882 (as well as under the present Code) the High Court can call for and examine the record of 'any proceeding' e.g., an order by a Magistrate under sec 517 below—2 Weir 538

High Court should not be moved in the first instance—See Note 1168 under section 435, under heading "To whom application should be made"

1203 Grounds of interference:—The controlling power of revision of the High Court in criminal cases is an extraordinary power and it must be exercised with due regard to the circumstances of each particular case, anxious attention being given to the said circumstances which vary greatly. This discretion ought not to be crystallized, as it would become in course of time, by one Judge attempting to prescribe definite rules with a view to bind other Judges in the exercise of the discretion which the Legislature has committed to them. This discretion like all other judicial discretions ought as far as practicable, to be left untrammelled and free, so as to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case—28 Bom 533. No hard and fast limitation should be placed on the exercise of the powers of superintendence of the High Court over the proceedings of inferior Courts. There is no species of injustice which the High Court would be powerless to correct, where its interference is called for—14 M L T 200 12 C W N 678. The circumstances which will justify the interference of High Court have not been and cannot be laid down with precision. While the Judges have repeatedly held that only when exceptional grounds exist the High Court ought to interfere the decided cases shew that no hard and fast rule can be laid down but that when in the interests of justice the High Court's intervention becomes necessary it ought not to be refused—Ramanathan v Subrahmanya 47 Mad 722 (125)

(1) Sections 435 and 439 give the High Court power to control the propriety as well as the legality of a finding sentence or order of any inferior Criminal Court. That necessarily imports a power to regulate or revise the proceedings leading up to any such finding sentence or order. If therefore a sentence has been passed or confirmed by a Court which could not legally try or should not properly have tried the case the High Court has a discretion to interfere—9 N L R 81

(2) When an illegal order is passed and action taken by a Magistrate which involves matters coming within the purview of law and justice and within the scope of authority of the Court, such authority cannot be ousted by the mere plea of the Magistrate that he was not acting as a judicial officer but in his executive capacity, and the High Court can interfere in revision—1908 P R 4

(3) The High Court can interfere in revision on the ground of misreading of documentary evidence and fundamental errors in principle which vitiate the conduct and disposal of the case—Emp v Bal Gangadhar Tilak 28 Bom 479

(4) The High Court will interfere with an order of a Magistrate passed without jurisdiction under a certain Act, even though that Act provides that the conviction under it shall not be open to appeal or revision—2 S L R 20 Thus, although sec 15 of the Extradition Act ousts the jurisdiction of the High Court to inquire into the propriety of a warrant issued under Chapter III of that Act yet where the order was made clearly without jurisdiction, it is open to revision by the High Court at the instance of the party whose liberty is affected by it—14 Cr L J 673 (Cal), 7 Bom L R 463

(5) The High Court can exercise its power of revision even after the expiry of the sentence, and though it is not possible to interfere with the sentence because it has expired, the law does not prevent the High Court from interfering with the conviction—7 All 135

(6) The High Court has the power and the right to call for the record of a case and make such order thereon as it deems just even though the applicant is dead—2 Bom 564 [Contr—1893 P R 6, where it is held that an application for revision abates on the death of the applicant]. Sec 431 (as amended in 1898) allows an appeal from a sentence of fine after the death of the appellant, and similarly the High Court can exercise its power of revision, even after the death of the applicant, in a case where compensation has been awarded under section 250 such compensation being in the nature of a fine—1908 P R 24 see also 1919 P R 8 (cited under sec 431)

(7) The High Court has ample power to interfere, should it see fit to do so, in any case in which the Magistrate has either refused to exercise a discretion vested in him by the law or has exercised that discretion in an improper manner or on improper grounds—19 Cal 32 2 Cal 110 So also, where the Magistrate acted in his character as Magistrate believing he had power to do so, whereas in fact he had no such power, his act is liable to be set aside in revision upon the application of the party aggrieved—1866 P R 21 1870 P R 4

(8) The High Court can in revision reverse the proceedings of a Magistrate on the ground of disqualification of the Magistrate in a particular case, owing to personal or pecuniary interest or bias—1884 P R 40

(9) The High Court can interfere in revision where the procedure followed by the Magistrate has been improper and faulty e g where the Magistrate based his decision not upon the evidence recorded but on unrecorded evidence taken verbally subsequently on the spot—24 W R 14, or where the Magistrate negligently omitted to record the evidence of previous conviction and convicted and sentenced the accused—1874 P R 12, 1879 P R 28, or where the inquiry in the Lower Court has been faulty—12 Bom 377

(10) The High Court will interfere in revision when there is a material error in the proceedings, which means not an error in decision upon the facts, but some error in law or procedure which affects the decision—20 W R 41 Thus, where there is a substantial doubt as to the guilt of the accused, it is a material error not to give the accused the benefit of a doubt, and the High Court can interfere and acquit the accused—W R 27, 1915 P W R 341 1875 P R 6 Where the Court has a wrong view of the facts through an error of law, e.g. where it places the burden of proof on the accused, contrary to the principles laid down in sec 101 of the Evidence Act, the High Court will interfere—Ratanlal 704 Where the evidence for the prosecution was weak and biased and it was possible that the accused did the act complained of (theft) under a bona fide belief that he had the right to the property, it was an error of law of the Magistrate not to have acquitted him and in revision the Chief Court set aside the conviction—1916 P W R 27 18 Cr I J 732 (Cal) An improper summing up by the Sessions Judge in which the Judge omitted to charge the jury as to the degree of credit to be given to a particular witness is an error in law which is a good ground for revision—5 W R 80 It is a material error to convict a person of being in possession of stolen property in the absence of evidence showing dishonest possession on the part of the accused especially where the theft is not recent—1875 P R 15 Omission to take a very material evidence offered by the accused is a material error which prejudices the accused, and the High Court can interfere—24 W R 60 Laxity and indifference on the part of the Sessions Judge in weighing and sifting the evidence is a material error which calls for revision—2 All 336 A defective investigation by the Magistrate is a material error which justifies interference of the High Court in revision—2 Weir 50

(11) The High Court will interfere where the order of the Lower Court was passed without recording sufficient evidence Where the evidence on record was insufficient to support a conviction the High Court in revision set aside an order of the Sessions Judge summarily rejecting the appeal and remanded the case for rehearing on the merits—10 C V 446 The High Court will also interfere where the Lower Court has failed to consider important evidence and has accepted certain other evidence without any critical examination 23 C W N 488

(12) The High Court can interfere with an order in a criminal case on the ground that inferences unfavourable to the accused and not warranted by the evidence had been drawn to the prejudice of the accused—18 Cr L J 116 (Bur)

1204 How powers of High Court can be invoked.—The High Court will interfere either by calling for the record under sec 435 or when the case has been reported to it for orders under sec 438, or when the case 'otherwise comes to its knowledge' The High Court may interfere in revision upon information in whatever way received—2 Mad 38 The powers conferred by this section are at all times to be exercised and they may be put in force not merely on matters coming before the Judge in Court but also on matters coming to his knowledge on reliable information—2 Weir 538 An official communication from Government for revision of a case is covered by the terms of this section, and the High Court can exercise its revisional powers when a case comes to the knowledge of the Court through an official communication direct from Government—188-1 W N 144 The High Court has power to interfere in revision on a matter being brought to its notice in any manner whatever, not necessarily by means of an application on the part of the person convicted It can interfere on information contained in a news paper or a placard on a wall or an anonymous post-card, if it considers that sufficient grounds have been established to justify its so doing. But where the convicted persons who might have appealed did not appeal or apply in revision because they (being non-co-operators) refused to recognize the authority of any Court established by British authority in India, the High Court should be loath to take action on an application for revision presented by a third party on his own responsibility and without authority from the convicts on whose behalf it was presented—In re Varam Prasad 45 All 128 (129)

Although the Court has power under sec 439 of the Code to call for cases not only on judicial information but also to deal with a case which otherwise comes to its knowledge, yet in most circumstances it is a right practice that the Judges should be moved in open Court—Ratanlal 577, 16 Bom 380

The High Court may exercise its power of revision upon the petition of a private person occupying the position of a complainant in the case in which revision is sought—2 Mad 38 2 All 448 2 S L R 25, 4 P L J 435

The High Court may also exercise its power on its own initiative—1912 P W R 7 2 Bom 364. The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court can be exercised suo motu even though the accused does not desire it—17 S L R 245

In case of acquittal the High Court can exercise its powers of revision on the application of a private prosecutor—2 All 448. Though as a Court of Appeal the High Court can consider an order of acquittal only on an appeal by the Local Government yet as a Court of revision it can deal with an original or appellate order of acquittal either when reported under sec 438 or whenever it may otherwise come to its knowledge. It can do so even on the application of a private prosecutor—27 Cal 320. See also 38 Cal 280 18 C W N 1244 23 C W N 609 1915 P W R 18, and 6 S L R 121 where the High Court entertained an application for revision preferred by the private complainant against the order of acquittal. The High Court ought to interfere with an order of acquittal at the instance of a private complainant especially in a case like defamation where the offence is of so personal a nature that the Local Government would seldom be willing to appeal from the acquittal—20 Cr L J 708 (Nag), 42 Cal 612 at p 616 (per Jenkins C J), Isutosh v Purna Chandra 50 Cal, 159 (163), so also in a case of insult—11 C L J 113. The High Court will also interfere where the order of acquittal was passed under sec 247 for non appearance of complainant—26 O C 282

In some cases, however, it has been held that the High Court has no power to revise an order of acquittal, except at the instance of the Local Government. Where no appeal has been preferred by the Local Government, an application for revision by a private person should be discouraged on public grounds—14 Mad 363, 24 All 346 5 N L R 4, 2 Weir 570, 2 Weir 571, 3 Bom 150, 8 Bom 197, 15 Bom 349 6 All 484, 20 All 459, 27 All 359 8 Cal 895, 22 Cal 164, 42 Cal 612, 2 Pat 708, v Han Charan, 26 Cr L J 516 (Pat) Damodar v Jugharsingh 26

1206 Orders which are subject to revision—(1) Order of a Presidency Magistrate—Under secs 423 and 439 the High Court has jurisdiction to set aside an order of discharge or dismissal of complaint passed by a Presidency Magistrate and to direct that the person improperly discharged should be committed for trial or to direct further inquiry into the complaint—27 Bom 84 20 C W N 1128 36 Cal 994, 26 Cr 1 746 28 Cal 652 In 27 Cal 126 6 C 1 J 705 and 33 Cal 128 it has been held that the High Court can interfere with an order of dismissal or discharge passed by a Presidency Magistrate not under this Code but under sec 15 of the Charter Act See Note 682 under sec 203

(2) Non appealable orders—The High Court's power of revision is not limited to orders from which an appeal would lie On the other hand, the High Court ought to rectify cases of injustice or illegality when the person affected is unable to appeal The High Court in revision can exercise its power of appeal with reference to any particular order, whether appealable or not—1885 P R 42

(3) Order granting bail—The proceeding in which it has to be determined whether the accused person should be admitted to bail is a judicial proceeding and is therefore cognizable by the High Court as a Court of Revision—6 Mad 63 But where a Sessions Judge, finding that there was no reasonable ground for believing that the accused was guilty, released him on bail under sec 497 the High Court would not interfere with such order in revision though it has power to do so—10 M L J 411 5 A L J 419 See notes under sec 497

(4) Order refusing to grant copies—Where the Magistrate refused to grant to the accused the copies of papers which were necessary for his defence the High Court in revision set aside the conviction on that ground—14 W R 77

(5) Preliminary or final order—It is competent to the High Court to call for the record of any proceeding in an inferior Criminal Court, and if necessary or expedient, to revise an order passed by such Court, whether of a preliminary or final nature—14 A L J 851, 1892 A W N 10 23 Cr L J 429 (Lrb) Thus, where a District Magistrate called upon a witness who gave evidence before him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for perjury, the High Court was competent to revise such order—14 A L J 851

So also, where a Magistrate, after dismissing a complaint without inquiry, passed an order calling upon the complainant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for bringing a false complaint, the High Court revised the preliminary order, though no final order directing the prosecution of the complainant had yet been passed—22 Cr L J 81 (All)

(2) Order under the Extradition Act—The Chief Court has no power under this section to interfere in respect of a warrant issued by a Political Agent in a Native State under Sec 7 of the Extradition Act (XV of 1903) either on the ground that there is no prima facie case against the petitioner or on the ground that the circumstances under which the officer was originally moved do not justify him in exercising his power under the said Act—1908 P W R 36 Where a warrant is issued by a Political Agent under sec 7 of the Extradition Act, its execution by the District Magistrate in accordance with the Act is an executive Act, and the High Court cannot interfere in revision with such execution But the High Court can interfere otherwise than by way of revision under sec 491—42 Cal 793

(3) Order sanctioning prosecution under sec 19—See Note 649 under section 197

(4) Orders of the High Court itself—A single Judge of the High Court has no power to revise an order passed by another single Judge in appeal, and to set aside the conviction even on the ground of discovery of new materials The only remedy is to refer the matter to the Local Government under Chapter XXIX of this Code—Emp v Kole, 45 All 143 (145) The judgment of the Division Bench of the High Court as well as the sentence is final, and the Court is functus officio as soon as the judgment is signed by the Judges, and the High Court or any Bench of it has no power to revise the sentence or interfere with it in any way—

14 Cal 4. So also, a Division Bench cannot revise an order of a single Judge of the High Court—1909 P R 4, 1909 P R 1, 7 All 672, 46 Mad 382. See notes under sec 369. The only exception is in a case under sec 434. See notes under that section, and 1909 P R 1 cited therein.

For other orders which are not open to revision see Note 1172 under sec 435.

1208 Powers of the High Court in revision:—Powers of an Appellate Court:—Sec 439 enumerates the powers which the High Court may exercise in revision, and it declares that in any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or reported for orders or otherwise comes to its knowledge, or on an application made by the complainant, the Court may in its discretion exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by certain preceding sections, among others by sec 423—27 Bom 84, 2 All 336 4 P F J 435. The nature of the powers that the High Court has in revision is the same as that which a Court of appeal has in the case of an appeal from any order against which an appeal is allowed by the Code—14 M L T 200. But a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate cannot while sitting in revision exercise the powers conferred by the Court on an appellate Court. Appellate powers are in revision conferred by sec 439 only on the High Court—20 Cal 633. But the High Court sitting as a Court of revision will not exercise the powers of an Appellate Court except on very exceptional grounds—8 Bom 197. A High Court undoubtedly has jurisdiction to entertain a revision on grounds of fact but it is equally well established that this power should be very sparingly exercised. There is a well marked distinction between an application in revision and an appeal. It would be futile for the Legislature to grant the right of appeal in some cases and to withhold it in others, if the High Court under the guise of a revision were to allow conclusions of fact based on evidence to be canvassed and attacked on the footing of an appeal. Broadly speaking the rule is that the High Court will only entertain a revision on fact where either there is no evidence to support the finding or where the finding arrived at is perverse or such as no reasonable man could have arrived at on the evidence produced—Ibdu'l Lahid v Abdullah, 45 All (56) (661). Specially in a case where no appeal is allowed by the law, the High Court will not in revision exercise the powers of an Appellate Court except on very exceptional grounds—Ratanlal 244 9 Bom 1 R 706. The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court may be exercised in order to prevent gross and palpable failure of justice, but it should not be exercised in such a way that a right of appeal may practically be given in cases where such right is definitely excluded by the Code—Ihsanullah v Mansukh Ram 30 All 403. The High Court must not allow what would virtually be an appeal from the order of the Lower Court, in a non appealable case—10 N L R 177.

The High Court as a Court of revision has the power conferred on a Court of appeal by sec 423 to alter or return an order of the Lower Court—16 Cal 730. The High Court has also power to alter a conviction for one offence into a conviction for another offence, at the same time main turning the sentence passed—1887 A W N 95, et seq. where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate for an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the Chief Court interfered in revision and altered the conviction into one for an offence triable by a Magistrate—1869 P R 10 The High Court can quash the proceeding where there was an utter want of discretion on the part of the Magistrate in instituting the proceedings—1 C L R 268, or where no advantage would be gained by continuing the proceedings—16 A L J 734 The High Court quashed the conviction where it was not supported by any legal evidence, et seq. when the only evidence was the admission of a co-accused—1868 P R 14 The High Court can set aside a conviction where it was passed on an erroneous view of the law—27 Cal 320 But in setting aside a conviction which is bad in law, the High Court is not necessarily bound to go further into the question whether upon the facts established by the evidence a conviction of some lesser offence might not be recorded—41 All 587 But the High Court cannot interfere and set aside a valid conviction and sentence passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction after careful consideration—21 W R 47, 1884 P R 36, 20 W R 61

The High Court cannot direct the Subordinate Court to refrain from trying an accused person against whom such Court has issued process—Jharu Lal v Mahanth Madan Das, 2 Pat 257

The High Court in revision has power to order a retrial—5 M H C R App 10 But the High Court cannot as a Court of revision set aside the conviction and sentence passed by a Magistrate of competent jurisdiction with a view to direct a retrial on the ground that subsequent to the conviction it becomes known that the accused was previously convicted—1884 P R 36 Where evidence of the previous conviction of the accused for a similar offence was not adduced at the trial the High Court refused to interfere in revision and to order a retrial to enable the prosecution to supplement the record by producing fresh evidence bearing on the question of punishment—1905 P R 19 1874 P R 13 It would not be proper to order a retrial and thus to allow the prosecution to shape its case afresh, after the whole matter has been thrashed out and the defects in the prosecution case brought to light in the course of prolonged appellate and revision proceedings—Hedar Nath v A. F. 29 C W N 408 41 C L J 172 26 Cr L J 849

The High Court when acting as a Court of Revision can order a commitment for trial to the Court of Session after reversing the finding and sentence—15 All 205 Where the evidence discloses a more serious offence not within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, the High Court may quash the conviction and sentence for the minor offence and direct a commitment for trial before a tribunal having jurisdiction for the graver offence—7 M H C R App 5 20 C W N 732, 23 C W N 1031 Where the accused has been improperly discharged, the High Court has power to set aside the order of discharge and to direct that the person improperly discharged be arrested and forthwith committed for trial—27 Bom 84, 6 All 40

1209. Power to direct further evidence to be taken—Under this section the High Court has power to direct further evidence to be taken—3 Bom I R 677 19 W R 56 The High Court under sec 439 has power as an Appellate Court to direct evidence to be taken. No such powers are given to the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate under sec 436—6 C I J 251 Where a Magistrate omitted to set out in the charges the previous convictions of the accused the Chief Court in revision directed that the charge should be amended by adding the previous convictions and also directed that evidence with regard to these convictions should be recorded—18,9 P R 19 1879 P R 28

The High Court has also power under this section to call for additional evidence upon which the High Court can itself come to a conclusion but this section does not give the High Court power to call for a finding of the Magistrate—17 Cr I J 767 (Mad)

1210. Power to go into the facts—The High Court in revision is not confined to questions of law alone but can also deal with questions of fact—18,34 A W N 207 20 A I J 276 If the Judges in revision think it right to consider the whole evidence they have power to do so—14 Cal 361, Ratanilil 908

The High Court can go into the facts when the Lower Court has totally misconceived the evidence and come to an obviously wrong conclusion—14 Bom 115 The High Court in revision does not decide the balance of credibility between two conflicting sets of witnesses or two conflicting issues of fact but it may be compelled to dissent from a finding of fact which is either perverse or has been arrived at contrary to well established principles of law—United Sugar v Emp 21 A L J 46, The High Court will interfere where the finding of fact is contrary to the mass of un rebutted evidence and there is a clear case of miscarriage of justice—Emp v Sarju Prasad 27 O C 290 11 O I J 330 25 Cr L J 1066 The High Court can go into the facts of the case where evidence which is not admissible has been wrongly admitted (1 P I T 121) or where the evidence has not been considered from the right point of view, e.g. where the evidence of accomplices was regarded as that of ordinary witnesses—2 C W N 672 Where the construction of a document upon which the guilt or innocence of the accused largely depends is erroneous the High Court has power to go into the facts fully—1905 P R 12 Where evidence against the accused is weak, suspicious and inconclusive the High Court can, on its revision side, examine and discuss the evidence on record and upset the findings of fact of the Lower Courts—1907 P W R 20 Where the Lower Courts have failed to scrutinize carefully the proof of corroboration of accomplice evidence the High Court in revision entered into the evidence and set aside the concurrent findings of fact of both the Lower Courts—1911 P W R 3 The High Court as a Court of Revision has power to re-examine the evidence if there are prima facie good grounds for doing so, especially where the accused has been given a non appealable sentence and has no means of vindicating his character except in revision—19 Cr L J 666 (Nag) See also 45 All 656 cited under Note 1208 ante

Where the judgment of the Appellate Court is a merger one and shows that the Appellate Court has not gone thoroughly into the questions dealt with at the trial by the first Court, the High Court will in revision investigate the original trial to see whether the nature of the procedure and the decision arrived at were such as to leave no doubt that the accused had a fair trial and that the decision was given according to law—20 Cr L J 370 (All)

But though the High Court has power to revise findings of fact arrived at by the Lower Courts and the law imposes no limits to this jurisdiction (14 Bom 331 10 Cal 1047 10 Bom 131), still it is not bound to do so if it does not think fit and will not exercise such a discretionary power unless there appears on the face of the judgment or order complained of or on the record some ground to induce the Court to think that the evidence ought to be examined in order to see that there has been no failure of justice—22 Cal 998 The High Court is always averse to interfering on facts by way of revision as it would tend to remove the difference specifically laid down by the statute between appeal and revision—Hafiz Khan v Emp 1 Oudh W N 878 It is unusual in revision to disturb a finding of fact unless it is so manifestly erroneous that a miscarriage of justice would result from its being uncorrected—6 Bom L R 1096 Id Zabur v A, E 9 O L J 488 Hiranand v Emp 17 S L R 245 25 Cr 1 J 134 The High Court has the power to go into evidence in revision but it is the practice of the High Court not to go into evidence as a rule and the Court will not interfere unless there are special circumstances or unless there is an error of law—28 Bom 533 Ratanlal 244 Ordinarily the High Court will not in revision go behind the concurrent findings of the Courts below on a question of fact—24 Cr L J 476 (Mad) Tabis v Emp 26 Cr L J 393 6 Lah L J 326 When the Appellate Court has dealt with the evidence carefully and has not omitted to consider any relevant or important portion of the evidence the High Court will not interfere in revision with the finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court—Gajo Singh v Emp, 4 P L T 265 The uniform practice of the High Court is not to exercise its power of upsetting a finding of fact, except for some extraordinary reason and the circumstance that the High Court itself might have come to a different conclusion is not such a reason—14 Bom 115 The High Court in revision will not interfere with a finding of fact of the Lower Court where the decision of that Court on the facts is not shown to be clearly or manifestly wrong—14 Bom 331, 18 Cr L J 437 (Cal) The High Court will refuse to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction with regard to findings of fact, except on very exceptional grounds such as a misstatement of evidence by the Lower Court or the misconstruction of documents, or placing by that Court on the accused the onus of proof contrary to the law of evidence—12 Bom L R 21 The jurisdiction of the High Court to go into questions of fact should be exercised in very exceptional cases such as where there has been a conviction of a clearly innocent person—8 Bom L R 851 When the High Court sets aside a conviction as being bad in law, it is not necessarily bound to go further into the question whether upon the facts established by the evidence a conviction of some lesser offence might or might not be recorded—41 All 587

1211 Power to allow composition:—The High Court as a Court of Revision has power to give effect to the compounding of offences which the parties have agreed to after conviction—1904 P L R 252, 32 All 153, 45 All 17, 17 O C 92 Where the parties have lawfully compounded the offence, the High Court may set aside the conviction—13 O C 161 This is now expressly provided by the new subsection (5A) of Section 345 added by the Amendment Act of 1923 In 18 C W N 1212, 43 Cal 1143, 3 P L T 458, 39 Mad 604 11 A L J 13 15 A I J 467 and 1918 P R 35 it was held that the High Court had no power to allow composition in revision These cases are no longer good law

1212 Power to order restoration of property:—The High Court in its revisional jurisdiction has the power under section 423 (d) of making any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just and proper An accused person may upon his acquittal by the High Court in revision be restored to possession of the property of which he has been deprived in favour of the complainant—27 All 415 The High Court may in the exercise of its revisional powers pass an order under Sec 517 to refund the money received by false pretences—15 Cr L J 555 (Bur)

1213 Power to consider case of non appealing accused:—Where two or more persons have been convicted by the Sessions Judge and one of them has appealed the High Court has power under Sec 439 to deal with the case of the accused persons not appealing against their conviction while considering and trying the appeal preferred by the other accused clause (5) of this section does not in any way affect the jurisdiction of the High Court to deal with the case of the non appealing accused—5 C W N 330 31 C L J 305 1893 A W N 51 Raghu v King Emp 5 P I J 430 1916 P W R 7 1909 P W R 14, Allah Ditta v Crown 25 Cr I J 435 (Lah) Where four persons were convicted and three of them were awarded non appealable sentences, and on appeal by the other the conviction of all of them is found to be wrong the High Court has power under this section to deal with and set aside the conviction even as regards those who have not appealed—1891 A W N 149, 39 All 549, 31 C L J 305 Similarly where there are several convicted persons and one only of them has applied for revision the High Court has power to deal with the convictions of all offenders who were tried together and convicted, though only one person has applied for revision—1909 P R 9 (1911) 2 M W N 170

1214 Power to expunge remarks from Lower Courts' judgment:—In a Bombay case a Sessions Judge in convicting the accused passed certain remarks about the complainant, a police officer, as a result of which he was dismissed from service He thereupon applied to the High Court to delete the remarks from the judgment of the Sessions Judge It was held dismissing the application that it would be an extraordinary exercise of the powers of the High Court, to expunge from the Lower Court's judgment the remarks complained of—19 Bom L R 912 In a recent case of the Allahabad High Court it has been held that the High Court cannot do so even under section 423 (d) read with section 439 because the 'amendment' mentioned in section 423 (d) means an amendment of the main order, and the incidental or consequential order means an order incidental to and consequential upon the main order, that is, the High Court can make an amendment or pass an incidental or consequential order only when there has been an appeal or revision petition against the main order, but where the main order passed by the Lower Court has not been appealed against the High Court cannot entertain any application for expunging certain remarks made by the Lower Court in its judgment—44 All 401. But where there has been an appeal or revision petition against the order of the Lower Court, the High Court in dealing with the whole evidence of the case and considering the judgment can expunge any improper remarks made in it by the Court below. This will be evident from 2 C W N 221, 15 Cr L J 420 (Oudh), and 5 Bur L T 20. In 4 Bur L T 173 the Chief Court held that it had power to expunge the objectionable passage from the Lower Court's judgment, though it refused to do so.

But section 561A (newly added by the Amendment Act of 1923) gives inherent power to the High Court to make any order to secure the ends of justice, and thus to expunge any objectionable remarks from the Lower Court's judgment, irrespective of the fact whether there has or has not been an appeal or revision petition against the main order. Thus, in Amar Nath v Crown 5 Lah 476 (481) 26 Cr L J 463, where a Sessions Judge made certain unwarranted remarks about the testimony of a Police witness and that witness applied to the High Court in revision to expunge those remarks from the judgment of the Sessions Judge, the High Court directed those remarks to be expunged, although there was no revision petition in the main case in which that witness gave his evidence. So also, where one of two accused tried together by a Magistrate was acquitted and the Sessions Judge, in an appeal preferred by the other accused against his conviction passed certain remarks about the acquitted person impugning the correctness of the acquittal and that person applied to the High Court to expunge those remarks, the High Court ordered the remarks to be expunged, although no revision petition was made in the main case—Ibdu'l Kar v Emp. 25 Cr L J 1245 (Lah). The Bombay and Allahabad cases cited above must be deemed as overruled by sec 561A. See also, Benarsi Das v Crown, 6 Lah 166 26 P D R 315 26 Cr L J 1326, where the High Court expunged certain remarks in a Magistrate's judgment about a person who was not a party or a witness in the proceedings.

1215 Power to interfere in a pending case:—Under section 435 the High Court can call for and examine the records of any proceeding of an inferior Criminal Court not only to satisfy itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order of such Court but also as to the regularity of any proceedings of that Court. Thus, section 435 does not deal merely with the finding, sentence or order but with proceedings generally, and the power of the High Court extends to calling for and examining the record of any proceedings for satisfying itself as to the regularity of such proceedings, and for that purpose it has power to interfere at any stage of the proceedings in a pending trial. Thus it can interfere when the proceedings before the inferior Court have not proceeded any further beyond the issue of summons—Pamanathu v Subrahmanya 47 Mad 722 (723) 47 M L J 373 25 Cr L J 1009 Q E v Nageshappa 20 Bom 543 (545). The High Court can interfere with a case while it is still pending in the subordinate Court and can quash the proceedings if the materials before the Magistrate disclose no offence and no useful purpose would be served by continuing the proceedings—Hari Charan v Girish Chandra 38 Cal 68 (74) 13 C L J 43, 11 Cr L J 525 Emp v Krishna Rao 6 N L J 119. The High Court can interfere at as early a stage as when the accused has been summoned to show cause why sanction (under sec 193) should not be granted for his prosecution—Q E v Jagan Singh 1892 A W N 102, Chadha v Emp 14 A L J 831. The High Court can interfere with the proceedings of a Magistrate while they are in the interlocutory stage pending investigation, and may suspend such proceedings even without having the record before it—20 W R 23. The High Court can pending trial interfere with the interlocutory order of a Magistrate refusing to summon certain witnesses for the defence—1901 P L R 130. The High Court can interfere pending trial when the Subordinate Magistrate improperly declines to record any evidence tendered—1904 P L R 257. The High Court can interfere and set aside an Interlocutory order of a Magistrate refusing to let in evidence—8 S L R 238. The High Court can interfere when the case has reached the stage when a charge has been framed and only the defence of the accused remains to be heard—Jagat Chandra v Q E 26 Cal 786. If a charge is framed where no charge should have been framed the proceeding of the Magistrate becomes irregular and the High Court has power to interfere under this section as well as under section 561A during the pendency of the case to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court and to secure the ends of justice—Gokul Prasad v Debi Prasad 23 A L J 21 26 Cr L J 748 A I R 1925 All 311 Harendra v Jotish 40 C L J 283 26 Cr L J 545 A I R 1925 Cal 100. Where the trial was vexatious and protracted one, and in trial injury was thereby likely to be caused to the accused the High Court interfered during the pendency of the trial and set aside the charge—In re Kuppaswami 33 Mad 561 28 M L J 503 16 Cr L J 477. Where it was brought to the notice of the High Court that a person had been subjected over two months to the harassment of an illegal prosecution, it was the duty of the High Court to interfere during the pendency of the trial—Chandi Pershad v Ibdur Rahman 22 Cal 131. Where it was found that proceedings were instituted against a person under sec 110 for the third time though on both the previous occasions he was acquitted and no new evidence was forthcoming, the High Court interfered and quashed the proceedings—1910 P R 33 2 A L J 673. Where the notice and interlocutory order of a Magistrate under sec 112 were defective and could not form the basis of a proceeding under Sec 110 the High Court interfered and set aside the proceedings so far taken by the Magistrate—1910 P W R 18.

But though the High Court has power to interfere with pending proceedings at any stage, it will not do so except only under rare and exceptional circumstances—Chaa Lal v Inant Parshad 25 Cal 233, 1 S L R 30 39 Mad 561, Mahomed v Md Idris 26 Cr L J 1101 (Sind), Madhab v Emp. 26 Cr L J 1093 (Nag), and unless there is some manifest and patent injustice apparent on the face of the proceeding and calling for prompt redress—Jagat Chandra v Q E. 26 Cal 786, 20 Cr L J 764, 21 Cr L J 343 (Nag) The High Court will allow the proceedings in the Subordinate Court to go on and take their course and will not interfere with a pending proceeding (even though it is irregularly conducted) unless there is exceptional ground for interference—25 Cal 233, 20 Cr L J 30 (Cal) In re Sami Goundan 20 L W 937 26 Cr L J 421 Thus, the High Court will not interfere with the conduct of a case on the ground that the written complaint did not fully describe the offence, if the complainant stated in his deposition the description of such offence—1899 A W N 212 The High Court will not interrupt the course of a trial by interfering in interlocutory matters Thus, it will not interfere with a decision of a Magistrate that he has jurisdiction in a case If the High Court has to decide in the midst of the trial held in a Magistrate's Court as to whether he has jurisdiction or not it would be interfering in a most improper manner on a point which may conclusively have to be decided on appeal—Lashi Ram v Dikshit 3 O W N 104 27 Cr L J 191 The High Court will rarely interfere in the midst of a trial and order commitment, unless it is shown that the failure on the part of the Magistrate to commit is extremely improper—Bilodar v A E 3 O W N 201 27 Cr L J 417 The High Court will interfere with a pending trial only when it is satisfied that an interference is necessary and that any delay in the rectification of the error will cause waste of time or a miscarriage of justice—1904 P R 8

1216 Power to enhance sentence—This is a power which is not conferred by sec 423 and the High Court can exercise this power not as an Appellate Court but only in revision Thus, in an appeal against a conviction by a prisoner, the High Court dismissed the appeal as an Appellate Court, but enhanced the sentence as a Court of Revision—11 Cal 530

A private party is not entitled to apply to the High Court to enhance a sentence passed by a subordinate Court A District Magistrate or Sessions Judge or the Government Pleader may draw the attention of the High Court to a sentence with a view to its being enhanced The High Court may also of its own motion send for the record and take action with a like object But it is not for a private complainant to apply to the High Court for this purpose If he considers a sentence unduly lenient, he should draw the attention of the Government to the fact—In re Nagji Dula 48 Bom 358 (360) 26 Bom L R 181 25 Cr L J 966

Where an accused's revision petition from his conviction has been dismissed the High Court can entertain a second revision petition from the complainant or a reference from a District Magistrate (sec 438) for enhancement of the sentence The disposal of the first revision petition is no bar to the disposal of the second revision petition or reference, though arising out of the same original trial, because the Judge disposing of the revision petition filed by a convicted person against the propriety of his conviction cannot be said to be adjudicating on the question of enhancing the sentence or that the matter of the second proceeding cannot be said to be of the nature of res judicata. It cannot be accepted as a sound principle that once the High Court has passed any order in a criminal revision it is functus officio and is precluded from entertaining any further revision petition or reference in the same case or from proceeding suo motu—In re Sayed Anif 26 Cr L J 583 A I R 1925 Mad 993

The High Court has power to enhance a sentence so as to alter its nature—6 All 622. The effect of secs 423 and 439 read together is that the High Court when hearing an appeal against a conviction may alter the finding under sec 423 and then as a Court of Revision may enhance the sentence under this section so as to make the sentence appropriate to the altered finding—37 Mad 119. Thus where a Sessions Judge convicted the accused of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and sentenced him to seven years rigorous imprisonment the High Court in revision altered the conviction to one of murder and sentenced him to transportation for life—1871 P R 11.

An enhancement of sentence is a serious proceeding and the High Court will not interfere as a Court of Revision in order to enhance the sentence if the sentence passed by the Lower Court involves substantial punishment, and should interfere only if the sentence is manifestly inadequate—1889 P R 7, 1898 P R 17, Sitaram v Emp 12 O L J 421 2 O W N 550 26 Cr L J 1364 10 S L R 207. And for this purpose the High Court should see whether there is matter on the record of the case showing that the sentence passed is clearly inadequate to the offence—Emp v Mahadeo 26 Cr L J 821 (Nag). The mere fact that the High Court would have inflicted a heavier punishment if the case had come before it for trial is not a proper ground for enhancement of sentence—1919 P R 7 Sitaram v Emp (Supra). It is not merely because circumstances occur to the High Court which would render necessary a more severe sentence or a different charge that the High Court will interfere there must be matter on the record of the case showing that the charge has been improperly framed or that the sentence passed is clearly inadequate to the offence—20 W R 22.

Where evidence of previous conviction was not adduced at the trial but was discovered after the conviction the High Court will not interfere and order a retrial in order to enable the prosecution to supplement the record by producing fresh evidence bearing on the question of punishment—1905 P R 19 1884 P R 36 1905 P R 43. Similarly, a valid conviction arrived at by the Magistrate will not be set aside simply because subsequent to the trial and conviction fresh evidence has been discovered which may tend to convict the accused of an offence other than that for which he was convicted—21 W R 47.

The High Court will not interfere in revision to enhance the sentence when the convicted person has undergone the full term of his imprisonment or has paid the fine imposed upon him even though the order of the Court below is clearly wrong in law—1913 P W R 29, 1909 P W R 14 1 Irb 453. The High Court is slow to interfere in cases where interference would involve the imprisonment of persons already d from jail—1889 P R 7 The power of enhancement under this section should not be exercised in cases where the Magistrate's order was proper on the materials before him, and it is not fair to the accused to reverse the conviction and direct him to be committed to the Sessions after he has undergone the full term of imprisonment inflicted by the Magistrate, merely because his previous convictions were not known at the time of his trial by the Magistrate—9 S L R 93

The power of enhancement conferred on the High Court under sec 439 is limited only by clause (3) of this section. This clause does not regard the difference in the powers of the trying Magistrate under sec 32 but lays down that in cases of sentences passed by Magistrates not empowered under sec 34, the limit of enhancement shall be the sentence that might have been inflicted by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class. Therefore the High Court has power to enhance the sentence of imprisonment to two years—9 S L R 82. The High Court has the power to inflict any punishment which might have been inflicted for the offence by a first class Magistrate and is not limited to the powers of the trying Magistrate—1 Lah 453. The words 'enhance the sentence' presuppose that a sentence has been imposed by the Lower Court. Therefore where no sentence has been passed by the trying Magistrate but the accused has been released on probation under sec 562 of the Code, the High Court cannot substitute a sentence of imprisonment or whipping in revision—20 Cr L J 99 (Oudh) 37 All 31.

Lastly, the power of enhancement of sentence can be exercised under this section where the sentence passed by the Magistrate is a legal one. A retrospective sentence of imprisonment for the period already passed by the accused in the lock up is not a legal sentence—1919 P R 27.

1217 Procedure if two Judges differ.—If two learned Judges of the High Court differ in a Criminal Revision case, sec 439 read with sec 429 requires the case to be decided by a third Judge, and precludes any further appeal under the Letters Patent or any reference to a Full Bench under the rules of the Court—40 All 976. But where an application is made to the High Court not under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but under sec 107 of the Government of India Act, Section 439 of the Code cannot apply and consequently sec 429 (which is referred to in sec 439) is also not applicable and therefore if in such a case there is a difference of opinion between the Judges, the provisions of sec 36 of the Letters Patent will apply, and the decision of the senior Judge will prevail—47 Cal 438.

1218 Subsection (2)—Notice to accused.—The language of this subsection is mandatory and it is clearly enacted as an exception to section 440. An order of enhancement of sentence is an order to the prejudice of the accused and if such an order is passed without giving the accused an opportunity of being heard, it is more than an irregularity and the order so passed is without jurisdiction—11 A Scia Naidu 47 Mad 428 (432). King Emp v Romesh Chandra 22 C W N 168 Ratnani 179. Where a case comes to the knowledge of the High Court by an appeal having been filed against a conviction, it is not desirable, if the appeal is admitted, to issue a notice at the same time to enhance the sentence. It seems to be absolutely incongruous that the High Court in the same breath should admit the appeal of the accused, and issue notice calling upon him to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. The notice should issue after the appeal has been dismissed after being dealt with on the merits—Mangil Varan v Emp 49 Bom 420 27 Bom L R 355 26 Cr L J 968 A I R 1923 Bom 268. Where notice has been issued to the accused to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, and at the hearing neither the accused nor his counsel is present, the High Court cannot pass an order enhancing the sentence—Parasram v Emp 26 Cr L J 543 (Oult).

Where a complainant applied to the High Court under sec 439 to revise an order of a first class Magistrate ordering payment of compensation (under sec 250) to the accused, the High Court refused to pass any order where it appeared that the accused was dead and could not therefore be served with notice—Ratind 634.

A High Court may by virtue of sec 421 issue a warrant of arrest without previous notice to the accused because a warrant of arrest is not an order to the prejudice of the accused within the meaning of this subsection—8 L B R 290.

1219 Subsection 14)—Interference with orders of acquittal.—

As to the powers of High Court to revise orders of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor or on a reference under sec 438 see Note 1204 under heading. How powers of High Court can be invoked.

When the Government has not appealed the High Court will not interfere with an order of acquittal except in extreme cases and under exceptional circumstances whether it is moved by the District Magistrate or by a private party—42 Mad 109 Jaita v Parshottam 25 Bom L R 488 Khem Chand v. Lahu 3 Bur 1 J 323 26 Cr L J 511.

Though the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision with an acquittal it shall ordinarily exercise this jurisdiction sparingly and only in serious cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice to prevent a gross miscarriage of justice—19 A I J 589, 42 Cal 612 Natesu v Emp 28 M I J 630 39 Mad 505 Parakanakkan v Imur 20 I W 32 26 Cr L J 249 45 Mif 913 19 A L J 382, 6 All 484 41 Bom 560 Mehr v Nur Md 4 P I R 644 26 Cr L J 1596 25 Cr L J 1266 (Pat) Siban Rai v Thugwant 5 Pat 25 6 P L J 833 U B R (1917) 2nd Qr 19. Thus the High Court will interfere on the application of a private complainant where a Magistrate acquitted the accused disregarding the uncontradicted evidence and facts admitted which proved the guilt of the accused and acted illegally in trying a warrant case as a summons case—15 M I J 225. Where the trying Magistrate, in his judgment of acquittal while laying great stress on all considerations that might affect the credibility of the witnesses for the prosecution, omitted to consider what might be advanced in their favour, and also failed to appreciate the corroborative value of an important witness for the prosecution the High Court set aside the order of acquittal and directed a retrial—Shah Haru v. Raika Singh 18 C W N 1244 The High Court will interfere in revision and set aside an acquittal where the acquittal is the result of an alleged composition which turns out to be invalid—Harnam v. Sam Das 24 Cr I J 120, e. g. where the Magistrate acquitted the accused by allowing the parties to compound a non-compoundable case—24 Cr I J 186 (Oudh) The High Court will not hesitate to interfere where the acquittal is based on a manifest error in law appearing on the face of the judgment—Ahmedabad Municipality v. Manganiyal 9 Bom I R 156 6 A I J 758 1 All 139 The High Court will interfere where the order of acquittal was not passed on the merits but was made on account of the death of the complainant—Jitan v. Domoo Sahu 1 P L J 264 20 C W N 862 18 Cr L J 151 The High Court can in revision set aside an order of acquittal passed by the Lower Court where the judgment of that Court is very summary and contains no discussion of the case or distinct findings on the questions involved—Nabin Chandra v. Rajendra 18 Cr I J 519 (Cal) The High Court will exercise its power to set aside an acquittal, where there has been no trial or where there has been a denial of the right of fair trial—Siba Rai v. Bhagwant 5 Pat 25 6 P L T 833 27 Cr L J 235 Where there were grave irregularities in procedure and the trial was conducted in an atmosphere of prejudice the High Court interfered with an order of acquittal—25 C W N 609 (Khoreal shooting case) The High Court will interfere in certain exceptional circumstances where a matter of public importance is involved—24 O C 57 An application for revision against an order of acquittal may appropriately be allowed when legal points alone are involved—Croan v. Thamman 1918 P R 8 The High Court ought to interfere with an order of acquittal at the instance of a private complainant when the offence is of so personal a character (e. g. defamation, insult) that the Local Government will seldom be willing to appeal from the acquittal—20 Cr L J 708 (Nag) 11 C I J 113 But the mere fact that the High Court if it were sitting as a Court of Appeal would have come to a different conclusion of fact is no ground for exercising revisional jurisdiction upon a petition against an order of acquittal—39 Mad 503 35 M L J 518 When the acquittal of an accused is based on some such reason as is given in sec. 330 (p) or where an incurable irregularity has occurred or a failure of justice that the High Court can interfere—5 N I R 4 2 I W 1244 The High Court should not interfere with an order of acquittal when the question is merely as to the appreciation of doubtful evidence, and there is no patent error or defect in the order of acquittal passed by the Lower Court resulting in grave injustice—39 Mad 505 35 M L J 518 When the acquittal of an accused is based on a finding of fact the High Court will not interfere in revision—Crown v. Harphul 1 Lah I J 42 26 P I R 38 26 Cr I J 689 Where the trial Court has acquitted the accused after giving due weight to all the evidence on the record the High Court will not interfere—Mehr Aur Md v. Nur Md 7 Lah I J 367 26 P L R 644 26 Cr I J 1596 Where the Magistrate took one view of the oral evidence and the Sessions Judge took the opposite view and there was no legal point or question of jurisdiction involved, held that there was no ground for interference with the order of acquittal—Ahem Chand v. Lala, 3 Bur L J 323, 26 Cr L J 511. A mere error of procedure is not by itself a good ground for setting aside an acquittal—25 Cr L J 1266 (Pat.), thus an omission by the Appellate Court to serve the notice of appeal on the complainant or on the officer appointed under sec 422 is not a ground for setting aside the order of acquittal passed by the Appellate Court—Parakanakkan v. Amir, 20 L. W. 327, 26 Cr L J 249. The High Court will not interfere in revision with an order of acquittal passed by a Magistrate of competent jurisdiction who has taken a correct view of the law (e.g., an order of acquittal passed by a Magistrate on a prosecution for an alleged offence under sec 225B I P Code, irregularly instituted on a report sent in by a Munsif which was treated as a complaint—Emp v. Madho Singh, 47 All 409, 23 A L J 189, 26 Cr L J 865).

The above remarks equally apply to cases of revision against an order of discharge under sec 253 and the High Court would be unwilling or very reluctant to interfere with an order of discharge based on a consideration of all the prosecution evidence, when no evidence has been shut out and there is no illegality or irregularity in the procedure adopted by the trying Court, even if the High Court should on the materials on the record consider that it was a fit case for the framing of a charge and putting the accused on his defence—35 M L J 518.

The High Court has power in revision to reverse an order of acquittal but cannot convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction—9 All 134, 44 All 332 5 W R 2. When the lower Court has acquitted the accused when it ought to have convicted him, the High Court cannot convert the order of acquittal into one of conviction. After reversing the order of acquittal the proper order of the High Court must be one remanding the case to the lower Court and directing the retrial of the accused person—Ramkishor v. Gobind, 23 A L J 433, 26 Cr L J 970, 9 All 134, 22 Cr L J 97 (All), 19 A L J 389. Though the High Court, in exercising revisional powers against orders of acquittal, can go into the questions of fact still it cannot then and there convict but can only order a retrial—1908 P W R 22.

The only way of securing conviction in a case of acquittal is by an appeal by the Local Government against the order of acquittal—44 All 332.

An order under sec 471 is not an order of conviction. Therefore where the accused was acquitted by the Lower Court on the ground that he was insane, the passing of an order under sec 471 by the High Court in revision does not amount to an alteration of an order of acquittal into one of conviction within the meaning of this subsection—42 M L J. 72.

The acquittal contemplated by this subsection is a complete acquittal on all the facts and allegations charged, and not an acquittal on one charge and conviction on another. Therefore, where the accused has been convicted by the Magistrate of one offence and acquitted of another, in the same trial, the High Court has power in revision to convert the acquittal into conviction—Bhola v. A. E., 1904 P R 12. Subsection (4) of sec 439 refers to a case where the trial has ended in a complete acquittal, and on appeal, and afterwards as a Court of revision might set aside the sentence of 7 years' transportation and pass a legal sentence for murder

—5 W R 45

1221 Sub section (6);—This sub section did not exist in the Bills or Reports but has been added during the Debate in the Legislative Assembly on the motion of Mr Rangachari. It is intended to give a person, who has been brought to the bar of the High Court to answer why a sentence passed upon him should not be enhanced the right of showing by arguments a fortiori not only that the sentence should not be enhanced but that the whole conviction is wrong and should be set aside. This amendment enables the High Court not only to refuse an enhancement of sentence but also to set aside a conviction if the High Court finds that not only the sentence but the conviction also is equally unjustifiable.

The object of the amendment was thus stated by the mover: "Under the Code as it stands, the High Court has been given the power to enhance the sentence in case of persons who have been convicted by Lower Courts. Now, suppose the accused person takes the conviction and he does not care to appeal. Rather than undergo the expense of going to the High Court and appealing against the sentence, he rather suffers the sentence and keeps quiet. But the police are not satisfied with the sentence imposed by the Magistrate or Sessions Judge who tried the case. They say, he should have been given a longer sentence or a longer punishment, and therefore they drag the poor man to the High Court. When he appears before the High Court, it stands to reason that he should be able to say 'Well, I have been wrongly convicted, but you want to impose a heavier penalty now. I was content to let things alone, but here the police won't leave me alone they have dragged me to the High Court now let me establish my innocence. the case is not proved against me, the evidence is false. I want to establish that.' Sir, there are Judges and Judges. Here the luck of the accused depends upon the particular Judge who hears the particular case. If he is a Judge who is leniently disposed, he will say 'If you are not guilty, I am prepared to hear it', but there are other Judges who will say 'No, no, the conviction stands, you have not appealed or the time is up, you have got 30 or 60 days for you to appeal you have allowed the conviction to stand, now show cause why I should not inflict the heavier penalty which the police want. I have to ask you to show cause against enhancement.' Sir, it is an injustice to do that. We must not leave it to the sweet will and discretion of particular Judges to say whether they will hear that point or not. If the man is able to satisfy the revising authority that the man is entitled to acquittal, it is only right that the High Court should do so."—Legislative Assembly Debates 8th February 1923, page 2081.

Prior to this amendment, in cases that came up before the High Court for enhancement of sentence, it had been the practice to accept the conviction, and to consider the question of enhancement of sentence on that basis, see Emp v Chinto, 32 Bom 163 7 Cr I J 119 10 Bom 14 R 93. But this is no longer possible, the amendment is intended to give the accused person who has been brought to the bar of the High Court to answer why a sentence passed upon him should not be enhanced, the right of showing by argument a fortiori not only that the sentence should not be enhanced but that the whole evidence is wrong and should be set aside—Emp v Mahadga, 26 Cr L J 821 (Ag). But where an accused's revision petition from his conviction has been dismissed and then the District Magistrate makes a reference under sec 438, for enhancement of sentence, it seems that the accused would be precluded in the proceeding of the reference from re-agitating the question of the legality of the conviction, because the Court cannot decide again what it has decided once—In re Sayed Imf, 26 Cr L J 383 (Mad).

An accused person when showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced is entitled to show that the whole trial was illegal (e.g. as contravening the provisions of sec 234) though the question of illegality was not raised at the trial—Emp v Valant 49 Bom 892 27 Bom L R 1343 27 Cr L J 303 A I R 1926 Bom 110.

1222 Miscellaneous—Limitation—According to the practice of the High Court an application for revision in criminal cases must be presented within 60 days from the date of the order complained of exclusive of the time necessary for obtaining copies. This is not however an inflexible rule and in exceptional circumstances the rule may be departed from—43 Cal 1029.

Finding of fact—It is the practice of the High Court (Allahabad) in revision unless very strong ground for an opposite conclusion is found to exist to take the findings of the Lower Appellate Court and not of the first Court as the facts of the case—18 Cr L J 435 (All).

New plea in revision—An accused cannot be heard to urge a new plea entirely inconsistent with the one already raised by him during the trial unless he could establish that the case for the prosecution would not be believed and there is an element of doubt in it in which case the benefit of doubt must be given to the accused—18 Cr L J 435 (All).

Loss of record—The loss of a record after conviction is no ground for the acquittal of the accused in revision. In serious cases where the accused has been convicted and sentenced to a substantial punishment it may be that a retrial may be ordered—18 Cr L J 737 (Pat).

Rule to shew cause—A rule which is issued by the High Court in revision should be read with the judgments which were before the Court at the time it was granted and should be read reasonably in favour of the accused—2 C. W. N. 81.

How to shew cause—A Magistrate who is called upon by the High Court to show cause against a rule issued by the High Court must ask the Legal Remembrancer to appear for him and must not address the Registrar of the High Court by letter—4 Cal 20.

Duty of Magistrate showing cause—Though it is open to a Magistrate called upon to shew cause to submit his remarks in answer to the ground urged by the petitioner who obtained the rule, it is not open to him to submit observation- with a view to supplement or add to his judgment—7 C W N 839

440 No party has any right to be heard either personally or by pleader before any Court when exercising its powers of revision

Optional with Court to hear parties

Provided that the Court may, if it thinks fit, when exercising such powers, hear any party either personally or by pleader, and that nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect section 439, sub section (2)

1223 Scope of section—The rule in this section is the general rule provided by the Legislature and it must be taken as a legislative recision of the general principle that persons are entitled to be heard before any order affecting them to their prejudice can be made—10 Cal 268 Under this section it is open to the High Court to determine the question raised by a rule without hearing the counsel or pleader for or against the rule—10 C I J 80 The High Court can deal with the question whether the District Magistrate has properly exercised his power under sec 437 without giving notice to the accused or allowing him an opportunity of being heard—10 Cal 268

The provisions of this section apply only to revision and do not apply to the summary rejection of an appeal under sec 423 of this Code—12 C W N 248 This section does not apply to sec 437 (2), that is if an order is passed to the prejudice of the accused he must be heard either personally or by pleader

1224 No right to be heard—The revisional power of the High Court is exercised at its own discretion and no petitioner has a right to be heard—In re Ranga Rao 23 M L J 371 The accused is not entitled to be heard when an order under sec 436 is made directing a further inquiry into a summary rejection of complaint—14 Cal 608 (see also the other cases cited in Note 1184 under Sec 436) The High Court refused to hear counsel who appeared to support a petition for the revision of an acquittal—14 Mad 363 Where an accused person applied in revision to the High Court, and pending the revision he was let off on bail and thereafter he absconded held that the High Court would not hear his pleader in the revision application—Har Narain v Emp 24 Cr L J 240 (VII) In a reference under Sec 438 a counsel is not entitled to appear against the report—1 Bom 64 A private prosecutor cannot be allowed to appear on a reference to the High Court under sec 438 If he is heard at all he can be heard only with the permission of the Court—14 W R 51

But by virtue of the discretionary power given by the proviso the High Court always hears counsel in matters of importance—19 Cal 380 6 A L J 237

Court.

High Court under section 435, the Magistrate may submit with the record a statement setting forth the grounds of his decision or order and any facts which he thinks material to the issue, and the Court shall consider such statement before over-ruling or setting aside the said decision or order

1225 A statement filed under this section takes away any irregularity in the proceedings of a Magistrate caused by the omission to record reasons before referring a case under sec 202 or dismissing a complaint under sec 203—5 M L J 79

A statement submitted by a Presidency Magistrate under this section must be regarded as a completion of the record and possesses a conclusive character as against affidavits—12 Bom 37

This section does not abrogate the terms of section 263 or 370. It merely allows the Presidency Magistrate to supplement the reasons which have been already stated under sections 263 and 370. It does not apply where no reasons whatever have been recorded by the Presidency Magistrate. A Bench of Presidency Magistrates imposing a sentence of imprisonment for an offence must record their reasons for the conviction. The omission to do so in a case where no record of the evidence was taken is a grave irregularity. But having regard to the reasons for conviction disclosed in the record submitted by the Presidency Magistrate under this section the High Court in this case did not set aside the order of the Bench on the ground of the irregularity—In re Derwish Hossain 46 Mad 233

442 When a case is revised under this Chapter by the High Court's order to be certified to lower Court or Magistrate High Court it shall, in manner herebefore provided by section 425 certify its decision or order to the Court by which the finding, sentence or order revised was recorded or passed, and the Court or Magistrate to which the decision or order is so certified shall thereupon make such orders as are conformable to the decision certified, and, if necessary, the record shall be amended in accordance therewith

1226 Scope of section.—This section deals with every case which is revised under this Chapter by a High Court in other words it applies to all revisions whether under sec 435 or sec 439 and it provides that it shall certify its decision or order to the Lower Court, but it contains no such provision that it will certify its decision to itself. This shows that the High Court cannot revise any judgment passed by itself—1909 P R 4

SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS

CHAPTER XXVIII

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO CASES IN WHICH EUROPEAN AND INDIAN BRITISH SUBJECTS ARE CONCERNED

This Chapter has been added by the Criminal Law Amendment Act VII of 1923.

The procedure for the trial of cases in which racial considerations are involved is included in a new chapter which takes the place of the old Chapter XXXIII of the Code.

As regards the new Chapter XXXIII it will be observed that it applies to offences punishable with imprisonment which are alleged to have been committed outside a presidency-town. The first step to be taken to secure that such a case shall be tried under the provisions of the Chapter is a claim to be made by the accused person before the Magistrate. Unless such a claim is made at one of the stages indicated for the trial of a summons-case or of a warrant case, or for the inquiry preliminary to commitment, the provisions of the Chapter will not apply. The Magistrate then makes such inquiry as he thinks necessary. As a guide to the Magistrate in coming to a finding as to whether the case should be tried under the provisions of the Chapter or not, it is provided that if the complainant and the accused persons or any of them are respectively European and Indian British subjects or Indian and European British subjects, he shall find that the case should be tried under the provisions of the Chapter. For other cases with which both European British subjects and Indian British subjects are connected the Magistrate must be satisfied that it is expedient for the ends of justice that the case shall be so tried. This it is observed is the same criterion as that now contained in clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to the powers of a High Court to transfer criminal cases. If the Magistrate rejects the claim, the person has a right of appeal to the Sessions Judge whose decision is final, and if the claim is rejected by the Magistrate the Magistrate is required to stay the proceedings until the expiration of the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal, or, if an appeal is presented until it has been decided. The period allowed for the presentation of an appeal is fixed by Article 156A of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908 at seven days. The persons who will be included within the term "complainant" for the purpose of these provisions are then defined by the proposed section 444. Incidentally public servants and officers and servants of companies, associations or bodies to which the Local Government by general or special order may declare the provisions of the section to apply, will not be included within the definition merely because they have made a complaint or given information in their official or "quasi" official capacity. The procedure in summons-cases punishable with imprisonment is then laid down. For warrant-cases which would normally be triable under the provisions of Chapter XVI of the Code if it is found that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter a Magistrate is required if he does not discharge the accused to commit the case for trial to the Court of Session whether the case is or is not exclusively triable by that Court. Normally in the Court of Session the case will then be tried by a jury of mixed nationality, the majority of the jurors being either Indians or Europeans and Americans according as the accused person is an Indian or a European subject of His Majesty.—Statement of Objects and Reasons Para 11

443 (1) If here in the course of the trial outside a presidency town of any offence punishable with imprisonment, the accused person, at any time before he is committed for trial under Section 213 or is asked to show cause under Section 242 or enters on his defence under Section 256, as the case may be claims that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case after making such inquiry as he thinks necessary and after allowing the accused person reasonable time within which to adduce evidence in support of his claim shall if he is satisfied—

- (a) that the complainant and the accused persons or any of them are respectively European and Indian British subjects or Indian and European British subjects or
- (b) that in view of the connection with the case of both an European British subject and an Indian British subject it is expedient for the ends of justice that the case should be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, record a finding that the case is a case which ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter or, if he is not so satisfied, record a finding that it is not such a case

(2) Where the Magistrate rejects the claim, the person by whom it was made may appeal to the Sessions Judge, the decision of the Sessions Judge thereupon shall be final and shall not be questioned in any Court in appeal or revision

(3) Where the Magistrate rejects the claim, he shall stay the proceedings until the expiration of the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal or, if an appeal is presented until it has been decided

This section has been framed on the lines recommended in Part 27 of the Racial Distinctions Committee Report

1226A The mere fact of the accused person being an European British subject does not entitle him to the benefit of Chapter XXXIII. He must claim before the committing Magistrate to be tried under the special procedure, and the Magistrate must find that the necessary ingredients are present. If any such claim is made prior to commitment but there is no finding by the Magistrate, the question cannot be raised in the Sessions Court. If a claim is made and the Magistrate finds favourably to the accused the order is final and the Sessions Court cannot go behind it. If the finding of the Magistrate is adverse the party should appeal and the decision of the Sessions Judge would be final. The intention of the legislature is clear that the point should not be raised in the High Court.—Hay v Emp 28 O C 230 2 O W N 469 26 Cr L J 1217

A claim to be tried under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII is wholly different from a claim to be tried as an European British subject etc under sec 528A. So far as the former claim is concerned, the question of the status of the claimant does not always arise, as is evident from the provisions of clause (b) of sec 443. Whereas in a claim to be dealt with as an European or Indian British subject (sec 528A), the claimant has to prove his own status, in a claim to be tried under the provisions of Ch XXXIII the claimant may or may not have to do so.—Martindale v Emp 52 Cr L 347 29 C W N 447 26 Cr L J 401

This chapter does not apply to Presidency Towns. There is no provision in the Code for enabling a person to put forward a claim to be tried under Chapter XXXIII either before a Magistrate holding an inquiry or trial in a Presidency Town, or before the High Court during the trial of a case. It is unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature ever intended that when there was no knowing whether there would be a conviction or an acquittal (and both are open to appeal under sec 449) an inquiry might be asked for and the Court required to decide on the question as to whether if tried outside a presidency town the case would have been triable under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII. The only object of such an inquiry is that the result of it may be availed of for the purposes of an appeal by the accused in the case of a conviction and by the Crown in the case of an acquittal. The proper time to raise the question is when leave to appeal is applied for under sec 449 (c)—Martindale v Emp, (supra)

444 For the purposes of Section 44, 'complainant'

Definition of "com- means any person making a complaint, plainant".

or in relation to any case of which cognizance is taken under clause (b) of Section 190, sub-section (1), any person who has given information relating to the commission of the offence within the meaning of Section 154:

Provided that a Public Prosecutor, a public servant, a member, officer or servant of any local authority, a railway servant as defined in Section 3 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, or an officer or servant of any company, association or other body to which the Local Government may, by general or special order published in the local official Gazette, declare the provisions of this section to apply, shall not, by reason only of the fact that he has made a complaint of, or given information of an offence in his capacity as such Public Prosecutor public servant railway servant, member, officer or servant be deemed to be a complainant within the meaning of this section, nor shall a police officer be so deemed by reason only of the fact that a report under Section 173 relating to a case has been made by or through him.

This section has been added by the Bill and did not exist in the Report of the Racial Discriminations Committee.

445 (1) Where a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge

Procedure in Summons decides under Section 443 that a case cases ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter and the case is a summons case, the Magistrate trying the same shall direct that the case be referred to a Bench of two Magistrates and shall send a copy of such order to the District Magistrate who shall forthwith provide for the constitution of a Bench of two Magistrates of the first class, of whom one shall be an European and the other an Indian, for the trial of the case

(2) Where the Magistrates constituting the Bench by which a case is tried under this section differ in opinion, the case together with their opinions thereon shall be laid before the Sessions Judge, who may examine any party or recall and examine any witness who has already given evidence in the case, and may call for and take any further evidence, and thereafter pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit and as is according to law.

(3) Any person convicted by a Bench under this section shall have the same right of appeal as if he had been convicted by a Magistrate of the first class, and any person convicted by a Sessions Judge under sub-section (2) shall have the same right of appeal to the High Court as if he had been convicted by the Sessions Judge at a trial by the Sessions Judge under this Code.

(4) In any case in which it is impracticable to constitute a Bench in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) in any district, the District Magistrate shall transfer the case for trial by a like Bench to such other district as the High Court may, by general or special order, direct.

(5) Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, the Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct that all summons-cases tried under the provisions of this chapter in any district specified in the notification shall be tried as if they were warrant-cases in accordance with the provisions hereinafter in this Chapter laid down for the trial of warrant-cases.

Sub-sections (1) to (4) of this section embody the recommendations contained in para 28 of the Racial Distinctions Committee Report.

As regards sub-section (5), the reason is thus stated by the framers of the Bill. The Local Governments and High Courts were consulted on these proposals of the Committee (i.e. as regards the new section 445). From the opinions received it is clear that in many areas in India these proposals will be impracticable, and it is considered that in any case the adoption of the procedure proposed for similar warrant cases (see 446) namely, commitment to and trial in a Court of Session by jury, would not be more expensive than the proposals of the Committee. Accordingly it is proposed (in analogy with the powers given to Local Governments by sec 269) to permit Local Governments to direct that in particular districts such cases shall be triable according to the provisions laid down for the trial of similar warrant cases.—Statement of Objects and Reasons, Para 6

446 (1) If here a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge decides Procedure in warrant under Section 443 that a case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter and the case is a warrant-case the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case shall, if he does not discharge the cases accused under Section 209 or Section 253, as the case may be, commit the case for trial to the Court of Session, whether the case is or is not exclusively triable by that Court

(-) Where an accused is committed to the Court of Session under sub-section (1) the Court shall proceed to try the case as if the accused had required to be tried in accordance with the provisions of Section 275, and the provisions of that section and the other provisions of Chapter XXIII, so far as they are applicable, shall apply accordingly

Provided that where the trial before the Court of Session would in the ordinary course be with the aid of assessors, and the accused, or of all them jointly, require to be tried in accordance with provisions of Section 284A, the trial shall be held with the aid of assessors all of whom shall, in the case of European British subjects, be persons who are Europeans or Americans, or, in the case of Indian British subjects, be Indians

This section embodies the recommendation of the Racial Distinctions Committee contained in Para 27 of their Report

1227 Trial to be by jury.—When an European British Subject is committed to the Court of Session under the provisions of section 446 (2) the trial must be in accordance with section 275 that is to say the accused must be tried by a jury the majority of whom shall if before the first juror is called and accepted the accused so requires consist of persons who are Europeans or Americans. But when the trial before the Court of Session would in the ordinary course be with the aid of assessors the accused has the right under the proviso to sec 446 to be tried with the aid of assessors all of whom shall be of the category within which the accused comes. By ordinary course is here meant the course which would be followed in the absence of a claim by the accused to be dealt with under the provisions of Chapter XXIII or in the absence of a Notification by the Local Government under the provisions of section 269—Bray v Crown 5 Lah 515 (517 518)

447 If at any stage of an inquiry or trial under this Code it appears to the Magistrate that the case is or might be held to be a case which ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, he shall forthwith inform the accused person of his rights under this Chapter

Court to inform accused persons of their rights in certain cases.

The omission by the Magistrate to inform the accused of his rights to be tried under this chapter is curable by the provisions of sec 534—

Zagrya v. Erip 3 Rang 220 4 Bur L J 44

448 For the purpose of the trial in Rangoon of any person under the provisions of this Chapter references to the Sessions Judge shall be construed as references to the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon

Special provisions relating to appeal

449 (1) Where—

(a) a case is tried by jury in a High Court or Court of Session under the provisions of this Chapter, or

(b) a case which would otherwise have been tried under the provisions of this Chapter is under this Code committed to or transferred to the High Court and is tried by jury in the High Court or

(c) a case is tried by jury in the High Court in a presidency town and the High Court grants leave to appeal on the ground that the case would, if it had been tried outside a presidency town have been triable under the provisions of this chapter

then notwithstanding anything contained in Section 418 or Section 423 sub section (—) or in the Letters Patent of any High Court an appeal may lie to the High Court on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Letters Patent of any High Court the Local Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an original order of acquittal passed by the High Court in any such trial as is referred to in subsection (1)

(3) In appeal under sub section (1) or sub section (—) shall, where the High Court consists of more than one Judge, be heard by two Judges of the High Court

See Para 7 (b) and (c) of the Statement of Objects and Reasons

1227A Appeal — Matter of fact & matter of law — The accused on appearing before the Magistrate who held the inquiry preliminary to commitment asserted his right to be tried as an European British subject and upon that the Magistrate being satisfied that he was one, passed an order that he was to be dealt with under sec 443 of this Code In the trial before the Sessions Judge, the prosecution did not take any steps to have the Magistrate's order set aside, but had him charged and tried in the ordinary way. On appeal from the conviction held that the appeal lay on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law under this section, and the accused could question the legality of the conviction, even though there might not be any foundation for his claim to be tried under this chapter—Singleton v Emp, 29 C W N 260 41 C L J 87 26 Cr L J 662

This section lays down that in cases tried by jury an appeal lies to the High Court on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law. Therefore, in a case tried under this chapter, the finding of a jury on a question of fact is no longer final, according to the present Code and therefore to justify an interference by the High Court under sec 307 the finding of the jury need not be manifestly wrong or perverse—Crown v Bimal Parshad 6 Lah 98 26 P L R 263 26 Cr L J 1241 A I R 1925 Lah 401

Leave to appeal—It is desirable that an application for leave to appeal under clause (c) should be made to the Judge who tried the case. The right of appeal depends upon extraneous circumstances which have nothing to do with the guilt of the accused and the trying Judge is better qualified than any one else to decide whether these circumstances exist or not—Martindale v Emp 52 Cal 347 29 C W N 447 26 Cr L J 401 A I R 1925 Cal 14. But in another Calcutta case it has been held that it is desirable that the application for leave to appeal should be heard by a Division Bench rather than by a Single Judge who tried the case, since no appeal would lie against the decision of the Single Judge refusing leave to appeal it is better in the interests of justice that the application should be heard by a Division Bench—Turner v Emp 52 Cal 636 29 C W N 458 41 C L J 325 26 Cr L J 835

Application for leave to appeal should be made with notice to Crown but once the leave is granted without such notice it cannot be revoked on the ground of want of such notice—Martindale v Emp (supra)

This section gives the right of appeal against the decision of a High Court in three classes of cases. The first class are the cases tried by jury in a High Court under the provisions of this chapter and can only apply to High Courts outside a Presidency Town. The second class of cases are those which would otherwise be tried under the provisions of this chapter but are under the Code committed or transferred to the High Court and tried by jury in the High Court. In these two classes of cases, an absolute right of appeal is given. But in classes of cases referred to in clause (c) the right of appeal is dependent on the condition of granting of leave to appeal. The necessity for the insertion of the condition of granting leave to appeal in clause (c) appears to be due to the fact that in cases which come under clause (b) the question whether Chapter XXXIII is applicable or not has been decided before the case is committed or transferred to the High Court. But in cases which come under clause (c) this question has not arisen, and it was necessary for legislature to provide for a decision of the question. This question is be decided by the High Court before leave to appeal is granted, and if that is decided in accused's favour, he is entitled as of right to an appeal—Turner v Emb (supra)

Sections 453, 454, 455 and 459 are now re-enacted as section 581, 528B, 528C, and 528D, respectively. Sections 456-458 are incorporated in secs 491 and 491A. Section 460 is included in section 284A, sub section (2). Section 462 is now merged in section 326. The remaining sections (450, 451, 452, 461) are omitted.

Under the old Code, an European British subject had a right to claim to be tried by jury, that right was a substantive right and not a mere matter of procedure, and therefore where the commitment was made prior to the coming into force of the new Code of 1923, but the trial in the Sessions Court was held after its coming into force, held that the accused's right to be tried by jury was not lost, and he was not to be tried by the Judge with the aid of assessors—Emb v Filenmaurice, 6 Lah 262 A I R 1925 Lah 446 26 P L R 415

464 (1) When a Magistrate holding an inquiry or a trial has reason to believe that the accused is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate shall inquire into the fact of such unsoundness, and shall cause such person to be examined by the Civil Surgeon of the district or such other medical officer as the Local Government directs and thereupon shall examine such Surgeon or other officer as a witness, and shall reduce the examination to writing

(1A) Pending such examination and inquiry the Magistrate may deal with the accused in accordance with the provisions of Section 466.

(2) If such Magistrate is of opinion that the accused is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, he shall record a finding to that effect and shall postpone further proceedings in the case.

Change:—Sub section (1A) and the italicised words in sub section (2) have been added by sec 120 of the Cr P Code Amendment Act XIII

465 (1) If any person committed for trial before a Court of Session or a High Court appears to the Court at his trial to be of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, the jury or the Procedure in case of person committed before Court of Session or High Court being lunatic.

Court with the aid of assessors, shall, in the first instance, try the fact of such unsoundness and incapacity, and if the jury or Court, as the case may be, is satisfied of the fact, the Judge shall record a finding to that effect and shall postpone further proceedings in the case and the jury if any shall be discharged

(2) The trial of the fact of the unsoundness of mind and incapacity of the accused shall be deemed to be part of his trial before the Court.

Change:—The italicised words at the end of sub-section (1) have been added by section 121 of Cr P Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. This amendment provides for the discharge of the jury in the event of the Court of Session or the High Court being satisfied that the accused is of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

1229 Fact of insanity to be tried:—Where, after a trial has been once adjourned on account of the prisoner's insanity, the Zillah Surgeon reports that the prisoner is capable of making his defence, the Judge should find with the aid of assessors whether the prisoner is capable of making his defence, and cannot act merely on the letter of the Zillah Surgeon—2 Weir 582

The question of unsoundness of mind must be tried by the Judge and jury, and not by the Judge himself personally—19 W R 15

Again, the question of the unsoundness of mind must be tried in the first instance. The issue as to the unsoundness of mind of the accused is a preliminary issue, and must be submitted to the jury first before proceeding with the trial—19 W R 26, 42 All 137. Where in the course of his examination under sec 364 the accused said that he was not in his senses when he tried to rob it was held that the Court of Session should have acted under this section and tried the fact whether on the date the accused was called upon to plead he was or was not of unsound mind and capable or incapable of making his defence—Jaydeo v Emp, 15 A L J 239. When the accused committed to the Sessions appears to be of unsound mind, the Sessions Judge is bound to try the fact of insanity first and should not try it along with the trial for the offence—Woods v W, 2

If in a case committed to the Sessions, objection is taken on behalf of the accused that he is of unsound mind, and the Civil Surgeon when examined as a witness on behalf of the accused states that the accused is a person of unsound mind and therefore not in a fit state to understand the proceedings and to stand his trial, the onus lies on the prosecution to prove that the accused is of sound mind. In such a case it is improper for the Sessions Judge to charge the jury that it is for the defence to satisfy the Court that he is of unsound mind. But such a charge to the jury, though improper, does not amount to a misdirection so as to make the verdict of the jury on this point unacceptable specially if the verdict is unanimous—Shib Das v Emp 51 Cal 584 (586 587) C

In a trial at the Sessions if a plea is taken on the prisoner's behalf under this Section, that he is of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, it is for the Crown to establish the soundness and capacity of the accused. The inquiry as to the soundness or unsoundness of the mind of the accused is a preliminary inquiry which is conducted for the satisfaction of the Court, and in that view the prosecution ought to commence and give their evidence—Emp v Gopi Mohan Saha 51 Cal 87 (828) (Day Murder Case) 26 Cr 1 J 276

Doubtful Cases—Where a Court entertains doubts as to the sanity of the accused the Court should not merely put questions to the accused but should try the fact of such unsoundness of mind by examining the Civil Surgeon or some other medical officer and by taking such evidence as might have been procurable from the village at which the accused resides, with the view of ascertaining whether the accused had at any time prior to the commission of the crime exhibited symptoms of sanity—1 B H C R 33

Where in a doubtful case the Sessions Judge convicted the accused the High Court set aside the conviction and ordered an inquiry under this Section before retrial on the charge—1905 P R 54. Where on a reference for confirmation of a sentence of death the High Court entertained doubts as to the accused's sanity, the case would be referred to the Sessions Judge for further inquiry—2 W R 33

1230 Postponement of trial—Where the prisoner is found to be insane the Sessions Judge should postpone the trial and proceed under sections 466 and 467 instead of proceeding with the trial and acquitting the accused—9 W R 23 1 W R 11 3 W R 70 3 W R 57

A Sessions Judge has no power to stay proceedings and direct an inquiry to be made into the state of the accused's mind, where it appears to him problematic whether the accused is capable of making his defence. The proper procedure to be followed is that prescribed by Secs 465 and 466—2 Weir 582

1231 Sub section (2)—The preliminary inquiry held under this section is not a trial in the sense of ascertaining whether the accused is guilty or not of the offence charged—3 P I J 291

466 (1) Whenever an accused person is found to be of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate or Court as the case may be, whether the case is one in which bail may be taken or not,

Release of lunatic pending investigation or trial release him on sufficient security being given that he shall properly taken care of and shall be prevented from doing injury to himself or to any other person, and for his appearance when required before the Magistrate or Court or such officer as the Magistrate or Court appoints in this behalf

- (2) If the case is one in which bail may not be taken, or if sufficient security is not given, the Magistrate or Court shall report the case to the Local Government, reminding the accused to custody pending orders, and the Local Government may order the accused to be confined in a lunatic asylum, jail or other suitable place of safe custody, and the Magistrate or Court shall give effect to such order
- (2) If the case is one in which, in the opinion of the Magistrate or Court, bail should not be taken or if sufficient security is not given, the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, shall order the accused to be detained in safe custody in such place and manner as he or it may think fit and shall report the action taken to the Local Government. Provided that no order for the detention of the accused in a lunatic asylum shall be made otherwise than in accordance with such rules as the Local Government may have made under the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912

Change.—This section has been amended as shown by the underlined words by Sec 122 of the Cr P C Amendment Act VIII of 1923. The section is so amended as to allow bail to be granted at the discretion of the Court in any case in which the accused is a lunatic, and the amendment also permits the accused to be kept in custody. The object in view is to delegate the power of the Local Government and to do away with the existing distinction in procedure between bailable and non-bailable cases.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

1232 Where a Magistrate or Sessions Judge instead of proceeding under this section, tries the accused and acquits him on the ground of insanity the order of acquittal is illegal.—188 A W N 106 10 W R 37 9 W R 23 3 W R 70

When the accused is confined in a lunatic asylum or jail or some other place of safe custody according to the order of the Government, the Magistrate has power over the accused ceases from such confinement, and he cannot release him on security later on. He can deal with the accused only if the accused is sent back to him under sec 473 on a certificate that the accused is capable of making his defence—2 CrI 356 But under the present section as amended the Court itself will have power to detain the insane accused in a place of safe custody, and in such a case it will not cease to have control over the accused, but will be able to release him afterwards on sufficient security being given

467 (1) Whenever an inquiry or a trial is postponed under Section 464 or Section 465, the Resumption of Inquiry or trial Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, may, at any time, resume the inquiry or trial and require the accused to appear or be brought before such Magistrate or Court

(2) When the accused has been released under S 466, and the sureties for his appearance produce him to the officer whom the Magistrate or Court appoints in this behalf, the certificate of such officer that the accused is capable of making his defence shall be receivable in evidence

When a trial is postponed under sec 465 on the ground of insanity of the accused it should not be resumed at the point at which it was previously stopped but should be commenced de novo when the Court find him capable of making his defence—2 Weir 582

468 (1) If, when the accused appears or is again brought before the Magistrate or the Court, as the case may be, the Magistrate or Court considers him capable of making his defence, the inquiry or trial shall proceed

(2) If the Magistrate or Court considers the accused to be incapable of making his defence the Magistrate or Court shall again act according to the provisions of section 464 or section 465 as the case may be and if the accused is found to be of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, shall deal with such accused in accordance with the provision of section 466

Change—The italicized word at the end of the section have been added by section 123 of the Cr P C Amendment Act VIII of 1923 This amendment is consequential to the amendment of sec 466

The inquiry or trial should commence de novo See 2 Weir 58 c under sec 464

468 When the accused appears to be of sound mind at the time of inquiry or trial, and the

When accused appears to have been insane

Magistrate is satisfied from the evidence given before him that there is reason to believe that the accused committed an act which, if he had been of sound mind, would have been an offence, and that he was, at the time when the act was committed, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that it was wrong or contrary to law, the Magistrate shall proceed with the case, and if the accused ought to be committed to the Court of Session or High Court send him for trial before the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be.

The Magistrate shall proceed with the case etc.—Where the Magistrate is of opinion that the accused is of sound mind at the time of trial but was of unsound mind at the time of committing the offence, the Magistrate cannot discharge the accused on that ground, but should proceed under secs. 470 and 471—2 Weir 582.

A Magistrate can commit an accused to the Sessions, whom he finds to be sane at the time of the preliminary investigation, although at the time of committing the offence he was insane—9 W. R. 23.

Whenever a Magistrate acting under this section shall send for trial before the Court of Sessions an accused person regarding whose sanity at the time of committing the offence he entertains any doubt, he shall at the same time inform the jail authorities of the supposed state of the accused in order that he may be placed under careful surveillance prior to his trial before the Court of Session—Don H. C. Cr. Cir. p. 18.

Presumption—The law presumes every person who has attained the age of discretion to be sane, unless the contrary is proved, and where a lunatic has lucid intervals the law presumes the offence to have been committed during such interval unless it is proved that the act was committed during mental derangement—Ratanilil 172.

470 Whenever any person is acquitted upon the ground that at the time at which he is alleged to have committed an offence, he was, by reason of unsoundness of mind,

Judgment of acquittal on ground of lunacy incapable of knowing the nature of the act alleged as constituting the offence, or that it was wrong or contrary to law, the finding shall state specifically whether he committed the act or not.

1233 Acquittal on ground of lunacy:—The fact of unsoundness of mind must be clearly and distinctly proved before any jury is justified in pronouncing a verdict of acquittal under sec 84 I P C Every man is presumed to be sane until the contrary is proved—70 W R 70, Ratanlal 172 Where the prisoner killed his brother in law apparently without any enmity or quarrel, and the only motive given out by the prisoner was that he might be hanged by the authorities and go to heaven, it was held that the opinion of a medical witness as to the state of the accused's mind would be necessary—2 Weir 583

If the Magistrate finds that the accused is of sound mind at the time of trial, but was suffering from temporary insanity while he committed the offence he should not discharge the accused but acquit him and proceed under this section and sec 471—2 Weir 582 17 C P L R 113

471. (1) Whenever the finding states that the accused person committed the act alleged, the Person acquitted on such ground to be kept in safe custody. Magistrate or Court before whom or which the trial has been held, shall, if such act would, but for the incapacity found, have constituted an offence, order such person to be detained in safe custody in such place and manner as the Magistrate or Court thinks fit, and shall report the action taken to the Local Government.

Provided that no order for the detention of the accused in a lunatic asylum shall be made otherwise than in accordance with such rules as the Local Government may have made under the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912

(2) The Local Government may empower the officer in charge of the jail in which a person is confined under the provisions of Section 466 or this section, to discharge all or any of the functions of the P w r of Local Government to relieve Inspector-General of certain functions.

Inspector-General of Prisons under Section 473 or Section 474

1234 Change—The word finding has been substituted for the word judgment and the word detained for the word kept the words "and shall report the action taken to the Local Government" and the proviso have been newly added by sec 124 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

Previously the words at the end of subsection (1) were 'and shall report the case for the orders of the Local Government' so that the Court could not itself send the accused to a lunatic asylum or jail but had to report the case to the Local Government and the latter gave orders for sending the accused to an asylum or jail See 43 Bom 134 But those words have been omitted by the Repealing and Amending Act V of 1914 and its effect is that Magistrates and Courts are no longer required to report the case for the order of the Local Government but are themselves comto direct the detention of the accused in an asylum or jail or some other place prescribed for the reception of criminal lunatics—Emp v Aga 8 L B R 290, Emp v Maiku, 22 O C 269. But it does not deprive the power of the Government to detain the accused in some other place of custody, under the provisions of the Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912). The Government have powers, in spite of this section, to decide the future fate of the lunatic—Emp. v Iman Hasau 25 Bom L R 286 26 Cr L J 348.

1235 Application of section:—This section should be applied not only where the accused are insane persons, but also where the accused persons, though not insane, labour under defects which render their trial impossible. In such cases they should be treated as insane persons and confined during the King's pleasure, in accordance with English practice—1889 P R 37. Thus, where a deaf and dumb person, who is unable to understand the proceedings of the trial, is found guilty of murder, the proper course to be taken is to treat him as a lunatic and to proceed under section 471—Crown v Dost Mahammad, 1911 P R 13. This section does not compel the Court to send the accused to the lunatic asylum, all that is necessary is to see that such safeguards are taken as would keep him from mischief—In re Mahammad 42 M L J 72.

Where the Court below while acquitting an accused on the ground of insanity omitted to pass orders under section 471, the High Court in revision can pass the necessary orders. The passing of an order under sec 471 by the High Court, after an acquittal by the Court below, cannot be said to alter a finding of acquittal into one of conviction within the meaning of sec 439 (4)—42 M L J 72.

If a person is acquitted under section 470 he ought not to be made over to his relatives for safe custody but should be detained in custody under this section—2 Weir 580. But the Local Government can deliver the lunatic to the custody of his relatives under sec 475.

472 [Repealed by the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912.]

473 If such person is detained under the provisions of Section 466, and in the case of a person detained in a jail, the Inspector-General of Prisons, or, in the case of a person detained in a lunatic asylum, the visitors of such asylum or any two of them shall certify that, in his or their opinion, such person is capable of making his defence, he shall be taken before the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, at such time as the Magistrate or Court appoints, and the Magistrate or Court shall deal with such person under the provisions of Section 468; and the certificate of such Inspector-General or visitors as aforesaid shall be receivable as evidence.

- (c) in the case of a person detained under Section 466, be produced when required before such Magistrate or Court, order such person to be delivered to such relative or friend

(2) If the person so delivered is accused of any offence the trial of which has been postponed by reason of his being of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, and the inspecting officer referred to in sub-section (1), clause (b), certifies at any time to the Magistrate or Court that such person is capable of making his defence, such Magistrate or Court shall call upon the relative or friend to whom such accused was delivered to produce him before the Magistrate or Court; and, upon such production, the Magistrate or Court shall proceed in accordance with the provisions of Section 468 and the certificate of the inspecting officer shall be receivable as evidence.

Change:—The whole section has been re-drafted by sec 127 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. Clause (c) and sub section (2) are entirely new. Clause (b) was formerly sub-section (1).

"The new sub section (2) simplifies the procedure under which a person accused of an offence whose trial has been postponed by reason of his unsoundness of mind is again produced before the Court on the certificate of the inspecting officer as to his recovery"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

PROCEEDINGS IN CASE OF CERTAIN OFFENCES AFFECTING THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

476 (1) When any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court is of opinion that there is ground for inquiring into any offence referred to in Section 195 and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, such Court, after making any preliminary inquiry that may be necessary, may send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the first class, and may send the accused in custody, or take sufficient

476 (1) When any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court is, whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise, of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in Section 195, subsection (1), clause (b) or clause (c), which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court, such Court may after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, security for his appearance, before such Magistrate; and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence on such inquiry or trial.

record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing signed by the presiding officer of the Court, and shall forward the same to a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction, and may take sufficient security for the appearance of the accused before such Magistrate, or, if the alleged offence is nonbailable, may, if it thinks necessary so to do, send the accused in custody to such Magistrate, and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence before such Magistrate

Provided that, where the Court making the complaint is a High Court, the complaint may be signed by such officer of the Court as the Court may appoint

*For the purposes of this subsection a * * Presidency Magistrate shall be deemed to be a Magistrate of the first class*

(2) Such Magistrate shall thereupon proceed according to law, and as if upon complaint made and recorded under Section 200, and may, if he is authorised under Section 192 to transfer cases, transfer the inquiry or trial to some other competent Magistrate.

(2) Such Magistrate shall thereupon proceed according to law and as if upon complaint made under Section 200 * * *

(3) Where it is brought to the notice of such

or any other Magistrate to whom the case may have been transferred, that an appeal is pending against the decision arrived at in the judicial proceeding out of which the matter has arisen, he may, if he thinks fit, at any stage adjourn the hearing of the case until such appeal is decided.

Change:—The whole section has been redrafted by section 128 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 but no important change has been introduced. Sub-section (3) is new. "The changes that we have made are not of great importance. We have provided that a Court can act on application made to it or suo motu and after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary. For the words 'committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding' we have substituted the phraseology used in clause (b) of section 195. We have substituted 'may make a complaint' for 'shall make a complaint' and, in view of the criticism of the words 'nearest first-class Magistrate' we have provided that a complaint should be sent to a first-class Magistrate having jurisdiction. In order to give effect to our decision that proceedings under section 476 etc., should be subject to revision, we have introduced words which will make it necessary for the Court to record an order."—Report of the Joint Committee (1922). The proviso to subsection (1) has been added recently by the Cr P Code Amendment Act II of 1926. For reasons, see Note 1240. From the third para of subsection (1) the word 'chief' has been omitted by the same Amendment Act, for reason of this omission see Note 1250.

1236 Object and scope of Section.—It is easy to imagine the inconvenience which might be caused if a Munsiff or a Subordinate Judge or a Judge were to appear before a Magistrate and make a complaint on oath in order to lay the foundation for a prosecution, and this section has been enacted to obviate the difficulty. The Legislature thought it desirable that the procedure to be followed in cases of complaint by a Court should be different from that which has to be observed by an ordinary complainant.—7 All 871. Under Section 195 it is open to the Court, before which the offence was committed, to prefer a complaint for the prosecution of the offender, and sec 476 prescribes the procedure as to how that complaint may be preferred.—32 Bom 184 31 Mad 140 32 Mad 49, 7 All 8-1. The language of this section indicates that when a Court is acting under sec 195 a complaint in the strict sense of the Code is not required, and the procedure herein laid down constitutes the complaint mentioned in sec 195 ante—7 All 871. The order of a Court under sec 476 is in the nature of a complaint under sec 195.—9 C P I R 26. Proceedings taken by a Court under this section operate of themselves to set a prosecution in motion without the necessity of any other complaint, the Court itself being the complainant.—2 Weir 589.

The words in sub-section (2) of this section "and as if upon complaint made and recorded under sec 200" have been introduced into the Code in 1895 in order to give legislative effect to the Full Bench ruling in 7 All

871 in which it was held that the order of the Court under this section was a complaint within the meaning of sec 195—26 All 249 That one of the functions of sec 476 is to provide the machinery by which a Court is enabled without inconvenience to make a complaint is made very clear by these words introduced in the present section—31 Mad 140 (per Miller J) Under sub-section (1) as now amended the Court will have to frame a complaint in writing

1237 Section 476 is supplementary to sec 195—The words 'offences referred to in sec 195' mean not merely the offences covered by the sections of the I P C mentioned in section 195, but they mean the offences covered by those sections and committed under the qualifying circumstances mentioned in section 195 That is, section 476 must be read along with section 195, and the qualifications mentioned in sec 195 are to be treated as incorporated in the provisions of section 476—19 Cr L J 638 (Cal), 42 Mad 540 Thus, an offence under sec 467 I P C does not come within the purview of section 195 unless it is committed by a 'party to the proceeding', and therefore a Court is not competent to pass an order under sec 476 directing the prosecution of a person who is not a party to the proceeding for an offence under sec 467 I P C—Ramalingam v Subramayya 40 Mad 100 18 M L T 488, 1917 P R 10 [Nor is a complaint under this section necessary in order to proceed against such person—21 C W N 950] So also, where certain documents were put in Court in a pending suit, but not given in evidence the Court was not competent to order the prosecution of the party, who had put in the documents, for forgery—Abdul Khadar v Meera Saheb, 15 Mad 224 1895 A W N 145, 1910 P. U R. 3.

But a different view has been taken in the following cases Thus in 31 Mad 49, Sankaran Nair J held that section 476 must be construed as entirely self-contained, and the power given to the Court under this Chapter to take action regarding the offences specified in sec 195 is not restricted by the qualifying circumstances mentioned in sec 195 And therefore it is competent to a Court to order prosecution for forgery of a person who was not a party to the proceeding in Court—In re Devani, 18 Bom 581, In re Aeshav 14 Bom I R 968 20 Cr L J 630 (Pat) 24 O C 367 It is competent to a Court to proceed under sec 476 against a party who has filed a forged document whether such document has been actually given in evidence or not—1897 P R 12, Akhil Chandra v Q E, 22 Cal 1004 The words referred to in sec 195 are merely words descriptive of the class of offences with which a particular Court can deal They do not mean that sec 195 governs sec 476 to any extent other than this—40 All 116 Ganga Ram v Es P 40 All 24, 20 Cr L J 426 (Nag) Sec 476 is a self-contained section, and the reference made to sec 195 is only for the purpose of avoiding the enumeration of the sections of the Penal Code mentioned in section 195—Raj Kumar Singh v King Emperor, 1 P L J 298

But the intention of the Legislature in making the present amendments is to make this section not independent of, but supplementary section 195 In submitting the Report of the Joint Committee before the Council of State in September 1922, the Hon'ble Mr Moncrieff Smith said "One of the most weighty changes introduced by this measure (i.e., the Amendment Bill) is in respect of prosecutions for offences committed before or in relation to proceedings of the Courts . A glance at any commentary on the Code will give some indication of the difficulties that have arisen in putting sections 195 and 476 into operation After a long and careful thought, Government have decided on a line of action which I may say has met with general approval The two sections as they stand (under the old Code) provide an alternative procedure for the Courts in dealing with them Sanction is given to proceedings under sec 195 or action is directed by the Courts under sec 476 The sanction proceedings are now omitted, and the two sections will in future supplement each other Section 195 will contain the prohibition of prosecution except upon complaint by the Court section 476 will lay down the procedure to be followed It has been suggested that it will be better to bring the two sections together That is a matter to be considered when the consolidation of the Code will be undertaken'—Debates in the Council of State September 13 1922 See also Dwarka v Makund, 24 A L J 122 26 Cr L J 1506

The recent amendments in sections 195 and 476 have resulted in connecting the two sections more closely together Section 476 gives the Court power with respect to any offence referred to in section 195 The offence referred to in section 195 (c) is not merely an offence under certain sections but such an offence when committed by a party to the proceeding—per Brown J in C T Guruswamy v D A S Ebrahim & Rang 374 (381, 382) 26 Cr L J 295 By the recent amendment of the Cr P Code, the words 'offence referred to in section 195 (c) in sec 476 must be read in conjunction with the wording of section 195 (c) The only offence which sec 195 (c) bars from the cognizance of the Magistrate without a complaint by the Courts is when such offence is "alleged to have been committed by a party to any proceeding before that Court" and it is not right to divorce these words or take only a part of the section in endeavouring to discover what the offence referred to in section 195 is—per Robinson C J in Ibid (p 380) Therefore, the Court has jurisdiction to file a complaint only against parties to the suit—Shree Poo v Ma Ma Hmoke, 3 Rang 48 3 Bur L J 344 26 Cr L J 500 So also where there is no evidence to suggest that a forged document was produced or given in evidence in a Court, a complaint under sec 476 Cr P Code by the Court is not justified—Bahiruddy v Emp, 28 C W N 880

1238 Civil Criminal or Revenue Court—As to what are Courts, and what are not, see Note 622 under sec 195

An Income Tax Collector is a Revenue Court within the meaning of this section—36 Mad 72, 1905 P R 411 35 Bom 642 Contra—8 Bom 1, R 477 Where a sub-Registrar impounded a document presented for registration as insufficiently stamped and sent it to the Collector, and the Deputy Collector acting on the orders of the Collector reported that the document was not genuine, whereupon the Collector directed the prosecution of the person who presented the document for registration, it was held that neither the Collector nor the Deputy Collector acted as a "Court", because the inquiry held by them solely for the purpose of determining who should be called upon to pay the stamp duty was not a judicial inquiry, and therefore the order directing the prosecution of the petitioner was without jurisdiction—7 C W N 795 A certificate officer acting under the powers conferred upon him by secs 58 and 66 of the Behar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act 1914 is, while acting in that capacity, a "Court", and where such officer inquires into the question of an alleged payment where a certificate has been issued the proceeding before him is a judicial proceeding—4 P L J 475 A Commissioner sitting as an election tribunal is a Civil Court—Ram Nath v Emp 46 All 611 (613), but see Bilas Singh v K E 23 A L J 845 47 All 934

A Judge receiving and dealing with a petition under sec 83 of the Transfer of Property Act (for deposit of mortgage money) is a Court, and he can therefore start a prosecution under this section against the person depositing the money, if the mortgage-deed is found to be forged—Chamars v Public Prosecutor 4 Pat 24 61 L L 225 26 Cr L J 170

An officer acting in an executive, and not in a judicial capacity cannot exercise the powers conferred under this section—15 A L J 654 See Note 1244 below under heading "Proceeding in Court"

A District Registrar (before whom a forged document was produced for registration) is not a Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court within the meaning of this section, but in his capacity as District Magistrate he can take cognizance of the offence (sec 471, I P C) under sec 190 (1) (c) of this Code—Chetu Mahila v Emp 11 459 26 Cr L J 148

Power after transfer—A Magistrate, who after trying a case has been transferred from the charge of the particular Court in which the case was tried to some other duty in the same district is not competent to make an order under this section in respect of a case which he tried as the presiding officer of that Court—Chunni Lal v Harbans 1 A L J 315, Emp v Baldeo 46 All 851 (854) In such an event, the only officer who can order the prosecution is his successor-in-office in that Court—46 All 851 (855) A Joint Magistrate after dismissing the complaint in a case became the District Magistrate, and then ordered the prosecution of the complainant for perjury under sec 193 I P C It was held that the order of the Joint Magistrate as a District Magistrate was bad and should be set aside—Mallu Khan v K E, 1 A L J. 388

But the fact that the case has been transferred from one Court to another Court, after it has been partly heard by the first Court, does not deprive the first Court of its jurisdiction to take proceedings against a witness in respect of a perjury committed before it, nor is that jurisdiction taken away by the circumstance that the second Court may have formed a different view as to the veracity of the witness—44 All 642

1239 Power of successor in office to act under this

The power to direct prosecution is conferred on the "Court" and the particular officer who fills the judicial office at a particular time, and therefore the successor-in-office is competent to make an order under this section in respect of an offence committed before his predecessor-in-office—15 C. W. N. 691; 37 Cal 642 (F. B.); In re Nawal Singh 34 All 393, 19 A. L. J. 819, 32 Bom 184, 29 Mad 331, 14 N. L. R. 16, 1919 M. W. N. 112, 4 Lah 58, 4 Bur. L. T. 246; Shwe Fwe v Ma Ma Hmoke, 3 Rang 48 3 Bur. L. J. 344 But in 34 Cal 551 (F. B.), 35 Cal 114, 1909 P. R. 6, 2 Weir 597, and 17 Cr. L. J. 40 it has been held that a succeeding Magistrate has no jurisdiction to institute proceedings under this section, where an offence was neither committed before him nor was brought to his notice in the course of a judicial proceeding (see the words of the old section) These words have now been replaced by the more general words 'committed in a proceeding in that Court' and in this view of the law, the above five cases (34 Cal 551, etc.) are no longer correct Moreover, the new section 459 (as amended in 1923) expressly lays down that all the powers of a Judge or Magistrate may be exercised by his successor in office.

Where proceedings under this section have been commenced by a particular officer, it is competent for his successor in office to continue the proceedings—7 A. L. J. 991 Contra—1911 P. W. R. 4, where it is held that where the preliminary inquiry has been commenced by the proper officer who issued the notice, his successor is not competent to complete the inquiry and pass an order under this section But this ruling is no longer correct for the reasons stated above.

Power of Superior (Appellate) Court to take action—See sec 476.

1240 Power of High Court:—This section under the old law did not apply to proceedings in High Courts or Courts in Presidency towns, consequently, it was not competent to the High Court, acting under this section to direct the prosecution of a person for the offence of forgery or abetment of forgery brought to its notice in the course of hearing an appeal in a robbery case—19 Cr. L. J. 638 (Cal) see also 9 Bom. L. R. 110. This ruling is no longer correct in view of the second para (newly added) of subsection (1).

A High Court sitting to exercise the revisional powers under this Code can lay a complaint under sec 476—Emp v Syed Khan 3 Rang 303 27 Cr. L. J. 4.

The proviso newly added in 1926 lays down that a complaint by a High Court need not be signed by the Judge himself but may be signed by an officer of the Court "The Lahore High Court has represented that it is a needless waste of time of the Judges of a High Court that they should be required to sign all complaints under sec 476. The proposed change enables any officer of such a Court whom the Court may appoint to sign the complaint"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925 Part V, p. 215).

The procedure of the new section 476 in its application to the High Court is open to serious objections. It is hardly consistent with the dignity of a Judge of the High Court that he should have to make and sign a complaint which is to be inquired into by one of his subordinates, and that he should be treated and recorded as a complainant throughout the proceedings, the only exception being that his examination in support of the allegations in the complaint has been dispensed with by proviso (1) of sec 200. Nor is it fair to the accused that he should be arraigned in a case which has been instituted on a complaint made by a Judge of the highest tribunal and is to be tried by a judicial officer who is subordinate to the complainant. There can be little doubt that by reason of the circumstance that the complaint has been preferred by a Judge of the High Court, the accused person is likely to entertain an apprehension, not altogether without justification that his conviction is a foregone conclusion—Emp v Qadir Baksh 6 Lah 34 26 F L R 158 27 (r L J) 98 A I R 1925 Lah 312. The proviso has been added probably in deference to these remarks. But it is curious to note that the Statement of Objects and Reasons (cited above) assigns a different reason for the addition of the proviso and makes no mention of the 'dignity' of the Judge of a High Court.

A Judge of the High Court can grant a direction to prosecute, under sec 476, although the matter out of which the action arose was heard by another Judge of the Court, because any Judge of the High Court has power to exercise the powers of the High Court. But as a matter of convenience the prosecution must be directed by the same Judge, unless it becomes impracticable by reason of that Judge ceasing to hold office—Bat Kasturba v Lunmahdas 49 Bom 710 27 Bom L R 616 26 Cr L J 1189.

1241 Duty of Court.—The power given by this section should be exercised with care and due consideration. It is not in every instance in which a party fails to prove his case that the Judge who has decided against him is justified in exercising the powers conferred by this section. Judges should bear in mind that criminal prosecutions are frequently suggested by successful litigations merely to prevent an appeal in the civil suit, and they should be careful not to lend themselves to such suggestions too readily. The Judges should also recollect that when they proceed under this section, the responsibility for the prosecution rests upon them entirely—1 Cal 450. Where a Civil Court institutes a criminal prosecution of its own motion under this section it should see that there is a ground for inquiry—2 Weir 587. The order should disclose a reasonably well founded and deliberate judicial opinion that there was ground for inquiry, and the power given by this section should be used with care and consideration—1901 A W N 177. There must be a reasonable probability of conviction, because without that there could be no ground for another Magistrate to waste his time in holding the inquiry—31 M L J 440, 9 N L R 184, 24 Cr L J 823. There must be a reasonable foundation for the charge in respect of which prosecution is directed, before the criminal law is set in motion—Jadu Nandan v Emp. 37 Cal 250 14 C. W N. 330, and it would be an abuse of the powers vested in a Court of Justice if a complaint were made by it on the principle that though the conviction of the party complained against is a mere possibility, still it is desirable that the matter should be thrashed out, so that it may be decided / whether or not an offence has been committed—Ibid The Madras High Court holds that it is not the duty of the Court to see that there is a reasonable probability of the prosecution ending in a conviction, though the Court acting under this section should not act capriciously or without proper grounds—Seshamma v. Venkamma, 22 L. W. 863: 27 Cr. L. J. 280.

Before a Court is justified in making an order under this section directing the prosecution of any person, there must be some direct evidence fixing the offence upon the persons whom it is sought to charge, either in the preliminary inquiry or in the earlier proceedings out of which the inquiry arises. It is not sufficient that the evidence in the case may induce some sort of suspicion that these persons have been guilty of an offence, but there must be distinct evidence of the commission of an offence by such persons—10 C. I. 730, 21 Cr. L. J. 601 (L. J.). On the other hand, it is not necessary for the purpose of a prosecution under this section that the Court should go minutely into the evidence recorded in the suit. It is sufficient if that evidence discloses a reasonable foundation for a criminal charge—2 W. R. 557. This section does not say that before a Court orders a prosecution, it must try the whole case and be absolutely satisfied that the accused cannot by any possibility escape a conviction—9 N. L. R. 124. Under sections 195 and 476, all that a Court has to see is that a prima facie case has been made out upon the evidence before it for inquiring further into the question whether any of the offences punishable as set out in sec. 195 has or has not been made out—12 A. L. J. 1111 (dissenting on this point from 37 C. I. 13 and 37 C. I. 250), and the authority which is called upon to take action under sec. 476 need not and should not decide the question of the guilt or innocence of the party against whom proceedings are to be instituted—37 Cal. 250. Moreover, the Court taking action under this section must be prima facie satisfied that the offence has been committed by some definite individual or individuals against whom proceedings in the Criminal Court are to be taken—23 Cal. 532. It must come to a finding as to which of the individuals sent for trial has committed the offence—2 Lah. L. J. 63. Where a District Judge being of opinion that the forgery of a document produced before him was committed either by the plaintiff or by the defendant, sent both of them to a first class Magistrate so that the guilty party might be proceeded against, it was held that the order was illegal and must be set aside in revision—1905 P. L. R. 163.

* Is of opinion.*.—The opinion must be the opinion of the Court taking action under this section, the Court must form its own opinion and should not take opinion from others. Where the High Court directed the Sessions Judge to take action under this section, held that it was the duty of the Sessions Judge to apply his mind to the matter on the merits and then only decide whether a prosecution was necessary or not—Ghansam v. Emp. 21 A. L. J. 930. Where a Munsiff in making an order under this section purported to act not of his own accord but at the direction of the District Judge, it was held that the order of the Munsiff was bad, in as much as it was only nominally his, while the opinion was the opinion of the District Judge—6 A. L. J. 924. Contra—In 20 Cr. L. J. 274 (Pat.)

It was held that the proceedings were not vitiated by the mere fact that the District Judge had directed the Munsiff to institute the proceedings.

1242 Power to take action in a pending case or appeal:— Proceedings under this section should not be taken until after the close of the case in which the false evidence was given or forged document was used as genuine etc. Thus it is not competent for a Magistrate to order the prosecution of a witness for perjury while the proceedings in which the witness has given his deposition are pending before him—4 Bom I R 7-8 21 Cr I J 29 (Pat.) Kalu v. Tikaraji 26 Cr I J 1350 (Nag.) Such a hasty proceeding at placing a witness on his trial as an accused immediately after he has given his evidence, is bad because the necessary result of such a step would be to intimidate subsequent witnesses and defeat the object of the trial—9 S L R 176 Ratanlal 477 8 B H C R 126 21 Cr I J 29. But of course it is not illegal to take action under this section during the pendency of the suit or proceeding—in which the offence has been committed. The Court is not bound to wait until the substantive proceedings are over, before it can initiate an action under this section, and its failure to do so does not constitute any material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction—A E v Leukanna 31 M L J 440 (T B). If there is a delay in the disposal of the suit in which the offence has been committed there is no reason why the Court should delay proceedings under this section until the suit is disposed of which disposal may not occur until months or years later—In re Perumalla 44 M L J 74.

Since in pp 1 is a continuation of the trial proceedings under this section should not be taken during the pendency of the appeal in the case in which the petitioner is alleged to have given false evidence or produced a fabricated document—3 C I J 302 16 Bom 729 6 Cal 308 1916 P R 29 Harnam Singh v. Itri 14th L J 73 26 Cr L J 1166. The new subsection (3) now provides that if a proceeding has already been taken it may be adjourned till the decision of the appeal.

1243 Offences covered by this Section—Under the old law the offences which fell under this section were those which were committed before the Court or were brought to its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding. The wording of the present section is now changed.

Where an affidavit containing a false statement was filed by a person before a Munsarim of Court, it was held under the old section that the Judge could not direct the prosecution of that person because the offence of perjury was not committed before the Judge himself—15 A L J 517. But this is no longer correct and the above case would be covered by the present section which contemplates an offence committed 'in relation to a proceeding in the Court'. The old section was wide enough to enable a Court to take action in respect of an offence committed in another forum (even in another province) and on some previous occasion, provided it was brought to the notice of the Court in the course of a judicial proceeding—6 A L J 392, 40 All 116, 1 P L J 298. See also 43 Cal. The present section is confined to offences committed 'in relation proceeding in that court'.

Where a person gave false evidence before the committing Magistrate, and that evidence, on account of his inability to attend the Sessions Court owing to illness was read out as evidence at the Sessions trial the Sessions Judge would be competent to direct the prosecution of that person for giving false evidence—1916 P R 29 Where the offence is not committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court this section does not apply Thus if a false complaint is made to the Police, a Court cannot direct prosecution—Andhlore v Emp 5 P I T 300

As the offences contemplated by this section are offences mentioned in section 195 a Magistrate cannot direct a prosecution for an offence under section 471 I P C because this latter section is not mentioned in sec 195—18 A L J 50

1244 Proceeding in Court—A departmental inquiry is not a proceeding in Court—18 Cr L J 331 (Bur), 23 O C 136 Where a person preferred a complaint to a District Registrar containing an allegation against the Sub-Registrar, and the District Registrar after holding a departmental inquiry was satisfied as to the falsity of the complaint and directed the prosecution of the complainant for an offence under sec 182 I P C the order was held to be wholly without jurisdiction & the inquiry held by the District Registrar was a departmental inquiry and not a judicial proceeding—10 C W, N 222 Where a District Magistrate called for the record of a case tried before a Sub-Magistrate in his executive capacity for the purpose of enabling him to ascertain whether an application for an inquiry into the conduct of the Police Officer should be granted or not and then directed the prosecution of the officer under sec 193 I P C, it was held that the order should be set aside, in as much as there was no judicial proceeding before a Court for the purposes of this section—25 Mad 659 Where a District Magistrate directed the prosecution of a person under sec 211 of the I P C for having given a false report of theft to the Police it was held that the order was not one passed under this section but one passed by the District Magistrate as the ex officio head of the Police to whom a false complaint was made—1890 A W N 167 A village headman made an application to the District Magistrate stating that he wished to resign his post On being questioned as to his reasons he stated that the Police in the course of the investigation into a dacoity case was forcing a large number of people to pay money to them Thereupon the Magistrate examined the headman on oath and sent the papers to the D S P who after an inquiry reported that the charge against the Police was false Thereafter the District Magistrate passed an order directing the prosecution of the headman for perjury It was held that the order was illegal as the proceedings before the District Magistrate were not judicial proceedings—38 All 32 After the dismissal of a complaint as false by a Deputy Magistrate the papers were sent to the District Magistrate on the motion of the Police for the case being struck off the Register The District Magistrate in striking off the case ordered the prosecution of the complainant for an offence under sec 211 I P C It was held that the proceeding before the District Magistrate was not judicial but purely an executive one, relating solely to the question as to the removal of the case from the register and the order therefore did not come under this section—1884 A W. N 290 A proceeding before a Deputy Commissioner or Chairman of the District Board is not a proceeding in any Court within the meaning of this section—23 O C 136 Where the accused went to the Magistrate's house and made a false statement there, the offence could not be said to have been committed in any proceeding before a Court—3 Lah L J 535 Where a person escaped from the lawful custody of a servant of a Civil Court the offence (escape from custody) was not committed in relation to any proceeding in Court consequently this section does not apply, and the proper procedure is that the servant of the Court should file a complaint in the ordinary way—Emp v Madho Singh 23 A L J 189 47 All 409 26 Cr L J 865

Proceedings which are irregular or illegal or without jurisdiction are not proceedings under this section and therefore no order for prosecution can be passed in such proceedings Thus where the order of a Magistrate, before whom a complaint was preferred in making over the complaint to a Subordinate Magistrate for inquiry and disposal of the case was bad in law, the order of the Subordinate Magistrate under sec 476 for the prosecution of the complainant passed after such inquiry would be illegal—18 C W N 95 See also 16 C W N 885 43 Cal 173 But see contra—1 P L J 553 A charge of unprofessional conduct made against a second grade pleader can be inquired into only by the presiding officer of the Court in which the pleader practises The District Judge has no jurisdiction to inquire into the matter where the District Judge assumes jurisdiction in such a case makes an inquiry and acquits the pleader, and takes proceedings under this section against a person for giving false evidence the order cannot be upheld as it is one without jurisdiction—32 M L J 402

Where the complainant did not desire to take further proceedings and applied to withdraw the complaint the Magistrate was not competent to order under this section the prosecution of the complainant under sec 211 I P C for making a false complaint on taking evidence as there was no proceeding before him it being withdrawn by the complainant—4 C W N 351

Execution proceedings are proceedings in Court—37 Cal 642, 10 C W N 55 25 M L J 593 17 O C 309 10 N L R 177, 19 Cr L J 153 (Pat) An appeal in a mutation case before the Commissioner is a proceeding contemplated by this section—6 P L J 178 Proceedings before a Collector under sec 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act fall under this section—48 Cal 1086

Proceedings need not be judicial—Under the not necessary that the proceeding in respect be of a judicial character Where a was dropped on the ground that the offence was committed was not of a section) but after the amended Code proceedings in respect of which the section is taken this of which the which not be of a judicial character, the Public Prosecutor again moved the Court for taking the same action against the same person, held that the petitioner could be proceeded against. The dropping of the previous proceeding was no bar to the institution of the present proceeding—Chamani v Public Prosecutor, 4 Pat 24 6 P L R 225 26 Cr L J 170

1245 Preliminary Inquiry:—Where not necessary—For the purposes of this section neither notice to show cause why the party should not be sent before a Magistrate for trial nor a preliminary inquiry is indispensable—7 Bom L R 84 This section does not make it imperative on a Court to hold a preliminary inquiry before taking action under this section. To justify the Court in initiating a prosecution, it is necessary only to hold that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into an offence referred to in sec 195—Emp, v Qadir Buksh 6 Lah 34 26 P L R 158 27 Cr L J 98, 20 Cal 474, 34 Cal 551, 15 All 392, 34 All 267. It is for the Court acting in the matter to determine in the exercise of its discretion whether or not to make a preliminary inquiry—20 Cal 349, 20 Cal 474. Where a Munsiff sent a case under this section to the nearest first class Magistrate without making any inquiry, and where there was nothing to show that any inquiry the Munsiff could have made would have put the Magistrate in a better position, the omission to hold a preliminary inquiry was not bad—5 All 62. If in the course of a proceeding either civil or criminal, the Judge or Magistrate finds clear grounds for believing that either the parties or their witnesses have committed perjury he is justified in directing criminal proceedings against such persons without any further inquiry than that which he had already held in his Court—6 Cal 308. In a prosecution for making a false charge under Sec 211 I P C it is not always necessary that there should be a preliminary inquiry under this section—6 C W N 295. A preliminary inquiry is not necessary in all cases if there are materials on record on which a definite charge can be grounded—Ratanlal 895. Where an order was made under this section directing the prosecution of a witness under Sec 193 I P C, on the very day or the day after the witness's cross examination had been finished, and upon a clear statement by the witness and after an opportunity having been given him to explain the inconsistency in his statements and in the cross-examination it was held that it was not incumbent on the Magistrate to institute a fresh inquiry or to give any notice to the accused—4 P L W 44 19 Cr L J 169

Where necessary—Where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint without calling evidence, he should make an inquiry before charging the complainant with the offence of making a false charge—16 W R 44. Where a Subordinate Judge acting upon the report of a bailiff ordered the prosecution of persons who obstructed him in executing a warrant of attachment without making an inquiry of his own it was held that the Subordinate Judge would have done well if he had complied with the requirements of this section—Ratanlal 701. Where in a civil suit, settled without any evidence being gone into, by confession of judgment, the Court had grounds for supposing that an offence of false personation under Sec 205 I P C had been committed before it, the Court before directing a prosecution would be competent to hold a preliminary inquiry to satisfy itself whether a prima facie case has been made out for directing the prosecution—19 Cal 345 The Court directed the prosecution of a person under sec 174 I P C for the disobedience of summons to attend the Court and give evidence, and that person appeared and denied the service of summons on him held that before prosecution a preliminary inquiry should be held as to the service of summons, and the said person should be given an opportunity to cross-examine the persons who had deposed to the service of summons on him—19 A I J 56

1246 Procedure in preliminary inquiry—Oath can be administered to the suspected person, in the preliminary inquiry—8 Bom I R 589

The inquiry must be on evidence one mode of making inquiry is certainly to take evidence—37 Cal 52 17 Cal 8,2 But it is not necessary to go minutely into the evidence or to see whether there is sufficient evidence to support a conviction It is sufficient if the evidence discloses a reasonable foundation for a criminal charge—2 Weir 587 The law does not require a minute or detailed inquiry but only such preliminary inquiry as may be necessary to make out a prima facie case The extent of the preliminary inquiry is left to the discretion of the Court—Chamari v Public Prosecutor 4 Pat 484 A I R 1925 Pat 677, 5 All 62 The Code does not contain any provision as to the manner in which the evidence in the inquiry should be recorded, but for future reference the Court should make a summary of the statement of the witnesses examined—42 Cal 240

It is not necessary that the preliminary inquiry should be conducted in the presence of the accused All that the Court making the inquiry has to do is to satisfy itself that there are prima facie grounds for sending the case for investigation to a Magistrate—9 W R 3 The accused has no right to cross-examine any witness in the preliminary inquiry—18 Bom I R 284 34 All 267 but see 6 P I J 146 and 19 A I J 56, contra

The proceedings in inquiries under this section are judicial proceedings and the person against whom they are directed is in the position of an accused person To examine such a person as a witness in the course of such proceedings is ultra vires In such proceedings the person can only be examined in accordance with the provisions of section 342 He cannot properly be asked questions merely to elicit a statement as a foundation for ordering his prosecution—10 Bur I T 32

Who can hold the inquiry—The preliminary inquiry must be conducted by the officer who directs prosecution under this section, and cannot be delegated to any other officer—20 Cr L J 243 (Pat)

This section contemplates that it is for the complaining Court to make any inquiry that is necessary, and then to make a complaint This section does not contemplate that the Court should send the case to a Magistrate for inquiry, and the Magistrate should make the inquiry and prosecute if he is satisfied that the offence has been committed It is the complaining Court that must be satisfied that there is a prima facie case against the person sent to the Magistrate Therefore an order forwarding to the District Magistrate proceedings taken against the accused persons and requesting him to hold an inquiry with a view to the prosecution of those persons is laid in law—Chamari v Public Prosecutor, 4 Pat 24 6 P L T 225 26 Cr L J 170

It is not necessary that the whole of the preliminary inquiry ought to be conducted by the Court directing the prosecution. He can apply to the District Magistrate as the Head of the Police, for the assistance of the C I D, and the fact that he takes the assistance of the District Magistrate does not make him functus officio and deprive him of his jurisdiction to pass an order under this section—43 Bom 300

'May take sufficient security custody to such Magistrate'—'The object of this is not to make it compulsory on the Magistrate to send the accused in custody even in non bailable cases. I want to leave a discretion to the Magistrate to come to a conclusion that it is necessary for him to do so. Otherwise he may take security for his appearance'—per Mr Rangachariar (Legislative Assembly Debates, 8th February, 1923 page 2087)

1247 Notice to accused;—This section nowhere says that notice shall be given to the person intended to be proceeded against, and the want of notice is at best a mere irregularity in procedure—10 A L J 247, 2 Bur L J 153 U B R (1915) 3rd Qr 83. For a proceeding under this section, neither notice to show cause why the party should not be sent before a Magistrate, nor a preliminary inquiry is indispensable—7 Bom L R 84 15 C W N 691. But although as a matter of strict law, no notice would be necessary to the accused before taking proceedings under this section, still it is but right that he should have notice—Bat Kasturbat v Janmalidas 49 Bom 710 27 Bom L R 616. If a preliminary inquiry is started it must be a real inquiry and not merely a formal one, and the accused must be given ample opportunity to show cause why he should not be prosecuted—1 P L T 342 21 Cr L J 29 (Pat), 21 Cr L J 158 (Pat), 1 P L J 135, 10 A L J 247, U B R (1915) 3rd Qr 83, 4 P L J 475 25 Cr L J 488 (All), 2 Weir 587, 44 M L J 74. Where the prosecution has been ordered by a Court on evidence given by witnesses whom the accused had no opportunity to cross-examine, and whose evidence had thus not been tested, the Court acts with material irregularity in directing a criminal prosecution in the matter without giving the petitioner any chance to know and meet the case against him—In re Perumalla 44 M L J 74. When a Magistrate dismisses a complaint and takes action under this section against the complainant for preferring a false charge, he should give the complainant an opportunity of showing the truth or bona fide character of his complaint—7 Mad 189, 21 M L J 795, 5 C W N 106, 6 Cal 496, 7 Cal 87. So also, where a Civil Court directed the prosecution of the defendant in a civil suit for fabricating false evidence, without calling upon the defendant to shew cause, it was held that the Court acted wrongly in ordering the prosecution without giving the person concerned an opportunity to shew cause against such order—17 O C 25. But the proceedings would not be irregular merely because the accused was not given an opportunity of substantiating his case—7 Cal 208, 7 Mad 292 4 All 182.

1248 Order under this section:—An order under this section must specify the person alleged to have committed the offence. Where a District Judge, being of opinion that the forgery of a document produced before him was committed either by the plaintiff or by the defendant, and sent both of them to the nearest first class Magistrate so that the guilty party might be proceeded against, it was held that the order was illegal and must be set aside in revision—1905 P L R 163

The order must specify the offence committed—8 S L R 179. A District Magistrate passed an order directing prosecution for perjury or in the alternative for an offence under Sec 182 I P C. It was held that the option of that kind was not an order at all and therefore not valid—25 All 234. If the offence is perjury, the Court directing the prosecution should specify the false statement in regard to which the prosecution is directed, and should not leave it to the Magistrate to fish about and find it, if the offence is in respect of a forged document, the Court should mention the forged portion of the document. Omission to specify these particulars amounts to a material irregularity calling for interference by the High Court in revision—38 All 695, Kalyani v Ram Deen 48 Mad 395 48 M L J 290 4 P L W 44 19 Cr L J 169. Kalisadhan v Ram Lal 52 Cal 478 26 Cr L J 1307. It is preferable that a Court making a complaint for perjury should quote the passages in the witness' evidence which form the basis of the complaint—Daarka v Mahand 24 A. I. J 122 26 Cr L J 1506.

An order under this section should disclose the materials upon which it is based. Such an order is a judicial order if it does not show the basis upon which it is passed it is liable to be set aside in revision by the High Court—1 P L T 717. The complaining Court must hold such inquiry that its order when sent to the Magistrate will amount to a complaint under sec 200. For that purpose the complaining Court must decide upon and name the witnesses to be examined by the Magistrate otherwise the complaint is liable to be dismissed on the ground that there are no witnesses. The Court must not leave it to the Magistrate to inquire and find out for himself who the witnesses may be—Kalyani v Ram Deen, 48 Mad 395 48 M L J 290 26 Cr L J 801.

A Magistrate is competent under sec 250 to order the complainant to pay compensation to the accused and also to direct the prosecution of the complainant under this section for bringing a false charge—21 Mad 237 27 Mad 59 30 Cal 123 10 S L R 162 (Contra—26 Cal 181, 22 Cal 586). But the two orders must be simultaneous where the Magistrate ordered the complainant to pay compensation to the accused under Sec 250, and three weeks later he passed an order under this section directing the issue of notice to the complainant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for an offence under Sec 211 I P C, it was held that this later order was not proper under the circumstances—20 Cr L J 226 (Pat).

An order under this section which merely directs the prosecution of the accused, but omits to direct the accused to be taken before the First Class Magistrate was held to be at most an irregularity cured by sec.

537 (b) of this Code—37 Mad 317 But it would not be so now, because Clause (b) of section 537 which cured irregularities under section 476 has been omitted by the Amendment Act of 1923

A Magistrate passed the following order “whereas D instituted a false case before the S I of Police I therefore sanction the prosecution of the abovenamed D under sec 211 I P C and send the proceeding to the Sub Divisional Magistrate for favour of disposal The prosecution is sanctioned under sec 476 Cr P Code Held that the order could not be treated as a complaint in proper form under this section The proceeding against D based on such a complaint must be quashed—Durjodhan v Emp 52 Cal 666 26 Cr I J 1459 A I R 1925 Cal 1226

1249 Effect of reversal of the order directing prosecution — If an order under section 476 (1) directing an inquiry by a Magistrate of the First Class is set aside it is just and proper that proceedings under sub section (2) before that Magistrate must also cease, the Magistrate can not proceed with the inquiry any further—6 I B R 49 Thus where in a suit on a registered bond alleged to have been executed by the defendant the Munsiff held that the bond was genuine, and directed the prosecution of the defendant, who had denied the execution of the bond for an offence under section 193 I P C and sent the defendant to the nearest First Class Magistrate to be tried for the offence but on appeal the judgment of the Munsiff was reversed by the Sub Judge who held that the bond was not genuine and that the defendant had not executed it it was held that the result of the judgment of the Appellate Court must be taken to be that the order for the prosecution of the defendant was not maintainable and that the inquiry into the case of the defendant by the First Class Magistrate must be stopped and should proceed no further and that if the defendant had been convicted by the Magistrate the conviction would be set aside by the High Court, although the defendant did not move the High Court to quash the proceeding taken against him—12 C W N 1 But where Magistrate dismissed a complaint and directed prosecution of the complainant under this section, and the Sessions Judge directed further inquiry setting aside the order of dismissal but passed no order in respect of the order of prosecution it was held that the order of prosecution remained good until it was quashed and the Magistrate to whom the case was sent was competent to continue the inquiry—21 M I J 793 If an order directing prosecution is set aside by the High Court as not being in proper form it does not debar the Court from instituting fresh proceedings by making a complaint in proper form—Durjodhan v Emp 52 Cal 666 26 Cr I J 1459

1250 First Class Magistrate:—Under the old section, the Court before which an offence was committed had to send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest First Class Magistrate and it was not necessary that such Magistrate should be a Magistrate having jurisdiction over the offence The order making the transfer was of itself sufficient to confer jurisdiction on such Magistrate—16 Mad 461, 20 Cr I J 202 (Pat) The power to send the case to the nearest Magistrate of the First Class was quite irrespective of the local jurisdiction of the Magistrate to whom the offender was forwarded, section 177 in no way curtailed the power under this section—Ratanlal ES See also 43 Cal 542 where the High Court sent the case to the nearest first class Magistrate who had no local jurisdiction over the case. But in a Sind case however, it was held that the word 'nearest' was merely directory, it did not confer jurisdiction, and the Magistrate to whom an accused had to be sent under this section must be a Magistrate having local jurisdiction over the offence—1 S L R 84. To remove this conflict of opinion, it has now been expressly laid down that the Magistrate to whom the accused is to be sent must be a Magistrate having jurisdiction, thus adopting the view of the Sind case.

If a High Court or Chief Presidency Magistrate takes action under this section, he shall send the case to a Presidency Magistrate, see part 2 of subsection (1). In this para as originally framed by the Amendment Act of 1923 the words were "Chief Presidency Magistrate" but the word 'Chief' has been omitted by the Cr P C Amendment Act II of 1926. "This amendment proposes to make all Presidency Magistrates Magistrates of the first class for the purpose of sec 476 (1). At present, if a Chief Presidency Magistrate wishes to take action, it is necessary for him to send the case to the first class Magistrate outside the Presidency town, because the other Presidency Magistrates are not first class Magistrates for the purpose of this section"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925 Part V, p 215). Such a difficulty arose in the case of Enp v Mackay 30 C W N 276 (F B) 27 Cr I J 385. In this case the accused gave false evidence before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, whereupon he drew up a complaint for an offence under sec 193 I P Code. This complaint he preferred in his own Court (i.e. to himself) because the other Presidency Magistrates were not first class Magistrates then he transferred the complaint under sec 192 Cr P Code to the Third Presidency Magistrate. The Full Bench decided that the procedure adopted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate in making the complaint to himself was irregular, though not absolutely illegal. The present amendment however has removed this difficulty.

This section authorises the Court to send the accused to the First Class Magistrate. It does not permit the Court to commit him to the Sessions—3 Bom L R 185.

The Court should specify the Magistrate to whom the case is sent; an order that the case be sent to the Magisterial authorities for investigation is not sufficient—4 N W P H C R 86.

1251 Power of the Magistrate:—The Magistrate to whom the case is sent under this section must proceed according to law, and dispose of the case—7 B H C R 29, 26 Bom 785, 31 Cal 664. He cannot refuse to take cognizance of the offence—13 Bom 109, and cannot return the case to the Court which sent it—12 W R 41.

The Magistrate receiving a case under section 476 cannot act under section 202. The latter section enables a Magistrate who is not satisfied as to the truth of the complaint to postpone the issue of process and to direct a local investigation. Now, section 476 presupposes that the (Civil, Criminal or Revenue) making the reference to the Magistrate must be of opinion that there is ground for inquiry into the offence in respect of which the case is sent to the Magistrate. This shows that section 46 precludes the application of section 202, and that there can be no room for the investigation which is contemplated by that section—21 Cr L J 310 (Nag).

The expression 'proceed according to law' in sub section (2) requires the Magistrate receiving the reference to proceed under Chapters XVIII to XXI of the Code according to the nature of the offence supposed to have been committed. Chapter XVII has of course no application, in as much as the accused must necessarily appear before the Magistrate as a consequence of the reference itself—21 Cr L J 310.

The Magistrate to whom a case has been sent is competent to discharge the accused person, if in his opinion the evidence against the accused is not sufficient to warrant a committal to the Court of Session—5 B H C R 41.

If the order under this section is made without jurisdiction, the Magistrate is competent to dismiss the complaint—(1911) 2 M W N 431. The Magistrate while dismissing the case and acquitting the accused, cannot direct compensation to be paid to the accused. Thus, where the decree holder complained to the Civil Court of obstruction by the judgment-debtor under this section, and after the trial and acquittal of the accused the Magistrate directed the decree holder to pay compensation, it was held that the order was not valid, since the decree holder was not the complainant. The real complainant was the Civil Court which directed the prosecution of the accused—14 Bom L R 1166.

The Magistrate is competent to proceed against persons not named in the order of the Court directing the prosecution under this section. The Code provides for taking cognizance of offences and not of offenders, and a Magistrate who has legally taken cognizance of an offence on an order under section 476 has jurisdiction to proceed against any one who may be proved by the evidence to be concerned in the offence, whether he was mentioned in the order or not—21 C W N 950, 1917 P R 34. 43 Bom 300.

1252 Limit of time for taking action:—This section does not limit the time within which action should be taken and there is no legal necessity to proceed under this section immediately after the original trial or proceedings—19 A L J 819, 43 Bom 300, 7 S L R 187, 1916 P R 29, 19 Cr L J 981, 5 O L J 622, 20 Cr L J 724 (Pac), Veshamma v Venkamma 22 L W 863. 27 Cr L J 280. But still it is desirable that an order under this section should be made either at the close of the proceeding or so shortly thereafter that it may be reasonably said that the order is a part of the proceeding—In re Rahmatulla 31 Mad 140. 20 Cr L J 184, 20 Cr L J 286, 1916 P W R 53, 18 Cr L J 331 (Bur), 32 Mad 49, 42 Mad 422. If the Court thinks that action ought to be taken under this section, it ought to pass such order as early as possible (and not delayed by several months) after the termination of the original case—40 Cal 444, 38 All 695. No hard and fast rule can be laid down that delay is a ground for setting aside an order for prosecution. It may, under certain circumstances, be almost a sufficient ground in itself, but in other cases it may be no ground at all. It is possible to imagine a case in which the commission of an alleged offence may not have actually come to light for many months or even years after it had been committed. But a prosecution for false complaint under sec 211 I P C should be ordered as soon as the complaint is dismissed as false, and not many months afterwards because the facts justifying the prosecution are known to the Court at the time when the complaint is dismissed—Emp. v Baldeo Prasad 46 All 851 (852). A delay of two months was considered too long—18 Cr L J 331. In 20 Cr L J 226 (Pat) a delay of three weeks was held to be too much under the circumstances of the case. But in view of the amendment made in this section and the enactment of the two new sections 476A and 476B it is no longer necessary that the proceeding under sec 476 should be taken immediately after the termination of the original proceeding—Seshamma v Venkamma 22 L W 863 27 Cr L J 280.

Where an appeal is preferred against the original case, the Court is justified in waiting till the disposal of the appeal before directing a prosecution under this section—1916 P R 29 3 C L J 302 16 Bom 729, 6 Cal 308 4 Lah 58. See subsection (3).

Where proceedings for directing a prosecution are commenced in the course of a judicial proceeding or so soon thereafter as to make the former substantially a continuation of the latter the final order directing the prosecution will not be vitiated by the fact that it was passed more than a year afterwards—1919 M W N 112. But the Court will sit aside an order directing a prosecution if it is passed so long after the offence that the delay is oppressive or scandalous—Ibid.

1253 Revision—Power of Sessions Judge—A Sessions Judge has no power to interfere with an order under section 476, nor with a complaint under section 195 made by a Deputy Magistrate—23 Mad 205 34 Cal 42. If the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the order should be set aside he should refer the matter to the High Court—15 Cr L J 16 (Cal). It is the High Court which has the power to interfere with an order under sec 476. A Sessions Judge has no such power—34 Cal 42. See also 14 C W N 132.

Power of High Court—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the High Court is competent in the exercise of its revisional powers to interfere with an order of prosecution under this section. In 26 Mad 98, 13 Bom 109 13 Muz 144 16 All 80 and Ratanlal 595 it has been held the effect of the introduction of the words "as if upon complaint made and recorded" under section 200 in the Code of 1898 is that the order under this section is merely a complaint and not an order and is therefore not subject to revision by the High Court. Whereas in various other cases it has been laid down that the addition of these words in the section do not mean that the proceedings of the Court directing prosecution are to be taken merely as a complaint and not as an order the order of prosecution is therefore subject to revision—33 Mad 48 21 Mad 124, 26

(Civil, Criminal or Revenue) making the reference to the Magistrate must be of opinion that there is ground for inquiry into the offence in respect of which the case is sent to the Magistrate. This shows that section 476 precludes the application of section 202, and that there can be no room for the investigation which is contemplated by that section—21 Cr L J 310 (Nag.)

The expression 'proceed according to law' in sub section (2) requires the Magistrate receiving the reference to proceed under Chapters XVIII to XXI of the Code according to the nature of the offence supposed to have been committed. Chapter XVII has of course no application, in as much as the accused must necessarily appear before the Magistrate as a consequence of the reference itself—21 Cr L J 310

The Magistrate to whom a case has been sent is competent to discharge the accused person, if in his opinion the evidence against the accused is not sufficient to warrant a committal to the Court of Session—5 B H C R 41

If the order under this section is made without jurisdiction, the Magistrate is competent to dismiss the complaint—(1911) 2 M W N 431. The Magistrate while dismissing the case and acquitting the accused, cannot direct compensation to be paid to the accused. Thus, where the decree holder complained to the Civil Court of obstruction by the judgment-debtor under this section, and after the trial and acquittal of the accused the Magistrate directed the decree holder to pay compensation, it was held that the order was not valid, since the decree holder was not the complainant. The real complainant was the Civil Court which directed the prosecution of the accused—14 Bom L R 1166.

The Magistrate is competent to proceed against persons not named in the order of the Court directing the prosecution under this section. The Code provides for taking cognizance of offences and not of offenders and a Magistrate who has legally taken cognizance of an offence on an order under section 476 has jurisdiction to proceed against any one who may be proved by the evidence to be concerned in the offence whether he was mentioned in the order or not—21 C W N 950, 1917 P R 34, 43 Bom 300

1252 Limit of time for taking action:—This section does not limit the time within which action should be taken and there is no legal necessity to proceed under this section immediately after the original trial or proceedings—19 A L J 819, 43 Bom 300, 7 S L R 187, 1916 P R 29, 19 Cr L J 981, 5 O L J 622, 20 Cr L J 724 (P.N.), Seshanna v. Venkanna 22 I W 863, 27 Cr L J 280. But still it is desirable that an order under this section should be made either at the close of the proceeding or so shortly thereafter that it may be reasonably said that the order is a part of the proceeding—In re Rahmatulla 31 Mad 140, 20 Cr L J 184, 20 Cr L J 286, 1916 P W R 53, 18 Cr L J 331 (Bur.), 32 Mad 49, 42 Mad 422. If the Court thinks that action ought to be taken under this section, it ought to pass such order as early as possible (and not delayed by several months) after the termination of the original case—40 Cal 444, 38 All 695. No hard and fast rule can be laid down that delay is a ground for setting aside an order for prosecution. It may, under certain circumstances, be almost a sufficient ground in itself, but in other cases it may be no ground at all. It is possible to imagine a case in which the commission of an alleged offence may not have actually come to light for many months or even years after it had been committed. But a prosecution for false complaint under sec 211 I P C should be ordered as soon as the complaint is dismissed as false, and not many months afterwards because the facts justifying the prosecution are known to the Court at the time when the complaint is dismissed—Emp. v Haldea Prasad 46 All 851 (852). A delay of two months was considered too long—18 Cr L J 331. In 20 Cr L J 226 (Pat) a delay of three weeks was held to be too much under the circumstances of the case. But in view of the amendment made in this section and the enactment of the two new sections 476A and 476B it is no longer necessary that the proceeding under sec 476 should be taken immediately after the termination of the original proceeding—Seshamma v Venkamma 22 L W 863, 27 Cr L J 280.

Where an appeal is preferred against the original case, the Court is justified in waiting till the disposal of the appeal before directing a prosecution under this section—1916 P R 29, 3 C L J 302, 16 Bom 729, 6 Cal 308, 4 Lah 58. See subsection (3).

Where proceedings for directing a prosecution are commenced in the course of a judicial proceeding or so soon thereafter as to make the former substantially a continuation of the latter the final order directing the prosecution will not be vitiated by the fact that it was passed more than a year afterwards—1919 M W N 112. But the Court will set aside an order directing a prosecution if it is passed so long after the offence that the delay is oppressive or scandalous—Ibid.

1253 Revision—Power of Sessions Judge.—A Sessions Judge has no power to interfere with an order under section 476, nor with a complaint under section 195 made by a Deputy Magistrate—23 Mad 205, 34 Cal 42. If the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the order should be set aside he should refer the matter to the High Court—15 Cr L J 16 (Cal). It is the High Court that alone has the power to interfere with an order under sec 476. A Sessions Judge has no such power—34 Cal 42. See also 14 C W N 132.

Power of High Court.—There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the High Court is competent in the exercise of its revisional powers to interfere with an order of prosecution under this section. In 26 Mad 98, 13 Bom 10, 13 Mad 144, 16 All 80 and Ratnaji 895 it has been held the effect of the introduction of the words "as if upon complaint made and recorded" under section 200 in the Code of 1898 is that the order under this section is merely a complaint and not an order and is therefore not subject to revision by the High Court. Whereas in various other cases it has been laid down that the addition of these words in the section do not mean that the proceedings of the Court directing prosecution are to be taken merely as a complaint and not as an order the order of prosecution is therefore subject to revision—33 Mad 48, 21 Mad 124, 26

Bom 785, 4 Bom L R 618, 34 Cal 42, 20 Cal 349 Further, it is the intention of the Legislature that an order under this section is subject to revision, see the Report of the Joint Committee cited under heading "Change" above

1254 When High Court will interfere and when not:—Orders purporting to be made under this section are open to revision by the High Court when they have been made during proceedings held entirely without jurisdiction—29 Mad 100 When the Lower Court has proceeded upon merely fanciful grounds or grounds so obviously wrong that it could not be said to have formed a serious judicial opinion at all, then the High Court will interfere and set aside the order of the Court below—23 All 249, In re Parshotamdas, 25 Bom L R 282, 10 N L R 177, but where the Lower Court has arrived at a judicial opinion on substantial grounds and the order shows that the Court has acted with circumspection and mature deliberation, the order should not be interfered with merely because the High Court disagrees with that opinion—In re Alamdar 23 All 249, 4 A L J 803, 18 Cr L J 1015 (Nag) The question whether a complaint should be made under sec 476 is almost invariably a matter of discretion and the High Court is always loath to interfere except in extraordinary cases—Ranjit Narain v Rani Bahadur, 7 P L T 114 If the trial Court or the Court to which it is subordinate thinks that no complaint should be made, then it is not desirable that the High Court should interfere—Somabhai v Ididbhai 48 Bom 401 26 Bom L R 269 Revision should be granted if there be some error of law, some irregularity, some abuse or failure to exercise jurisdiction, and not simply because the Revisional Court has formed a different opinion from that of the Court below about the case—1902 P R 18 Where an order was made on insufficient grounds and no further action was taken by the Court for more than a year, it was held that this was a case in which the revisional powers of the High Court might properly be exercised and the order set aside—1901 A W N 177

Proceedings of a Civil Court under this section cannot be interfered with by a Criminal Bench of the High Court in Revision The power of revision under section 435 is confined to the records of inferior criminal Courts Therefore, when an order under this section was passed by a Civil Court, the High Court can interfere only under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code—Emp v Har Prasad, 40 Cal 477 17 C W N 647, 14 Cr L J 197, In re Bhup Kanwar, 26 All 249, Bahurani Lal v Jhunka, 24 A L J 217 27 Cr L J 278, 8 C W N 73, 16 N L R 23, (1915) U B R 3rd Qr 83, 38 All 695 10 Bur l l 11 24 O 1 367 An order of the Small Cause Court under sec 476 of this Code directing a prosecution for perjury can be interfered with only under sec 25 of the Pro Small Cause Courts Act—Lalab Das v Maung Ha Than 1 Rang 372

Similarly, the High Court has no power in revision to interfere with an order passed by a Revenue Court under this section, the application for revision should be filed before the Board of Revenue—4 A L J 701.

1902 A W N 202, 39 All 91, 15 Cr L J 2 (Oudh), 36 Mad 72 (per Suralara Ayyar J)

1255 Nature of proceedings under this section:—Proceedings in inquiries under this section are judicial proceedings, and the person against whom they are directed is in the position of an accused person. To examine such a person as a witness in the course of such proceedings is ultra vires—10 All L T 32 In 4 P L W 65, however, it has been held that in proceedings under this section, the person proceeded against is not in the position of an accused person.

476-A The power conferred on Civil, Revenue and Criminal Courts by Section 476, sub-Section (1) may be exercised, in respect of any offence referred to therein and alleged to have been committed in or in relation to any proceeding in any such Court, by the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of Section 195 sub-section (3), in any case in which such former Court has neither made a complaint under Section 476 in respect of such offences nor rejected on application for the meaning of such complaint, and where the superior Court makes such complaint, the provisions of Section 476 shall apply accordingly

Where an application under sec 476 is pending before an inferior Court and has not been rejected by that Court there is no objection to the superior Court taking such action as could be taken by the Court under sec 476—In re Premdas 26 Bom L R 713. Where a person instituted a false case before a Bench of (2nd or 3rd class) Honorary Magistrates, the District Magistrate could order the prosecution of that person for an offence under sec 193 I P Code—Mon Ram v A E 26 Cr L J 566 (All). If a false charge is made by a person before a Magistrate of the 1st class, the complaint against that person under sec 211 I P Code should be made by the Sessions Judge and not by the District Magistrate. If the District Magistrate makes the complaint, it is ultra vires but that does not prevent the Sessions Judge from making a complaint on his own initiative—Gulab v Emp, 26 Cr L J. 923 (All).

476-B Any person on whose application any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court has refused to make a complaint under Section 476 or

Appeal

Section 476 I, or against whom such a complaint has been made, may appeal to the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of Section 195 sub-section (3), and the superior Court may thereupon, after notice to the parties concerned, direct the withdrawal of the complaint or, as the case may be, itself make the complaint which the subordinate Court might have made under Section 476, and if it makes such complaint, the provisions of that section shall apply accordingly

This section has been newly added by section 128 of the Cr P Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. Under the old law, when an application was made to a Munsiff asking him to file an action himself against a certain party, and to send him to a criminal Court to be tried there for various offences, and the Munsiff declined to file any action, it was held that no appeal lay to the District Judge against the order of the Munsiff—12 A L J 684. This ruling is now rendered obsolete by the present section.

1257 Scope.—This section gives a right of appeal only when a Court has made or refused to make a complaint under sec 476 or sec 476A, and not when a complaint has been made by a Court on appeal from an order of a subordinate Judge refusing to make a complaint—Mad. Idris v. Crown 6 Lah 56 26 P L R 199 26 Cr L J 1168. But the Privy Council holds that an appeal lies under this section from an appellate order of the Appellate Court making a complaint which the first Court refused to make—Ranjit Narain v. Ram Bahadur 7 P L T 114 (dissenting from 6 Lah 56), Toujdar v. K. E. 7 P L T 199 26 Cr L J 1565.

An appeal against an order of the Presidency Small Cause Court directing that a complaint under secs 193 and 196 I P C be made against the appellants, lies to the High Court on its Appellate Side. For this purpose, the original side of the High Court is not different from the Appellate side. The words "principal Court of original civil jurisdiction" occurring in sec 195 (3) of this Code, when applied to the High Court, do not mean only the original side of the High Court but apply to the Appellate side also—Kalyani v. Rani Deen, 48 M L J 395 48 M L J 290 26 Cr L J 801.

The right of appeal under this section does not survive on the death of the appellant before hearing, the appeal abates—Nihal v. Rampi 47 M L J 359 26 Cr L J 1008 A I R 1925 All 620.

Duty of Superior Court.—The Appellate Court, in the case of appeals under this section, should reconsider the entire matter on the merits, and while allowing reasonable weight to the opinion of the Court below, should nevertheless reconsider the question of the propriety of the order appealed against, upon a complete review of the entire facts. If the Appellate Court is not satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out, the order appealed against must be set aside—Ram Charan v. Emp. 23 A L J 515 26 Cr. L J 1126

Where the Court below has refused to make a complaint under sec. 476, the superior Court in reversing the order of the Court below must give sufficient reasons for such reversal—Kalishadhan v. Nan Lal, 52 Cal. 478 26 Cr L J 1307 A I R 1925 Cal 721

Effect from or revision of order under this section—No appeal lies against an order passed under this section by the appellate Court directing the withdrawal of the complaint. So also, the High Court will not ordinarily interfere in revision with an order of withdrawal of complaint passed under this section, except in extraordinary cases. The question whether a complaint should be made under sec. 476 is almost invariably a matter of discretion, and if the trial Court or the Court to which it is subordinate thinks that no complaint should be made or that the complaint should be withdrawn then it would not be desirable that the High Court should interfere—Somabhai v. Ididbhai 48 Bom 401 (403, 404) 26 Bom L R 289 25 Cr L J 1523 A I R 1923 Bom 347

477 (Repealed).

Section 477 which has now been repealed by sec. 123 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act VIII of 1923 ran as follows—

"477 (1) Subject to the provisions of section 444, a Court of Session may charge a person for any offence referred to in section 195 and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding and may commit, or admit to bail and try, such person upon its own charge

(2) Such Court may direct the Magistrate to cause the attendance of any witnesses for the purposes of the trial

The reason of omitting this section has thus been stated by the Joint Committee (1922). Section 477 is inconsistent with section 476 as proposed by the Bill because the latter section made it obligatory on the Court to make a complaint and send it to a first-class Magistrate. This defect has been removed by one of the amendments we have made in section 476, but we are doubtful whether section 477 should stand. We considered a proposal to enable a Court of Session to try a case committed to it after a complaint had been made by itself, but we do not think it desirable that a Court which has instituted the proceedings should dispose of the case and we have therefore repealed section 477.

478 (1) When any such offence is committed before any

Power of Civil and Revenue Courts to complete inquiry and commit to High Court or Court of Session.

Civil or Revenue Court, or brought under the notice of any Civil or Revenue Court in the course of a judicial proceeding, and the case is triable exclusively by the High Court or Court of Session, or such Civil or Revenue Court thinks that it ought to be tried by the High Court or Court of Session, such Civil or Revenue Court may, instead of sending the case under Section 476 to a Magistrate for inquiry, itself complete the inquiry, and commit or hold to bail the accused person to take his trial before the High Court or Court of Session, as the case may be.

(2) For the purposes of an inquiry under this section the Civil or Revenue Court may * * exercise all the powers of a Magistrate, and its proceedings in such inquiry shall be conducted as nearly as may be in accordance with the provisions of Chapter XVIII and of Chapter XXXIII in cases where that Chapter applies and shall be deemed to have been held by a Magistrate.

Change:—In subsection (2), the words "subject to the provisions of section 443" have been omitted after the word 'may,' and the italicized words have been added, by section 28 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923. As a result of this Amendment, this section has been made applicable to European British subjects.

1268 Sections 476 and 478:—This section should be read as alternative to section 476, and not supplementary to it. The procedure prescribed by this section, viz., of completing the investigation and committing the accused, is only alternative to section 476 (see the words instead of sending the case under section 476), and therefore if the accused who had been sent by the Civil Court to the First Class Magistrate under section 476, has been discharged by the Magistrate the Civil Court has no power to revise the case against the accused and adopt the procedure prescribed by this section.—Rumal 939

This section deals with a more extended class of cases than section 476 and covers cases in which any Court whether Civil or Revenue whether possessing power of committal or not, may take action and commit for trial.—4 Bom 287. Section 476 merely lays down the procedure that may be followed in certain cases, and does not confer any new jurisdiction on a Court. That section does not by itself give to the Civil Court the powers of committal in the cases referred to in that section, and that is why section 478 has been enacted.—Ibid

1259 Scope:—The power of a Civil Court to commit a case to the Sessions is limited to cases triable exclusively by the Court of Session and to such cases only when the offence charged has been committed before the Civil Court or brought under its notice.—4 Bom 287.

This section, like section 476, must be taken as supplementary to section 195 in this sense that the Court can direct a committal under section 478 for an offence referred to under section 195 only when such offence has been committed under the circumstances mentioned in sec tion 195 And therefore a Civil Court cannot direct a committal for offences under sections 463 and 471 I P C unless the documents have been given in evidence, as mentioned in clause (c) of section 195 If the documents have been merely put in Court but not given in evidence, section 195 cannot apply and section 478 I o will not apply—15 Mad 224 But in 22 Cal 1004 and 40 All 116 it has been held that the words 'any such offence' in this section simply mean an offence referred to in section 195 and not an offence qualified by the circumstances mentioned in section 195 But this view is no longer correct See this subject fully discussed in Note 1237 under section 476, under heading Section 476 is supplementary to section 195

A Civil Court has no power to order the commitment of persons for offences referred to in section 195, without holding the preliminary inquiry required by this section—22 W R 52

The procedure referred to in subsection (2) namely the procedure of Chapter XVIII must be followed as nearly as possible Where notices were issued to the persons concerned and after recording very brief statements of the accused, charge sheets were drawn up and commitment order passed without examining any of the witnesses and without the charge being explained to the accused it was held that the Court not having followed the procedure as laid down in Ch XVIII, the order was illegal—40 All 32

1260 Revision—Though certain Magisterial powers have been given to the Civil Court under this section for the purpose of investigating cases of contempt of Court, it still remains, while exercising those powers, a Civil Court and is not an 'inferior Criminal Court' within the meaning of section 435 It is not therefore amenable to the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge The Sessions Judge has no power to revise the proceedings of the Civil Court—5 M L J 226

479 When any such commitment is made by a Civil or Revenue Court, the Court shall send the charge with the order of commitment and the record of the case to the Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or other Magistrate authorized to commit for trial, and such Magistrate shall bring the case before the High Court or Court of Session, as the case may be, together with the witnesses for the prosecution and defence

480 (1) When any such offence as is described in Section 175, Section 178, Section 179, Section 180 or Section 228 of the Indian Penal Code is committed in the view or presence of any Civil, Criminal and Revenue Court, the Court may cause the offender

* * * to be detained in custody and at any time before the rising of the Court on the same day may, if it thinks fit, take cognizance of the offence and sentence the offender to fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, and in default of payment, to simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month unless such fine be sooner paid.

(2) Nothing in Section 29A or in Chapter XXXIII shall be deemed to apply to proceedings under this section.

Change—The words "whether he is a European British Subject or not" have been omitted in subsection (1), and the words "section 29A or in Chapter XXXIII" in subsection (2) have been substituted for the words "section 443 or 444" by section 29 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923.

1261 Scope and application of Section—This section and the next deal with what is known in English law as direct contempt, that is contempt committed in the view of presence of the Court. The High Court has got greater powers (not by virtue of this Code or the Penal Code but by virtue of the common law of England) to punish for contempts committed out of Court, e.g. comments in newspapers on proceedings pending in the High Court—10 Cal 109 P C (Surendra Nath Banerjee's case) See also In re Clardice 14 Bom L R 231, 11 Est 1 v Editor Bengalee 15 C W N 71 In re Banks 26 C I J 401 19 Cr I J 449 In re Satyabodha 24 Bom L R 928 In re Taylor 26 C L J 245

As to the power of the High Court to punish for contempts of subordinate Courts see the Contempt of Courts Act XII of 1926 recently enacted. See also 46 Bom 592 24 Bom L R 16 21 M I J 832 (F B), and In re M K Gandhi 22 Bom L R 368 21 Cr I J 835. The rulings in 41 Cal 173 (I B Patrika case) and in 17 C W N 1285 (where it was held that the High Court had no power to punish for contempts of mofussil Courts) are no longer good law in view of the above new Act.

This section empowers a Magistrate to deal with the accused only when he is shown to have committed one of the offences enumerated in this section—3 M L T 286.

The offence of contempt must be committed during a judicial proceeding in order to come under this section. An inquiry by a Magistrate into a case of breach of the peace in order to ascertain whether he should make a report to his official superior and to satisfy himself whether he should act under section 108, is not a judicial proceeding and a person behaving insolently to the Magistrate in such proceeding cannot be proceeded against under this section—2 Weir 603.

A Tahsildar or a Sub-Tahsildar has to perform various miscellaneous duties most of which are of a non-judicial character, and the mere fact that on a particular day he has to try a case does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that he is doing judicial business during the whole of that day. If it appears that at the time when the incident took place, he was engaged in conversation with two persons who were sitting in his room, it is doubtful whether it can be said that he was sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding, and it is therefore doubtful whether he can be summarily acted under this section—Dalip Singh v Crown 2 Loh 308 (112) 23 Cr L J 9

The offence must be committed in the view and presence of the Court, to attract the provisions of this section. The plaintiff in a suit was directed to appear with certain account books on a specified date and give his deposition before a Small Cause Court, filing which the suit was to be decided against him. The plaintiff did not appear as directed and the Munsiff called upon him to show cause why he should not be fined for disobedience. Cause was shown by a petition but there was no appearance and he was fined for contempt of Court. It was held that the case did not come under this section, as there was no offence committed in the view or presence of the Court and the order was therefore without jurisdiction—Chakmal v A F 3 C W N 389 20 Cr L J 373

The provisions of this section must be applied then and there, or at any rate before the rising of the Court in whose view or presence a contempt has been committed if it considers that it can be properly and adequately dealt with under this section. Therefore where a Magistrate in whose presence a contempt was committed after taking cognizance of the matter, postponed passing final orders in order to afford the accused an opportunity of showing cause why such order should not be passed, and eventually fined him several days after it was held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was irregular and that the proper procedure would have been to detain the accused and to deal with the matter at once or before rising—11 All 361. But rising for a short time in the middle of the day (for luncheon) does not amount to rising of the Court for the day—Emp v Lenkat Rao 46 Bom 973 (979) 24 Bom L R 386

Where the Court deals with the offence of contempt of Court under this section it cannot pass the sentence prescribed by sec 228 I P C but should under this section limit the punishment to Rs 200 with imprisonment in default for 30 days—2 Weir 603. If it considers the fine of Rs 200 too light a sentence for the offence it ought to refer the case under section 482 to some competent Magistrate—10 W R 47 6 M H C R App 16

A substantive sentence of imprisonment cannot be passed under this section in a case under section 228 I P C—10 W R 47. The imprisonment will be only in default of fine

1262 Contempt—An application for transfer of a case from a particular Court on the ground of probable miscarriage of justice is not a contempt of that Court—1869 P R 34. Emp v Lenkat Rao, 24 Bom L R 386 46 Bom 973 (976). Even if in such an application the accused uses certain unhappy remarks concerning the Magistrate from whose Court the case is sought to be transferred it cannot be presumed that the accused intended to insult the Court—38 All 284, 1898 A W N 145. A refusal by a witness to affix his thumb mark to the record of his deposition is not an offence under sec 180 I P C—Crown v Fateh Ali, 1912 P R 8. But a refusal by an accused to sign a statement under sec 364 of this Code is punishable under sec 180 I P C—39 All 399, (contra—4 Bom 15, 3 L B R 199). Walking with creaking shoes near the Court room does not ipso facto lead to the conclusion that the accused intended to insult or interrupt the Court in its work—5 M I T 286. Courts should not be unduly sensitive about their dignity, and a mere audible remark by the accused which interrupted the proceedings of a Court is not enough to sustain a conviction unless the accused intended to interrupt the Court—29 M I J 274, Dalip Singh v Crown 2 Lah 308 (312). In the absence of any intention to insult the Court and of any interruption to the Court a person accused of a scuffle in the verandah of a Court is not guilty of an offence under sec 278 I P C—20 Cr L J 777 (All). Prevarication by a witness may, though it does not necessarily, amount to contempt of Court—10 B H C R 69. See also 15 W R 5, 4 B H C R 6, 4 B H C R 6. Where a witness refused to answer the questions put to him in his examination-in-chief and cross examination unless an application made by him for stay of proceedings was granted, held that this conduct amounted to contempt—1918 P R 14. An accused person who during the hearing of a case makes an impertinent threat to a witness in the box commits an offence under sec 228 I P C—45 All 272. An irrelevant question put by a pleader to a witness cannot amount to contempt, though a persistence in vexatious or irrelevant questions after warning might amount to contempt—1867 P R 44. But every little insistence on the part of a pleader in the conduct of his case should not be turned into an occasion for a criminal trial unless the pleader's conduct is so clearly vexatious as to lead to an inference that his intention is to interrupt or insult the Court—6 Bom I R 541, 15 W R 62, 10 C W N 1062. Any trivial incident such as laugh or hesitation in speaking is not a contempt—4 M H C R 146. A witness who having a document in his possession will not produce it is guilty of contempt, and can be dealt with under this section—12 Bom 63. An accused who in the course of his statement under section 341 calls the Judge a 'prejudiced Judge' and being called upon by the Judge to withdraw the remark refuses to do so, is guilty of contempt, and can be proceeded against under this section—Frip v Lenkat Rao 46 Bom 93, 24 Bom I R 386, 23 Cr I J 325.

A comment on a pending case, if it has or may have the effect of prejudicing the fair trial of an accused person, amounts to a contempt of Court—In re Clandage 14 Bom I R 231, 13 Cr I J 461. An article in a newspaper reflecting on a party to a suit more especially when he is under cross examination, is a contempt of Court—Weston v Editor Bengalee 15 C W N 771. But such contempts can be punished only by the High Court. See Note 1261 above.

1263 Appeal.—A summary order under this section by a Sessions Judge for an offence under section 228 I P C in imposing a fine on a person for intentional insult to the Judge when sitting on a stage of judicial proceeding amounts to a trial, though by a summary mode, and is therefore appealable—4 M II C R 146 A Sessions Judge cannot refuse to hear an appeal against an order under this section, because in his opinion the matter is a mere trifle. He is bound to hear the appeal and come to a finding whether the conviction is legal or not—Ratanlal 978

481 (1) In every such case the Court shall record the facts constituting the offence, with the statement (if any) made by the offender, as well as the finding and sentence.

(2) If the offence is under Section 228 of the Indian Penal Code, the record shall show the nature and stage of the judicial proceeding in which the Court interrupted or insulted was sitting, and the nature of the interruption or insult.

1264 Record:—The procedure prescribed by sec 480 for punishing a contempt committed in facie curiae is of a summary character, and the Court taking action under that section is therefore required to record certain particulars mentioned in sec 481. When the guilt or innocence of a person depends upon the exact words used by him it is the duty of the Magistrate to record them with a reasonable degree of precision and his omission to record the nature of the insult constitutes a great defect in the procedure—Dalip Singh v Crown 2 Lah 308 (311). A Criminal Court inflicting a fine for contempt of Court should specifically record its reasons and the facts constituting the contempt with any statements the offender may make as well as the finding and sentence—4 M II C R 229. The directions contained in this section are mandatory and the omission to record the particulars as directed by the section is fatal to the proceedings—to C W N 1062. No person can be punished for contempt unless the specific offence charged against him be distinctly stated and an opportunity given him of answering the charge. The omission to record the statement of a legal practitioner charged for contempt is a fatal defect to the prosecution—Krishna Chandra v Emp 37 C L J 535 24 Cr L J 798.

Where a person is charged with an offence under section 228 I P C, the record convicting him must show the stage of the judicial proceeding interrupted, and the evidence must establish that such interruption was intentional omission to do so is a vital irregularity in procedure not curable by sec 537 of this Code—In re Kulah 15 Cr L J 621 (1886) 1886 P R 36.

482 (1) If the Court in any case considers that a person accused of any of the offences referred to in Section 480 and committed in its view or presence should be punished otherwise than in default of payment of fine, or that a fine exceeding two hundred rupees should be imposed upon him, or such Court is for any other reason opinion that the case should not be disposed of under Section 480, such Court, after recording the facts constituting the offence and the statement of the accused as hereinbefore provided, may forward the case to a Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the same, and may require security to be given for the appearance of such accused person before such Magistrate, or if sufficient security is not given, shall forward such person in custody to such Magistrate.

(2) The Magistrate, to whom any case is forwarded under this section shall proceed to hear the complaint against the accused person in manner hereinbefore provided.

1265 Scope—Under section 480 the Magistrate can award a fine up to Rs 200 or a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine. If however, the Magistrate considers that a substantive sentence of imprisonment or a heavier fine is demanded by the circumstances of the case he ought to forward the case to another Magistrate under this section—6 M H C R App 16 10 W R 47

Section 482 need not be read along with section 480 and section 482 does not require a Magistrate to draw up proceedings on the same day that the offence is committed—35 Cal 161

Procedure—If a Court considers a substantive sentence of imprisonment necessary, it should record a statement of the facts constituting the contempt and the statement of the accused, and forward the case to another Magistrate—11 W R 49

A Barrister in the course of the trial of a case in which he was the complainant, used insulting language to the Sub Magistrate. The Magistrate then recorded proceedings required by this section but failed to take any statement from the accused explanatory of his conduct, as the accused left the Court at once. It was held that the omission to take such statement was not fatal to the proceedings, and the case ought not to be dismissed on that ground—2 Weir 604

483 When the Local Government so direct, any Registrar

When Registrar or Sub Registrar or any Sub Registrar appointed Registrar to be deemed a Court under the Indian Registration Act, 1908, shall be deemed to be a Civil Court within the meaning of Section 480 and 482

1266 A Registrar or Sub-Registrar may be deemed to be a Court only for the purposes of secs 480 and 482 and it cannot be implied that he is to be deemed a Court for ordinary purposes. A provision that a particular officer may for a particular purpose be deemed a Court does not warrant the extension of that provision so as by inference to produce a group of rules in conflict with the general system. A provision such as that contained in this section is an excrescence on the general system such an exceptional provision should not be drawn out into all its logical consequences—12 Bom 36

484 When any Court has under Section 480 or Section 482 adjudged an offender to punish-

Discharge of offender on submission or apology

ment or forwarded him to a Magistrate for trial for refusing or omitting to do anything which he was lawfully required to do, or for any intentional insult or interruption, the Court may, in its discretion, discharge the offender or remit the punishment on his submission to the order or requisition of such Court, or on apology being made to its satisfaction

1267 Discharge on submission or apology:—Too much notice should not be taken of a hasty language used by rustic litigants during a moment of excitement without any serious intention of insulting the Court. If the offender offers an apology or adopts a submissive attitude, an admonition by the Court, or at the most a petty fine would be sufficient—Jit Singh v Crown 1912 P W R 23

Power of High Court to interfere—A pleader was tried and punished for contempt by a Munsiff for having used certain words which the latter thought to be derogatory to his position. The pleader gave an assurance that the words in question had no reference to the Court but the Munsiff declined to accept the assurance. The District Judge refused to interfere on appeal by the pleader. The High Court on revision directed the Munsiff to consider whether it was not a case in which he himself should take action under section 484 of the Code. Upon the Munsiff declining to do so because the pleader had not withdrawn the words in question the High Court held that the assurance given by the pleader should be taken to be sufficient, and remitted the punishment—Ravi Pal v A F 11 A 1 J 933 14 Cr L J 687

485 If any witness or person called to produce a document or thing before a Criminal Court

Imprisonment or commitment of person refusing to answer or produce document.

refuses to answer such questions as are put to him or to produce any document or thing in his possession or power which the Court requires him to produce, and does not offer any reasonable excuse for such refusal, such Court may, for reasons to be recorded in writing, sentence him to simple imprisonment, or by warrant under the hand of the presiding Magistrate or Judge commit him to the custody of an officer of the Court for any term not exceeding seven days, unless in the meantime such person consents to be examined and to answer, or to produce the document or thing. In the event of his persisting in his refusal, he may be dealt with according to the provisions of section 480 or section 482, and in the case of a Court established by Royal Charter, shall be deemed guilty of a contempt.

1268 Witness.—A complainant is not a witness and therefore not punishable under this section—13 Bom 600

A witness cannot be punished for not answering a question which is irrelevant to the real issue or which he is not legally bound to answer—13 Bom 600 Where the question is asked with a view to criminal proceedings being taken against the witness, he is not legally bound to answer it and he cannot be punished for refusing to answer—10 Bom 185

'Any term not exceeding 7 days'—It is advisable, but not necessary, to limit the period of detention in custody to a fixed time—1 Ind Jur N S 23.

An application for the release of the accused should be made to the committing Judge—Ibid. —

486 (1) Any person sentenced by any Court under section 480 or section 485 may, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, appeal to the Court to which decrees or orders made in such Court are ordinarily appealable.

(2) The provisions of Chapter XXXI shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to appeals under this section, and the Appellate Court may alter or reverse the finding, or reduce or reverse the sentence appealed against.

(3) An appeal from such conviction by a Court of Small Causes in a presidency-town shall lie to the High Court, and an appeal from such conviction by any other Court of Small Causes shall lie to the Court of Session for the sessions division within which such Court is situate.

(4) An appeal from such conviction by any officer as Registrar or Sub-Registrar appointed as aforesaid may, when such officer is also Judge of a Civil Court, be made to the Court to which it would, under the preceding portion of this section, be made if such conviction were a decree by such officer in his capacity as such Judge, and in other cases may be made to the District Judge or, in the presidency towns, to the High Court.

See 4 M H C R 146 and Ratanlal & Co. cited in Note 1263 under section 480, under heading "Appeal"

487 (1) Except as provided in Sections * * 480 and 485, no Judge of a Criminal Court or

Certain Judges and Magistrates not to try offences referred to in S 195 when committed before themselves

Magistrate, other than a Judge of a High Court, shall try any person for any offence referred to in Section 195, when such offence is committed before himself or in contempt of his authority, or is brought under his notice as such Judge or Magistrate in the course of a judicial proceeding

(2) Nothing in Section 476 or Section 482 shall prevent a Magistrate empowered to commit to the Court of Session or High Court from himself committing any case to such Court

Change:—The word "477" has been omitted in Sub-section (1) by section 130 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923 This is consequential to the repeal of sec 477

1269 General rule:—A Magistrate cannot convict a person for contempt of Court committed in respect of his own authority A commitment to another Magistrate is necessary in all such cases—Ratanlal 641 All 625, 13 Mad 24 The Court before which an offence was committed, and by which the preliminary inquiry was held under sec 476, should not be the Court to try the case—15 W R 88 The fundamental rule in the administration of justice is that no man can be a Judge in a case wherein he is interested—12 W R 18

Thus, where a Sessions Judge has directed the trial of a person for the offence of giving false evidence committed before him in the course of a judicial proceeding of a criminal nature, he cannot try the case himself—14 All 324 If the facts alleged to constitute the offence came to the knowledge of the Magistrate in the course of judicial proceedings, he has no jurisdiction himself to try the case—Emp v Kunwar Bahadur 23 O C 138 21 Cr L J 696 A Magistrate whose summons was disobeyed has no jurisdiction to try the offence of disobedience of summons—2 Weir 612, 16 A L J 432 A Magistrate who issued an order under section 144 of this Code cannot himself try the disobedience of that order—10 B H C R 424, 24 Mad 262, Ratanlal 904 A Magistrate, who makes an order under sec 133 for the removal of a nuisance, cannot himself try and convict the person to whom such order was directed and who has disobeyed it—Emp v Hira Lal, 1883 A W N 222 The Rangoon High Court holds that although it is not desirable that a Magistrate whose lawful orders are disobeyed should, save in very exceptional circumstances, try and dispose of the charge of disobedience himself, still, unless there has been a clear failure of justice, the High Court will not ordinarily interfere with the Magistrate's action—J R Das v Emp 1 Rang 549

1270 Scope of section:—Sec 487, which says that no Court shall try any person for the offence committed in contempt of its own authority is not limited to offences falling under Chapter X of the Penal Code. It extends to all contempts of Courts—1 Bom 339. Moreover, the prohibition in this section extends to the abetment of the offences referred to in the section. Therefore, a Magistrate is not competent to convict a person of abetting the giving of false evidence in a judicial proceeding before himself—7 M H C R App 28.

Where a District Magistrate (as the head of the Police) gave sanction to prosecute a person for giving false information to the police, the District Magistrate was not incompetent to try or hear an appeal from the conviction of such person, section 487 would not apply, because the offence was committed before the Police and not before the District Magistrate or in contempt of his authority or brought to his notice as Magistrate in the course of a judicial proceeding—Ramaswamy Lal v Q E, 27 Cal 452, 3 All 322, 1905 P R 12.

Magistrate—This section is wide enough to include a Presidency Magistrate. A Presidency Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try a case under sec 188 I P C when the order alleged to have been disobeyed was an order which he had himself passed—12 C W N 246.

Prohibition to try the case—According to the Madras High Court, this section prohibits the Judge or Magistrate only to try the case, but a Sessions Judge before whom an offence was committed is not precluded by this section to hear an appeal in the case—2 Weir 607. But the Calcutta High Court holds that the words "shall try a person" in this section include the trial of an appeal. Therefore, where a Judge sanctions the prosecution of a decreeholder under sec 210 I P C for an offence committed before a Munsiff he is not competent to hear an appeal from the conviction of the decreeholder for that offence—Madhub Chunder v Notodeep 16 Cal 121. So also, the Burma Chief Court holds that a Judge who has directed a prosecution should not hear the appeal of the accused when convicted, even though the appeal is not against the conviction but only against the severity of the sentence—2 L B R 302. Where a District Magistrate procured the initiation of a number of prosecutions against the same person, and one of them which resulted in conviction came before him in appeal, the High Court considering that it was not altogether proper that he should hear the appeal, ordered its transfer to the Sessions Judge—24 W R 58. The Nagpur Court also holds that the word 'try' as used in this section includes the hearing of an appeal—Arishnappa v Emp 25 Cr L J. 713.

1271 "As such Judge or Magistrate":—These ambiguous words have given rise to two sets of conflicting rulings which it is difficult to reconcile and there can be no doubt that the policy of the law has been to some extent frustrated by the ambiguous language of the section. Does this expression mean that the Judge or Magistrate is precluded from trying the case only when the offence was committed before him or brought to his notice while acting in his capacity as Judge or Magistrate? In other words, does this section empower the Magistrate or Judge to try an offence which was committed before him or brought under his notice in another capacity.' In 16 Cal 766, it has been held that a Sessions Judge may as Sessions Judge try an offence committed before him in another capacity as District Judge that is, the prohibition is restricted to a 'Judge' of a criminal Court, and that being so a strict construction must be placed upon the words 'as such Judge' and it must be held that they do not include a Judge of a Civil Court or a District Judge. The same view has been taken in 6 Bom 479, 7 C W N 768 L B R (1897 1901) 127, 16 Bom 380. Thus it is held that a Magistrate is not debarred from trying an accused person for disobedience of summons issued by him in his capacity as Mamlatdar—18 Bom 380. Where sanction is given by a Deputy Collector and Magistrate in his capacity as Revenue Officer, he is not debarred from trying the case himself as a Deputy Magistrate—2 Weir 613.

But if this view be adopted, does not this section run counter to the fundamental principle of law that no man ought to be a Judge in a case in which he is interested? The prohibition in this section is a personal one, the mischief to be prevented being that the same person should not decide a matter which he may have already prejudged. It does not refer to the office of the Magistrate or Judge before whom an offence of the class described in the section is committed but refers to the person of the Judge or Magistrate—1 Mad 305. An officer before whom while acting in a particular capacity an offence has been committed, punishable under sec 218 I L C cannot in another capacity take up and try the offence—an offence committed against himself. If he could do so, it would be in violation of that fundamental rule in the administration of justice that no man can be a Judge in a case wherein he is interested—12 W R 18. When a Judge on the Civil side has already formed an opinion that a document has been forged or a perjury has been committed he should not try the case as a Sessions Judge and it is proper for the High Court to transfer the case to another Judge as in no of relieving the former Judge from a position which he himself would desire to avoid—5 M 11 C R 212.

CHAPTER XXXVI

OF THE MAINTENANCE OF WIVES AND CHILDREN

Sir James Fitz James Stephen describes this chapter as 'a mode of preventing vagrancy or at least of preventing its consequences'. The object of maintenance proceedings is not to punish a parent for his past neglect, but to prevent vagrancy by compelling those who can do so to support those who are unable to support themselves and who have a moral duty to support—Sardar Md v Nur Md 1917 F R 22. The scope of this chapter is limited and the Magistrate may not, except as here provided, usurp the jurisdiction in matrimonial disputes possessed by the Court—16 Bom 269.

488 (1) If any person having sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain his wife or his legitimate or illegitimate child unable to maintain itself, the District Magistrate,

Order for maintenance of wives and children

a Presidency Magistrate, a Sub divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class may, upon proof of such neglect or refusal, order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of his wife or such child at such monthly rate not exceeding one hundred rupees in the whole, as such Magistrate thinks fit, and to pay the same to such person as the Magistrate from time to time directs

(2) Such allowance shall be payable from the date of the order, or, if so ordered, from the date of the application for maintenance

(3) If any person so ordered fails without sufficient cause to comply with the order, any such Magistrate may, for every breach of the order, issue a warrant for levying the amount due in manner herein before provided for levying fines, and may sentence such person, for the whole or any part of each month's allowance remaining unpaid after the execution of the warrant, to imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month or until payment if sooner made

Provided that, if such person offers to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him, and she refuses to live with him, such Magistrate may consider any grounds of refusal stated by her, and may make an order under this section notwithstanding such offer if he is satisfied that there is just ground for so doing

Provided, further, that no warrant shall be issued for the recovery of any amount due under this section unless application be made to the Court to levy such amount within a period of one year from the date on which it became due

(4) No wife shall be entitled to receive an allowance from her husband under this section if she is living in adultery, or if, without any sufficient reason, she refuses to live with her husband, or if they are living separately by mutual consent

(5) On proof that any wife in whose favour an order has been made under this section is living in adultery, or that with out sufficient reason she refuses to live with her husband, or that they are living separately by mutual consent, the Magistrate shall cancel the order.

(6) All evidence under the Chapter shall be taken in the presence of the husband or father, as the case may be, or, when his personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of his pleader, and shall be recorded in the manner prescribed in the case of summons-cases.

Provided that, if the Magistrate is satisfied that he is wilfully avoiding service, or wilfully neglects to attend the Court, the Magistrate may proceed to hear and determine the case ex parte. Any order so made may be set aside for good cause shown on application made within three months from the date thereof.

(7) (Omitted.)

(8) The Court in dealing with applications under this section shall have power to make such order as to costs as may be just.

(9) Proceedings under this section may be taken against any person in any district where he resides or is, or where he last resided with his wife, or, as the case may be, the mother of the illegitimate child.

This section has been amended by section 131 of the Cr P C amendment Act XVIII of 1923, and the changes introduced are the following:—First in sub-section (1) the words one hundred have been substituted for fifty, in order to suit modern conditions in life. Secondly, in sub-section (2) the words fails without sufficient cause have been substituted for the words wilfully neglects owing to the difficulties which have been felt in the interpretation of the word wilfully (Statement of Objects and Reasons, 1914). Thirdly a proviso has been added to sub-section (3) to provide a period of limitation for the recovery of outstanding arrears. Fourthly, sub-section (7) has been omitted, it ran thus: The accused may tender himself as a witness and in such case shall be examined as such. This is now expressly provided by sub-section (2) of sec 340. Fifthly, in sub-section (9) the words any person have been substituted for the words the accused in order to make it clear that the person proceeded against under this section is not in the position of an accused person.

1272 Section not affected by personal law.—The right to maintenance conferred by this section is a Statutory right, which the Legislature has created irrespective of the nationality or creed of the parties, the only condition precedent to the possession of that right, in the case of a wife being the existence of the conjugal relation.—3 All 226

Thus, a mutta wife is not, under the Muhammedan Law of the Shia sect, entitled to maintenance, but this disability arising from her personal law is different from her statutory right to maintenance under this Code. In other words, she is entitled to maintenance under this section, irrespective of the fact that she is not entitled to maintenance under her personal law—Luddon Sahiba v Mirza Kamar, 8 Cal 736. The right of illegitimate children to be maintained by their actual father is a statutory right, and the duty is created by express enactment independent of the personal law of the parties—19 Mad 46r. There is no text of Hindu law under which an illegitimate son of a Hindu by a woman who is not a Hindu can claim maintenance but under this section such illegitimate child is entitled to claim maintenance from his putative father—27 Mad 13. Apart from the Hindu Law, maintenance is awardable in such cases on general principles, the defendant having begotten the child is bound to provide for its maintenance—32 Cal 49. The father of an illegitimate child cannot get rid of his statutory obligation under this Code to maintain that child by pleading that he is a Buddhist monk. The Criminal Procedure Code must override his personal law if it conflicts with it—(1922) U B R 2nd Qr 138.

On the other hand, the provision in the Cr P Code does not take away any right conferred by the Hindu Law. Thus under this Code, the illegitimate daughters are entitled to claim maintenance only from their father, but under the Hindu law, they can claim maintenance not only from their father but also from his coparceners who took his property by survivorship—Natarajan v Muthia 22 L W 650 A I R 1926 Mad 261.

1273 Who can be ordered:—An undivided son living with his father can be ordered to maintain his wife under this section—13 Mad 17. The mere fact that the defendant is 16 years of age only and studying at school will not by itself be a sufficient cause for his being relieved of the liability imposed by this section of providing for his illegitimate child—4 N W P H C R 123.

The order may be passed only against the father or husband as the case may be. This section does not authorise a Magistrate to order the father-in-law to pay maintenance to his daughter-in-law—1903 P R 26 1914 P L R 115.

Of sufficient means—Before an order is passed under this section it must be proved that the person ordered has sufficient means to support his wife and children—1882 A W N 179. If he has sufficient means he is not relieved of the obligation to maintain his wife on the ground that the wife has means of earning money by her own labour—1887 A W N 107, or that the wife has relations able and willing to maintain her—2 Weir 615, 16 Cr L J 80 (Mad), or that the wife has sufficient earning of her own (including her husband's earnings)—10 Bur L R 166.

A Magistrate is not justified in absolutely refusing to order maintenance to be paid to the wife on the ground that the husband is a man of slender means—2 Weir 617. In such a case, only a small amount will be ordered. So too the fact that the father is a professional beggar does not relieve him from his obligation to maintain his illegitimate child. If a man is capable of labour, and the Magistrate is satisfied that the child is his child, he should order the payment of a reasonable sum—2 Weir 616. The word 'means' in this section does not signify only visible means, such as real property or definite employment. If a man is healthy and able-bodied he must be held to have the means to support his wife, and he cannot be relieved of this obligation on the ground that he is only 19 years old and unemployed—In re Handasamy, 50 M L J 44 27 Cr L J 350. So also, the mere fact that the husband is a young boy of 16 is not a ground for granting merely nominal maintenance. He must make serious endeavour to find work, and must pay sufficient maintenance to his wife—Ma v Ma Ma 4 Bur L J 258. In a Burma case it has been held that in the case of a Pongyi or Buddhist priest, the presumption is that he possesses no property except such as is necessary for his religious life and which is held under conditions which do not make it available for other purposes and a woman who allows herself to be seduced by a member of the priesthood cannot obtain any maintenance for her child, she ought to have known beforehand that a priest has no money—1 Bur L J 97. But in another Burma case it has been held that a Buddhist monk cannot get rid of his statutory obligation under this Code to maintain his illegitimate child. If he is an able-bodied man, the presumption is that he has sufficient means to maintain himself and his child and it is for him to prove the contrary. If he cannot pay the maintenance ordered if he remains a monk, it is his duty to throw off the yellow robe and work—(1921) U B R 2nd Qr 138.

The onus is on the husband or father to show that he has no sufficient means to support his wife and children. An able-bodied man who is suffering from no physical infirmity will be presumed to have sufficient means to support himself and his family—1911 U B R 1st Qr 90.

1274 Neglect or refusal to maintain.—The first essential for proceedings under this section is that the person proceeded against should have neglected or refused to maintain his wife or children. If there is no evidence as to the neglect or refusal, an order for maintenance passed by the Magistrate is bad in Law v Sa Ma 27 O C 271 1 O W N 150 26 Cr L J 128 16 W R 6 16 Bom 269. Where the evidence was that since the separation had taken place, the husband was regularly paying Rs 92 for the maintenance of his wife and children, it was held that the Magistrate was wrong in having entertained the petition at all—Graham v Graham, 4 Bur L J 11, 26 Cr L J 831.

The neglect or refusal to maintain wife and children may be expressed or implied. The Court may infer the neglect or refusal from the conduct of the husband—9 Bom L R 359. To give jurisdiction to a Magistrate, it is not necessary to prove express refusal to maintain, if the husband or father does not in fact maintain his wife or children, he is said to neglect or refuse to maintain them—8 Bur L R 96. Where the father has denied his paternity, that is a fact from which the Court can infer neglect to maintain—6 S L R 208. But where the husband is willing to maintain his wife and the wife is willing to live with her husband, i.e. where both parties are willing to live together, the fact the wife deposes that though she is willing to live with her husband, the latter refuses to maintain her, will not lead the Court to infer that the husband is unwilling to maintain his wife—1914 P W R 46 When there is no proof of refusal or neglect to maintain the wife, the husband ought not to be ordered to pay maintenance on the ground that he has been guilty of cruelty to her—Ibid

A mere offer by the husband to maintain his children made at the trial is not sufficient to oust the Magistrate of his jurisdiction, if as a matter of fact the husband has paid nothing for the maintenance of his children for several years—Kent v Kent 49 M L J 335 26 Cr L J 1597, Kambu Ammal v Ranganathan, 1924 M W N 465 25 Cr L J 94 If in fact the father has neglected or refused to maintain his children the Magistrate can make an order for the payment of monthly allowance for the maintenance of the children An offer to maintain the children in the future is not sufficient of itself to debar the Magistrate from making the order Otherwise in those cases where the children are very young a man, knowing full well that no mother would part with such children, has simply to make an ostensible offer to keep the children with him, and he can thus defeat an application for maintenance The Magistrate will be entitled to consider the circumstances in which the offer was made, and whether it is right and proper that the children, if not in the custody of the father, should be handed over to him—David Sasson v Emp, 49 Bom 562 27 Bom I R 359 A I R 1925 Bom 259 26 Cr L J 975 1905 U B R (Cr P C) 39 But the Punjab Chief Court has held that if the father offers to maintain his children on condition that they should live with him the Magistrate should refrain from passing an order against him—Sardar Muhammad v Nur Muhd 1917 P R 221 18 Cr L J 811, Rulla v Iltis 1914 P I R 115 15 Cr L J 329 Vin Singh v Dharma 1894 P R 18

This section is based on the principle that there is a continuing obligation upon a father, who has sufficient means, to support his child If a man who is bound to maintain his child continuously does not do so, he is deemed to have neglected to maintain and proof of actual refusal to maintain is not necessary The fact that the child is not in a starving condition is no answer to an application for maintenance—L B R (1900-1902) 189, Baran v Ma Chan, 2 Rang 682 26 Cr L J 535, 8 Bur L R 96

The fact that a lump sum has been paid to the wife in final settlement of all her claims is no answer to an application for maintenance, if in fact the money has been spent or lost or does not yield a sufficient income—1905 L B R (Cr P C) 45 I B R (1900-1902) 189 But where the father has given certain property to the mother for the maintenance of the child, which yields sufficient monthly income and furnishes means of support, he cannot be said to have neglected to maintain his child and an order cannot be made under this section—U B R (1897-1901) 108; 2 Weir 643

A father's neglect to sue for the custody of a girl who has chosen to live with her mother who is living in adultery, cannot be deemed to be a neglect on his part to maintain the daughter—2 Weir 630 Where the father is entitled to the custody of children, and the mother who takes them away does not allow them to return to him, there is no such neglect or refusal to maintain them as is contemplated by this section—2 Weir 632 Where the children who were being properly maintained while in the custody of their father, were dissuaded by their mother from his custody and went away to live with their mother, the refusal of the father to maintain them unless they returned to his custody was not a refusal to maintain within the meaning of this section—Ma Shwe v Mg Po Chat, 8 L B R 103 16 Cr L J 217

Before passing an order under this section, the Magistrate ought to ascertain whether the husband has been called upon to maintain his wife Where the husband has not been called upon to do so, and the wife was living with her father who refused to allow her to live with her husband without a money payment from him, the Magistrate cannot make an order for maintenance—22 W R 30

The neglect or refusal must be present neglect or refusal Where a wife, subsequent to her application for maintenance, came to live with her husband and compromised her claim, but prayed for an order of the Magistrate to the effect that if her husband failed to maintain her in future he should pay her a certain allowance, it was held that the Magistrate could not pass such order but must dismiss the application, as no present refusal or neglect was established—2 Weir 630

1275 Right of wife to maintenance—To justify an order under this section, it must be shown that the complainant is the wife of the defendant—16 Bom 269 The condition precedent to a right of maintenance, in the case of a wife is the existence of a conjugal relation—5 All 226 It is only on proof of the relationship of husband and wife that an order for maintenance should be made but where such relationship has ceased to exist an order already made may be stayed—5 Cal 558 No order for maintenance can be passed under this section as against the husband, in favour of the wife where there is no proof that the latter is the lawfully married wife of the former, according to his personal law—7 Bur L T 71 7 L B R 270 Among Jats, Karoo marriage is a valid marriage, and the woman is entitled to maintenance—4 N W P H C R 128 A muta wife is entitled to maintenance under this section, though she is not entitled under the Mahomedan law—8 Cal 736

Effect of divorce—A Muhammadan wife is entitled to maintenance up to the date of divorce—19 All 50 Even after divorce, she is entitled to maintenance during the iddat—1905 P R 5 2 Weir 617 20 M L J 12 But an order for maintenance subsequent to the expiration of the iddat is illegal, unless pregnancy is alleged—2 Weir 617 1888 A W N 116, 13 Bur L T 43

When a husband pleads non liability to maintain his wife on the ground of his having divorced her, the Magistrate is bound to entertain and enquire into such plea If he finds the plea established, he cannot order maintenance—1894 P R 21, 2 Weir 620 1915 U B R 1st Cr 53 Where a Magistrate makes an order under this section, the order becomes functus officio on a subsequent divorce of the wife by the husband—17 O C 260

1276 Right of children to maintenance—The child must be born no order can be passed under this section for the maintenance of a foetus, when it is believed that a woman is pregnant. Until it is born it can hardly be regarded as a child—3 N W P H C R 70, 2 Weir 618

The word 'child' in this section simply means son or daughter. Reference to age is purposely omitted the object being that any son or daughter is entitled to maintenance so long as he or she is unable to maintain himself or herself—1910 P W R 28. In 37 Mad 565 and 5 N L J 247 it has been held that the word 'child' means one who has not attained majority.

Legitimate children—A child born during the continuance of the form of marriage known as Sai bandhan and prevalent among the Syrian community in Malabar is entitled to maintenance under this section—22 Mad 246. 23 Mad 247 (foot note). Children of a Nikah wife are legitimate and entitled to maintenance—18 W R 28.

Illegitimate children—An order under this section may be passed for the maintenance of legitimate as well as illegitimate children. The basis of an application for the maintenance of a child under this section is the paternity of the child irrespective of its legitimacy or illegitimacy—16 Cal 781. But before an order for the maintenance of illegitimate children is passed it must be proved that the man against whom the woman proceeds was the father of the children—18 All 107. Where maintenance is claimed for an illegitimate child from an alleged father it is not enough that the defendant may have been the father, but the Magistrate must be able to find that in all reasonableness no one else can have been the father—2 Weir (2). The Magistrate is not justified in holding that the child is the child of the defendant on the ground of the similarity of the features and the name of the child with those of the defendant—16 Cal 781.

Children in custody of mother—Where a mother has the custody of a child and has to maintain it, she is entitled to claim maintenance on his account—2 Weir 630. And the father cannot refuse to maintain his children on the ground that they are living with their mother. If he wants to have them in his custody, he must enforce his right, if any, in the Civil Court—Munagesa v. Sodiamma 8 Bur 1 T 134. 16 Cr 1 J 65. A divorced wife is under the Mohammedan law entitled to the custody of her children, and the father is not thereby relieved of his liability to maintain them—6 Bom L R 536, 19 Mad 461. But where a child has left its father and has chosen to live with its mother who is leading a life of adultery since she left her husband, the father cannot be directed to pay an allowance to the child under this section—2 Weir (30). See also 2 Weir (32) and 8 L B R 105 cited in Note 1274 ante.

Effect of agreement—Obligation to maintain a child is a statutory obligation and the parties cannot contract themselves out of it—L B R (1900-1902) 126. The father cannot divest himself of his liability to maintain his child, by an agreement with his wife—2 Weir 648. The language of this section is inconsistent with the capacity of a wife to make a contract absolving her husband from his statutory liability—U B R (1905) 45. But it has been held in 2 Weir 611, that where the mother of the illegitimate children renounced on their behalf all future claims of maintenance by a document on payment of a certain sum by the father, the Magistrate was not competent to pass any further order for maintenance unless there was proof of fraud in the execution of the document, or unless it was proved that there was a valid subsequent oral agreement in supersession of the document. A compromise by the lawful guardian of a minor acting bona fide for his benefit cannot be set aside even at his instance, except upon proof of fraud—2 Weir 639.

But there can be no doubt that when a compromise made by the guardian of a minor does not appear to be for his benefit and it is very likely that he would be materially injured by a manifestly inadequate adjustment of his maintenance-claim under this section the compromise will not bind the minor nor any one acting as guardian after the mother's death—1885 P R 13.

The father is bound to maintain the child if it is unable to maintain itself, even though its mother may be able to maintain it. The question as to the means of the mother is not to be taken into account, the true criterion is the inability of the child to support itself—7 Bur I T 34. The fact that the child belongs to a well-to-do farwad does not relieve the father from his liability to maintain it. The inability referred to in this section relates to the absence of sufficient maturity of physical and mental development in the child rendering it in consequence unable to earn its living by its own efforts and does not refer to inability through poverty or absence of all means—In re Parathi Lalappell 25 M L J 355 14 Cr I J 59. But in 39 Mad 957 and 19 Mad 461 it has been held that this section has no application to cases where the children are being maintained by a farwad which is bound by law to maintain them. The words 'unable to maintain itself' cannot be confined to the tender age of the child but have also reference to its financial position. Therefore where there are enough funds to support the child in the farwad to which it belongs it cannot be said to be unable to maintain itself—37 M L J 361. The offspring of a sambandham marriage are entitled to maintenance from their tavazhi, and if the tavazhi or farwad has sufficient means to maintain them, they are not entitled to an order of maintenance under this section—In re Bharata Aiyar, 46 M L J 324.

A child who is deaf and dumb and unable to maintain itself is entitled to maintenance even though it may have attained majority—In re Todd 5 N W P H C R 237. A minor girl earning her living by prostitution will still be considered to be 'unable to maintain herself' because prostitution is not to be treated as a profession by which a girl can maintain herself for the purpose of this section—37 Mad 565. But a minor married girl, whose husband is willing to maintain her, cannot be regarded as a person unable to maintain herself, and her father cannot be ordered to maintain her—2 Weir 650 But if in spite of her marriage the girl still remains unable to maintain herself either because her husband is too poor to maintain her or for any other good reason, the father's liability to maintain the child would still exist—Ameenakshi v Karupanna 48 Mad 503 48 M L J 183 26 Cr L J 732 The child is entitled to get maintenance until it is able to maintain itself, the Magistrate is not justified in ordering maintenance 'till the child attains the age of 14' 2 Magistrate has no power to fix an arbitrary age limit up to which the child will get maintenance—2 P I T 109 Where a boy is aged 17 or 18 and is able to work and earn his living he cannot be said to be 'unable to maintain himself,' and he cannot compel his father to educate him in a college and thus better his prospects—1 Bur L J 123 But a boy of 11 years must be deemed to be a child 'unable to maintain itself,' and is entitled to maintenance it would be contrary to public policy to encourage child labour by holding that a boy of 11 years should contribute towards his own support by work, when he should be in school—Baran Shanta v Ma Chan 2 Rang 682 26 Cr L J 535

1278 Order for maintenance:—The only order that can be passed under this section is either an order allowing maintenance or an order dismissing the application for maintenance. He cannot pass any other order. Where a claim for maintenance is compromised by the consent of parties the Magistrate is not competent to pass an order in accordance with the terms of the compromise. He can only dismiss the petition and strike it off the file. To pass a decree in terms of the compromise would be to assume the functions of the Civil Court—2 Weir 629 2 Weir 630

The order under this section must not be conditional and must not have reference to any future circumstances. When the wife, after compromising the claim for maintenance, prayed for an order by the Magistrate that if her husband failed to support her in future, he should pay her a monthly allowance, it was held that the Magistrate could not pass an order of this nature, he must dismiss the application—2 Weir 630 An order for maintenance passed on condition that the woman must reside in her husband's house is illegal—1917 P R 14

Who can order—Only the Magistrates enumerated in this section can inquire into the case and pass an order for maintenance. An inquiry under this section cannot be delegated by a First Class Magistrate to a Magistrate of a lower rank—2 Weir 617 A First Class Magistrate cannot refer an application under this section to a Subordinate Magistrate of lower grade and act upon his report—1905 P R 20, 11 Mad 109

Monthly allowance—The law empowers a Magistrate only to direct payment of a monthly maintenance. An agreement between a husband and wife whereby the husband agreed that he would furnish his wife with certain ornaments build a house for her, deliver to her annually a certain amount of grain and pay her a certain sum in cash, is not an agreement which can be made the basis of an order under this section, and therefore can not be enforced under its provisions—6 Mad 283, 21 Cr L J 612 (Lab) The payment ordered must be a monthly payment. An order for the payment of a certain sum annually for the value of clothes is not legal—2 Weir 627 But where a razinamah entered into between the parties contains an agreement for the payment of a certain sum annually for value of clothes, the wife is entitled to ask the Court to give effect to the general intention of the parties as disclosed by the razinamah, by allotting in the monthly allowance the value of the clothes agreed to be paid annually—2 Weir 634

The payment of maintenance must be in money an order for payment of maintenance in grain is not in accordance with this Code—2 Weir 626, 2 Weir 627, 1911 P R 19 1887 P R 3 Itru v Mabon 25 Cr L J 1271 (Lah) So also, an order directing a mixed payment in kind and cash is contrary to the terms of this section—Mukta v Dattu Mahader 26 Bom L R 186

An order under this section fixing the duration of the period for which the maintenance is to be paid, is illegal—2 Weir 634

1279 Amount of maintenance:—In determining the amount of maintenance, no luxury should be allowed, but only the necessities of life should be considered according to the station in life of the applicant and the means of the respondent—4 Bur L T 269 The maximum amount which can be awarded for the maintenance of each person is now Rs 100, under the old law it was Rs 50 The words 'in the whole' mean that a sum of money not exceeding Rs 100 should be ordered to be paid, and no other payment either in the shape of school fees or medical expenses etc should be ordered to be paid The words do not mean that when a woman makes an application for herself and for her children, she can only be awarded Rs 100 for the maintenance of herself and of her children whatever be the number The Magistrate can order a sum not exceeding Rs 100 to be paid for the wife and for each of the children unable to maintain itself—Kent v Kent 49 M L J 335 26 Cr L J 1597 A I R 1926 Mad 59 Where a wife applied for maintenance of herself and her four children and the Magistrate ordered the husband to pay Rs 50 (under the old section) for maintenance of the wife and Rs 10 for each child, every month, it was held that the order was legal The husband was liable to maintain his wife and each of his children and the Magistrate might order him to pay as much as Rs 50 for each of them if each child was living with a different person And the fact that all the children were at the time in the custody of the mother could not affect the question of what should be paid to each child—4 Bur L T 139

A prospective order, providing for increase being made in the amount awarded for a child's maintenance hereafter as the child grows older, is not justified by law—2 N W P H C R 454 A Magistrate cannot, under this section, make an order for maintenance at a progressively increasing rate He may, however, under sec 489, from time to time alter the rate of monthly allowance granted under this section, as the child grows older—12 Cal 535, 14 Mad 398

The Magistrate shall order the amount to be paid to the wife or child as the case may be. An order for the payment of the amount of maintenance at the Taluk Kutchery is not authorised by law—2 Weir 627

Order should specify amount payable to each person—An order under this section awarded Rs 42 for the maintenance of the wife and son, but nothing was said as to what portion was to be for the wife and what portion for the son. At the time the wife applied for enforcement of the order, the son was over 19 years of age and earning sufficient for him to live on. The Magistrate altered (under sec 489) the monthly allowance into Rs 25 payable to the wife only. It was held that as regards the son the foundation of the order was taken away when he was able to maintain himself, and it became spent so far as he was concerned and was not enforceable, and that the Magistrate in the original order not having allotted any particular portion to the wife, the order could not be partially enforced in favour of the wife, but that she should make a fresh application for maintenance for herself alone—9 L B R 49

Subsection (2)—The maintenance allowance is payable only from the date of the order (or at most from the date of the application). A direction to pay maintenance from a date prior to such date is opposed to this section—2 Weir 635. But where an order for such retrospective payment was made with the consent of the parties, the High Court did not interfere—2 Weir 635

1280 Subsection (3)—Enforcement of order:—In this subsection, the words 'fails without sufficient cause' have been substituted for the words 'wilfully neglects', because of difficulties which have arisen in the interpretation of the word 'wilfully'. Under the old law it was held that before an order for imprisonment could be made on default of payment of maintenance strict proof was necessary that the nonpayment was due to wilful neglect on the part of the defendant, and mere omission to pay the arrears was not sufficient—22 Cal 291, 5 O C 316, 25 Cal 291. Under the present law, no such proof is necessary, but simple non-payment without sufficient cause is sufficient to attract the provisions of this subsection.

When execution of a maintenance order is applied for and the counter-petitioner files a counter petition setting out certain grounds on which he contends that the order should not be executed, the Court is bound to consider the sufficiency of the cause alleged by the counter-petitioner and to refuse the execution if the Court is satisfied that the cause is sufficient and to grant execution if the Court is not satisfied with the cause alleged. The Legislature has used the expression 'sufficient cause' obviously intending that the Magistrate before whom the matter comes up should be in a position to use his judicial discretion having regard to all the circumstances, and that such judicial discretion should not be fettered or limited by any definite rules. The expression 'sufficient cause' is wide enough to include all possible considerations that may be submitted to the Magistrate in the circumstances of the case—Tertharappa v Meenakshi 48 M L J 424 26 Cr L J 953 A I R 1925 Mad 715

against after default is made but he cannot take security from that person in anticipation of default—24 W R 72

Warrant—A warrant in respect of the breach of the order is a condition precedent to the inflicting of imprisonment—9 All 240 A Police officer when executing a warrant for the levy of the amount of maintenance recoverable under this section can break open an inner door of the house of the person against whom it is executed—Rutinal 431

The law contemplates only a single warrant of commitment regarding the arrears due at the time of issue. Where six months' arrears are due, a separate warrant of commitment for each month's arrear is bad in law—25 Cal 291. The levy of accumulated arrears of maintenance by a single warrant and in one proceeding is not illegal—7 M H C R App 38 6 M H C R App 22

The second proviso (nowly added) to this sub-section provides a period of limitation (one year from the date of default) within which the application is to be made for the issue of the warrant for realisation of the outstanding arrears.

1281 Imprisonment:—The imprisonment may be awarded only after default is made. Where it was provided in the order of maintenance itself that in case of the defendant failing to pay the monthly allowance, he should be imprisoned for a term of 15 days for every breach of the order, it was held that the order was in anticipation of the procedure to take place on a wilful default if such should occur, and was therefore illegal—5 M H C R App 34. Imprisonment is a means of enforcing payment, and an order for imprisonment can be passed only after there has been negligence to pay the amount of maintenance—22 Cal 291.

Release on payment—The imprisonment awarded under this section is not a punishment for contempt of the Court's order, nor is it an absolute sentence. It is passed only for the unpaid portion of the maintenance, or in other words, it is owing to default of payment of the unrealised portion of the maintenance. Therefore, the imprisonment ought to cease upon payment of the amount of maintenance—22 Cal 291. The words "until payment is sooner made" did not occur in the 1882 Code, and therefore it was held in 8 Mad 70, and U B R (1892-96) 70, that a person committed to jail for non-payment of maintenance was not entitled to be released even when the arrears were paid because the imprisonment ordered in default of payment was held to be a punishment for breach of the order of the Court. These rulings are no longer good law.

Nature of imprisonment—The imprisonment under this section may be either simple or rigorous, looking to the terms of sec 2 (18) of the General Clauses Act—9 All 240. In Form VI not only simple but rigorous imprisonment is provided for, but it would be safer to order the imprisonment to be simple—U B R (1892-1896) 70.

Term of Imprisonment—It has been held in 9 All 240, 6 C R App 22 and 7 Bur L T. 225 that the maximum term of imprisonment is one month, and that only one month's imprisonment can be awarded on the whole in default of payment of the aggregate due In the Burma case, the words 'for the whole or any part of each month's allowance remaining unpaid' have been interpreted to mean 'for the whole or any part of every month's or all months' allowance remaining unpaid' Such an interpretation seems to be too laboured The more reasonable view has been taken in 20 Mad 3, 25 Cal 291 and 1877 P R 12 Thus, a person who has wilfully neglected to pay the arrears of maintenance for several months may be imprisoned for more than one month—1877 P R 12, 1919 P R 12 The imprisonment in default of payment of maintenance is not to be limited to one month The procedure contemplated by the Code appears to be to ascertain how many months arrears are due The maximum imprisonment that can be imposed will then be one month for each month's arrears, and if there is a balance representing the arrears for a portion of a month, a further term of a month's imprisonment may be imposed for such arrears—20 Mad 3, 25 Cal 291

1282 When order cannot be enforced:—Where a woman to whom maintenance has been ordered under this section subsequently voluntarily resides with her husband, the original order becomes ineffectual and if the husband again refuses to maintain her, fresh proceeding must be instituted under this section—1888 A W N 217

When the husband on summons appears and pays the arrears of maintenance into Court, the Magistrate cannot order imprisonment—1891 A W N 19

Where the husband has been adjudged an insolvent, the order of maintenance cannot be enforced so long as the order of adjudication stands and he cannot therefore be imprisoned for default of payment—Halphid v Halphid 50 Cal 867

If the defaulter dies, the order cannot be enforced against his estate—41 Cal 88

But the defendant's inability to pay is not a ground for the Magistrate's refusal to enforce the order for maintenance If the allowance granted is too excessive, he may revise the rate of maintenance on further inquiry, and the order will take effect from the date of such inquiry—2 Weir 636

1283 Offer to maintain wife:—Where the husband offers to maintain his wife and the wife consents to live with him, the Magistrate cannot make an order under this section, unless the complainant (wife) satisfies him that notwithstanding such offer there is just ground for making such order—1 C L J 214

The offer to maintain must be a bona fide offer, and not made with the object of escaping obligation—13 Cr L J. 55 But the fact that in the past he has neglected to maintain should not be considered as sufficient by itself to lead to the presumption that the offer is not made in good faith—1917 P R 22 In 22 Cr L J 149 (Lah) it has been held that if it is found that the husband had formerly turned his wife out of his house, his subsequent offer to keep her in his house cannot be taken to be bona fide, and he cannot escape his liability to maintain her under this section merely by such an offer, because he may break his promise as soon as she gets home.

The offer must be to maintain wife as wife. It has been however held in 16 Bom 269 that where the husband offered to keep the complainant in his house, not as wife but as a servant or dependent, the offer was a sufficient offer within the meaning of this section. But this decision does not seem to be just. The Madras High Court rightly lays down that an offer to maintain wife must be one to maintain her with the consideration due to her position as wife—17 Mad 260 2 Weir 641. And therefore where a Hindu husband having two wives offered to maintain his first wife in his own house adding that he would not live with her, but would supply grain for her to cook her own food and eat it separately in the house such an offer was not a sufficient offer within the meaning of this section—6 Mad 371 Sakrulla v Fatma 25 Cr L J 453 (Nag).

1284 Grounds of wife's refusal to live with husband:—An order for separate maintenance in favour of the wife may be made under this section if the wife has just grounds for refusing to live with her husband. Inability of husband and wife to agree to live together is not a ground for ordering separate maintenance for wife—6 W R 59. A Magistrate is not authorised to entertain an application for maintenance, where the husband has neither ill-treated his wife nor has refused or neglected to maintain her but she of her own accord left her husband's house and protection—6 N W P H C R 205. When the wife voluntarily leaves her husband's house without sufficient justification, she is not entitled to any order under this section unless the husband refuses to maintain her or turns her out or ill-treats her, so as to make it impossible for her to live with her husband—5 Bom L R 614.

The following are proper grounds for the wife's refusal to live with her husband—

(1) Cruelty. If the husband so ill-treats his wife (e.g. drives her out with blows) that she is compelled to leave his house she is justified in refusing to live with her husband and in claiming maintenance—Rappati v Deoli 46 All 87 (878). Under the Code of 1882 cruelty was the only ground on which a wife was justified in living separately from her husband and demanding maintenance. But the words "that he habitually treated his wife with cruelty" which occurred in the Code of 1882 have been substituted by the words "that there is just ground for so doing". This alteration gives the Magistrate larger discretion in giving maintenance. The present Code does not restrict the payment of maintenance, when the wife is living separately only to cases of cruelty—4 Bur L T 269. There are other grounds on which the wife may live separately and claim maintenance.

(2) If a Christian husband reverts to Hinduism and marries a second (Hindu) wife, the Christian wife may refuse to live with her husband, and apply for maintenance—4 M H C R App 3.

(3) Adultery on the part of the husband although not punished under the I P C, may nevertheless constitute sufficient cause for wife living separately from her husband, and enable her to claim maintenance under this section—20 Mad 470, 13 All 348 Where the husband is living with a mistress in the house at the time of application, the wife is entitled to refuse to live with him and a subsequent offer made by the husband in Court to give up his mistress does not deprive the wife of her right of refusal to live with her husband—14 Bur L R 240 But in such cases, the Magistrate should take into consideration the social habits of the particular community to which the parties belong If that community does not completely disapprove of concubinage and tolerates it so far as to give kept women some status and rights, the fact that the husband keeps a concubine ought not by itself to entitle the wife to claim separate maintenance—Gantapalli v Gantapalli 20 Mad 470 The circumstance that a Hindu husband keeps a concubine in the house will not entitle a wife to an allowance for maintenance if her husband is willing to receive her and treat her with the consideration which is due to her position—2 Weir 641 17 Mad 260

(4) Where the breach between the husband and wife is irremediable and it is quite impossible for the latter to return to the former after many years separation without leading to fresh trouble and dispute she is entitled to maintenance by living separate from him—1914 P W R 26

(5) The marriage of a Mahomedan with the step mother of his wife is not valid under the Mahomedan law The wife is entitled in such a case to say that she would not live with her husband during the continuance of such marriage—2 Weir 647

(6) Where a Burmese Buddhist has taken a lesser wife without the consent of the chief wife the latter can refuse to live with her husband at the same time and can claim maintenance—4 L B R 340 Also according to Burmese Buddhist law the fact that the husband took a second wife might be a good reason for the first wife's refusal to live with him unless he provided her with a separate residence—11 Bur L T 105

The following are not sufficient grounds for the wife's refusal to live with her husband —

(1) The fact that the husband has married again does not entitle the first wife to separate maintenance, if the husband is willing to maintain her in his house—7 Mad 187 1880 P R 27 1882 P R 31 1878 P R 2, 1877 P R 66 Ratanlal 7 1914 P R 12, Sukrulla v Fatma 25 Cr 1 J 423 (Nag) The existence of a co wife with whom the complainant had quarrels or the husband's want of affection for the complainant or his greater affection for the co wife is not a valid ground of the complainant's refusal to live with her husband—1901 P R 14 The fact that the younger wife will suffer annoyance from the elder wife and that the husband may not protect her from such annoyance, is not a proper ground for the younger wife's refusing to live with her husband and claiming maintenance—1904 L B R 1st Qr (Cr P C) 10

(2) Minority of the wife is not a ground for her not living with her husband if the husband offers to maintain his wife in her house—1882 P R 1 though in such a case having regard to her tender age, it might be better that she should live with her parents

(3) Where the husband is willing to maintain his wife, the fact that the prompt dower has not been paid is not a ground for separate residence and maintenance—1848 P R 6, 1840 P R 15

1285 Sub-section (4):—“Living in adultery”—Living in adultery means following a course of adulterous conduct more or less continuous a single act of adultery cannot be considered as living in adultery—Gantapalli v Gantapalli 20 Mad 470, 5 N I R 19, Patala Itchamma v Patala Mahalakshmi 30 Mad 332 The words ‘living in adultery’ refer to a course of conduct or at least to something more than a single lapse from virtue. Where the wife, two years prior to the application for maintenance, had given birth to an illegitimate child but since that time she had been living with her parents leading a chaste and respectable life, she cannot be said to be living in adultery so as to disentitle her to maintenance—Hallu v Kanniah 26 All 326

In the following cases, past adultery of the wife was held sufficient to disentitle her to maintenance, although she was not living in adultery at the time of the application. Thus, where a woman committed adultery with a man of low caste and was expelled from her caste, thereby making it impossible for her husband to live with her she could not claim maintenance, although at the time of application she was not living in adultery—31 Mad 185. Where the wife deserted her husband many years ago and led a life of adultery and has not attempted to seek her husband’s pardon for past misconduct the wife was not entitled to maintenance, merely because she was not living in adultery at the time of making the application for maintenance—Ratanlal 506

There must be clear proof of adultery. The mere fact that the husband considers the wife’s conduct open to suspicion is not sufficient—2 Weir 647. A mere suspicion by the husband that the child of the wife was the result of her intimacy with another man is not a ground of refusing maintenance—1881 V W N 31. The mere fact that the president of the brotherhood condemned the wife’s conduct is not a ground for dismissing an application for maintenance and the Magistrate should have inquired whether the wife was living in adultery—1881 V W N 62.

‘Refuses to live with her husband’—See Note 1284 ante. Where a Hindu wife leaves her husband’s house without good cause, her right of maintenance is only suspended, and she has the right to return to her husband’s house and claim maintenance—12 S L R 90.

‘Living separately by mutual consent’—A wife is not entitled to maintenance from her husband when both have entered into an agreement which provides for their living separately by mutual consent, and they are actually living separately in terms of that agreement—Ratanlal 870. Where it appeared that by mutual consent, the husband and wife had been living separately for a number of years, and that the maintenance of the wife was by arrangement made at the time they began to live separately, provided for by the assignment to her of some land, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make an order under this section—2 Weir 648.

To bring the case within subsection (4) it must be shown that the husband and the wife are living apart by a definite contract mutually m between them. A contract voluntarily and freely made and entered into between the parties is essential. Where therefore a husband and wife are living apart in obedience to the decree of a Panchayet of their castemen by which the wife is awarded maintenance, it cannot be said that they are living apart by mutual consent—4 P L J 109

1286 Sub section (5).—Cancellation of order.—Under this sub section an allowance granted to the wife only can be cancelled, an allowance granted to a child cannot be cancelled, though it may be altered under sec 489—1885 P R 17. An order for maintenance of the child of a divorced Mahomedan wife who has married again, cannot be cancelled under this section. Such an order can be cancelled only on the ground of change of circumstances mentioned in sec 489—27 All 11

Is living in adultery —An order granting maintenance to a wife can be cancelled under this sub section upon proof that the wife is living in adultery subsequent to the order—Ratanlal 353 8 B H C R 124 5 All 224. But adultery previous to the order of maintenance is not admissible in evidence to cancel the order. An order cancelling maintenance on the ground of facts antecedent to the order granting maintenance is illegal on the principle of res judicata—5 All 224. Past adultery is admissible under sub section (4) before passing an order of maintenance, but after an order is passed, such past adultery cannot be considered for the purpose of cancelling the order.

There must be sufficient evidence of adultery. The fact that the wife continually went to the bazar, or that men went to the house where she lived (especially when other people including the wife's mother lived in that house) is not sufficient evidence to lead to the conclusion that the wife was living in adultery—1893 A W N 56. The words 'living in adultery' mean a continuous course of misconduct and unless this continuity is established it cannot be inferred from a single act of adultery that the woman is living in adultery. Therefore where a woman to whom maintenance had been awarded under this section gave birth to an illegitimate child held that this single instance of misconduct did not show that she was living in adultery, so as to enable the Magistrate to cancel the allowance—Jatindra v Gouribala 29 C W N 647 26 Cr L J 1184. Where the husband alleges adultery, the Magistrate should make an inquiry and adjudicate upon such allegation—1902 P R 36 1882 A W N 168.

'Living separately by mutual consent' —Where after an order for maintenance has been passed both the husband and wife while temporarily living together presented a petition by which they agreed that the husband should pay his wife Rs 10 a month so long as she stayed at the house of her father, and the petition asked for a decree on the said terms, held that the intention of the parties was when they filed the petition that the wife should abandon all claims for arrears due till then—Parul Bala v Satish 37 C L J 180.

Where the wife denied the validity of an alleged deed of compromise by which the parties agreed to a reduction in the rate of the allowance ordered by the Magistrate it was held that the Magistrate was not competent to cancel the order for maintenance until the agreement had been declared by a competent tribunal to be binding on the wife—2 Weir 649

Other cases—Sub-section (5) is not exhaustive of the grounds on which an order for maintenance may be cancelled. Thus, an order can be cancelled on the ground of divorce. Where the husband pleads in answer to an application for enforcement of the order of maintenance, that he has lawfully divorced his wife, and such plea is proved, the Court will decline to enforce the order for the period subsequent to the date when the marriage ceased to exist—19 All 56; Bom 180, 17 N. L. R. 92. The apostacy of a Mahomedan wife ipso facto dissolves the marriage and the wife therefore is not entitled to maintenance from her husband—9 L. B. R. 206. In case of Mahomedans the order becomes inoperative on the expiry of the period of iddat after divorce—13 Buc 1743. Similarly, where the father was ordered to pay maintenance to his daughter, the marriage of the daughter makes her maintenance a charge on her husband and not on her father, and the father may apply for cancellation of the order—2 Weir 650. But these grounds are neither mentioned in this sub-section nor are they covered by Sec. 489 which speaks only of alteration of allowance and not of cancellation of the maintenance order. Therefore it is suggested that either this sub-section should be made more comprehensive, or the language of Sec. 489 should be so altered as to cover the above cases. See Note 1295 under Sec. 489.

Application to whom to be made—An application for the cancellation of an order of maintenance must be made to the Magistrate who made the original order or to his successor in office—25 All 545.

1287 Sub-section (6):—Evidence;—An order under this section must be passed on proof in the proceedings and not upon knowledge acquired by the Magistrate in some other case—8 W. R. 67 and the various elements required to sustain an order under this section must be strictly proved by evidence recorded on oath—13 W. R. 19. An order for payment of maintenance without recording evidence and without examining any witnesses is illegal—2 Weir 628. Where a Magistrate instead of examining the applicant at length and her witnesses, put her only to verify on oath the truth and correctness of her application, and treating her application as legal evidence against the husband passed an order for maintenance, held that the order was bad—23 O. C. 237. Proceedings under this Chapter are judicial in their nature and should not be conducted as if they were ministerial matters. The notes of evidence therefore should not be vague or inadequate and the order recorded must be issued on distinct findings of fact—5 All 224. If however an order is made with the consent of parties, the necessity of evidence may be dispensed with—2 Weir 629.

The evidence must be recorded as provided by Sec. 355. Proceedings under this Chapter cannot be conducted as in a summary trial under Chapter XXII—20 Cal 351.

Presence of the defendant—As directed by this sub-section, the inquiry should be conducted in the presence of the person proceeded against. A proceeding under this section should not be conducted ex parte. Evidence should be taken in the presence of the defendant or his pleader, unless the Court is satisfied that the defendant is willingly avoiding service of summons or neglecting to attend the Court, proceedings should not be taken ex parte—1 C L J 10. Proceedings can be conducted in the presence of the pleader only when the personal attendance of the defendant has been dispensed with. Where his attendance has not been dispensed with, the Court is justified in refusing to hear the Mukhtear by whom he is represented, and the Court ought to insist upon the presence of the defendant and should not proceed ex parte—2 Bom I R 700.

Under the proviso to this sub-section the Magistrate may proceed ex parte if he is satisfied that the defendant is willingly avoiding service and neglecting to attend the Court. But in every case of absence of the defendant the Court ought not to treat the absence as due to wilful neglect—2 Bom L R 700. A Court ought not to infer that the defendant was neglecting to attend the Court when the inability to attend was due to the absence of specification in the summons of the place where he was to appear—7 M H C R App 43.

Where, no notice having been served on the person against whom the proceedings were taken, the order was passed ex parte, and within three months he applied to the Magistrate's successor to have the order revised stating that he had no notice of the application such succeeding Magistrate had jurisdiction under sec 488 (6) to have the case re-opened and disposed of according to law—2 Bur L J 61.

Presence of complainant—This section does not require the personal attendance of the complainant. If the complainant be a pardanashin lady, her presence may be dispensed with—1903 P R 19. In 1 C L J 214 and L B R (1892-96) 64 however, the Magistrate dismissed an application for maintenance for default of appearance of the complainant.

1288 Subsection (9)—Forum—This sub-section did not occur in the 1872 and 1882 Codes and it was therefore held that the application must be heard by the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the wife resided—13 All 348 5 N W P H C R 217. These decisions are no longer good law. Under the present Code, the proper Court to take cognizance of a petition by the wife under this section is the Court within whose jurisdiction the husband or the father, as the case may be, resides—See 24 Cal 638 9 Bom 40 1885 P R 13 1893 P R 3. This sub-section does not give the wife or child to select a forum other than that where the husband or father is then residing or last resided with the complainant—1904 U B R 1st Cr (Cr P C) 10.

Mere casual residence in a place for a temporary purpose with no intention of remaining is not residence so as to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of that place—Ramdeo v Jhunnulal 3 O W N 231, Flowers v Flowers 32 All 203 (I B). Where the husband pays only occasional visits to his wife, who lives apart from him, he cannot be said to reside at the place where the wife resides so as to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of that place—24 O C 249 5 S L R 220. Therefore where the husband who was a resident of Lahore for 11 years took his wife to Lucknow at her brother's house and left her there declaring that he would support her no longer and his stay at Lucknow did not exceed a week, held that the application for maintenance should be made at Lahore and not at Lucknow—Ramdeo v. Jhunn (Supra). But a man may be said to reside with the mother of the illegitimate child if he visits her only occasionally at her settled abode, so long as he has the intention of continuing to visit her and where she has no permanent residence elsewhere, two months stay at a place where she is occasionally visited by the father of the children is sufficient to constitute that place as his residence for the purpose of this sub-section—5 S. I. R. 220. In 21 C. W. N. 872, however temporary residence was held sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of that place. Thus where it appeared that the husband ordinarily resided outside Calcutta but was temporarily there on the date the application was filed and for some days previously, it was held that this temporary residence gave the Calcutta Court jurisdiction under this sub-section.

1289 Whether civil suit lies. Where the right to maintenance is conferred by this section as well as by the personal law of the parties the right can be enforced not only under this section but also by a civil suit for maintenance. But where the right is not conferred by the personal law of the parties (e.g. the right of the illegitimate children of a Hindu by a non-Hindu woman to get maintenance from their putative father) such right cannot be enforced by a civil suit and the only remedy is that provided by this section. The distinction between a remedy under the common law and a remedy under this section is that the right under the common law may be enforced not only against the father during his life time but also against his estate after his death but a right under this section does not survive the death of the father—27 Mad. 13.

Order does not bar civil suit.—An order under this section passed by a Magistrate does not take away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts—30 Mad. 400. A Magistrate's order for maintenance does not bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to make a declaration that the husband is not liable to pay separate maintenance to his wife—2 Weir 615. In pursuance of an order for maintenance of illegitimate children passed by a Magistrate a civil suit is maintainable for a declaration that the children are not the children of the plaintiff—1 O. C. 331. 1 Bur. 1 J. 82. Similarly, an order of a Magistrate refusing maintenance does not bar a suit in a Civil Court for maintenance—32 C. I. 429. Co. tra.—18 All. 29 and 2 Weir 614 where it has been held that a Magistrate's order for maintenance of wife duly made under this section cannot be superseded by a decree of the Civil Court declaring that the wife is not entitled to any maintenance.

1290 Effect of Civil Court decree.—Effect of previous decree.—A Civil Court's decree cannot be disturbed by an order of the Magistrate. Where a decision for a monthly allowance for maintenance has been obtained in the Civil Court and is in force the Magistrate is not competent to order a further and separate maintenance—2 Weir 615. The jurisdiction vested in the Magistrate is auxiliary to that of the Civil Court, and it is not open to a Magistrate to ignore a final decree of a Civil Court on the ground that it rests on reasons which do not appear to him satisfactory—2 Weir 615. Where the husband has obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and the decree is in force, no application for maintenance by the wife ought to be entertained by the Magistrate—U B R (1910) 1st Or 34 Where a Civil Court has declared that the child is not the child of the defendant, the Magistrate should treat the decree as conclusive on the question of relationship and should refuse to pass any order for the maintenance of the child—33 M L J 449 But the weight to be attached to a decree must depend upon the particular circumstances of the case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down that a decree of a Civil Court is for ever binding on the Magistrate If, after the husband had obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, he ill-treated his wife so much that she had to leave his house, and she applied to the Magistrate for an order of maintenance and the Magistrate granted the application on the ground that she was justified in refusing to live with her husband, held that the Magistrate was justified in ignoring the decree and in exercising his discretion in favour of the wife by absolving her from the condition that she must live with her husband Otherwise the husband can at first get a decree for restitution of conjugal rights and then turn his wife out without any allowance at all—Rajpati v Deoli 46 All 877 (878)

The existence of an order of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court in England whereby the husband is directed to pay his wife so much alimony per month is no bar to an application by the wife under sec 488 Cr P C, if in fact the husband has neglected to maintain his wife The existence of the order is not sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, for a mere order for maintenance is not equivalent to maintenance Sec 488 gives jurisdiction to the Magistrate to award maintenance if he is satisfied that a person has neglected to maintain his wife—Kent v Kent 49 M L J 335 26 Cr L 1597 A I R 1926 Mad 59

Effect of subsequent decree—Where an order is passed by a Magistrate under this section for maintenance against the husband, and in a subsequent suit by the husband in the Civil Court for restitution of conjugal rights a consent decree is passed allowing the wife maintenance and residence, held that the decree of the Civil Court will supersede the Magistrate's order—27 All 483 The decree of a Civil Court for restitution of conjugal rights supersedes any previous order of a Magistrate for maintenance, if the wife should persist in refusing to live with her husband The Magistrate ought to cancel his order or rather to treat it as determined if the wife failing to comply with the decree for restitution refuses to live with her husband—In re Bulakidas 23 Bom 484, Maung Tha v Ma Mya 9 Bur L T 162 17 Cr L J 412, In re Chandulal 43 Bom 88, 21 Bom L R 766 20 Cr L J 687 See the new subsection (2) of sec 489 But a decree of a Civil Court ordering restitution of conjugal rights does not ipso facto cancel a maintenance order passed under the Cr P Code In considering any application for cancellation of a maintenance order, the Magistrate is not necessarily bound to follow the order of the Civil Court, but must consider it along with any other circumstances which may be brought before him—Maung Dun v Ma Sein 3 Rang 150 26 Cr L J 1341 A I R 1925 Rang 268 Where a decree for restitution of conjugal rights imposing certain conditions on the husband is passed against a wife, who had obtained an order for maintenance, non-compliance by the husband with the conditions of the decree would revive the right of the wife to claim maintenance and to have the order enforced—Dev Datta v. Ganga Devi, 1906 P. R. 4, 4 Cr. L. J. 73. See also 3 P. L. T. 51. A husband against whom an order for maintenance was passed obtained subsequently a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. Two execution petitions filed by him were dismissed as he failed to prosecute the same diligently, and it was clear from his conduct that he was not at all anxious to get back his wife to live with him on the ordinary terms of husband and wife. Held that as the object in getting the decree for restitution of conjugal rights was merely to get the maintenance order cancelled, and not a bona fide wish to live amicably with her, the Court should not exercise its discretion under clause (2) of sec. 489 and cancel the order for maintenance—Paalkat v. Ithappa, 49 M. I. J. 269, 27 Cr. L. J. 30. A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1218.

When the Civil Court finds that the relationship of husband and wife has ceased to exist the husband is entitled to ask the Magistrate, who is enforcing the order of maintenance, to abstain from giving further effect to the order—Lal H. v. Ladden Sahaba, 14 Cal. 276. Where a Civil Court has decided any points which would disentitle the wife to maintenance, the Magistrate who had passed an order for maintenance, will be bound, in the interests of justice, to take the judgment into consideration before passing a fresh order to enforce the former order—2 Weir 614. Similarly, where the relationship on which the maintenance order is based has been declared by a full bench of a competent Civil Court not to exist, it is open to the person adversely affected by the order to ask the Magistrate to abstain from giving any further effect to the order of maintenance. Therefore a Civil Court decree declaring that A is not the child of B supersedes a Magistrate's previous order for A's maintenance, and the Magistrate cannot enforce the Criminal Court's order after the Civil Court decree is passed—Senkayya v. Padamma, 46 Mad. 721, 45 M. L. J. 104, 24 Cr. L. J. 720, 16 Cr. I. J. 609 (Oudh), 13 Bur. L. T. 104.

1291 Miscellaneous—Fresh application—It is not competent for a Magistrate to hold a second inquiry into the same allegations which have once been already inquired into and dismissed by a competent Court—1916 P. R. 24, 17 Cr. I. J. 106 (Cal.). But the Magistrate can entertain a subsequent application for fresh cause shown. There may be change of circumstances which would enable the applicant to come into Court again, not on the same ground, but on a new ground—U. B. R. (1892-96) 64, 2 Weir 633.

But if the previous application has been dismissed for default of appearance and there was no adjudication regarding the merits, a second application is entertainable—24 C. W. N. 32, 30 C. L. J. 128, Contra—1 C. I. J. 214, where it has been held that if an application under this section is dismissed for default, the law does not empower the Magistrate to rehear the application.

Insanity of defendant—If the defendant in a proceeding under this section is alleged to be insane, the Magistrate has no power to appoint a guardian ad litem but he should hold a judicial inquiry into his sanity and put him under medical observation, if necessary. If, as a result of such inquiry he comes to the conclusion that the defendant is insane, he must follow the procedure laid down in Ch XXXIV and postpone the proceedings until the Magistrate is satisfied that the defendant is capable of understanding the proceedings.—Ippich v Kuthu Jammal 48 Mad 388, 48 M I J 187, 26 Cr I J 701.

Further inquiry—When an application under this section is dismissed by a Magistrate, the District Magistrate cannot order further inquiry under sec 436 because the defendant is not in the position of an accused.—17 C P I R 127, 25 All 545.

Appeal—When a Magistrate orders maintenance under this section, no appeal lies, as there is no conviction of an offence.—7 W R 10, 5 B H C R 81.

No limitation—A wife does not lose her right of maintenance because she has delayed in making the application.—2 Weir 616. The law has not fixed any time within which a claim of maintenance is to be made. The fact that the wife has not advanced her claim immediately on her husband's desertion of her does not disentitle her to maintenance.—2 Weir 615. The second proviso to sub-section (3) provides a period of limitation for an application for the issue of a warrant for enforcement of the order, but not for an application for maintenance.

1292 Nature of proceedings under this section—A proceeding under this section is of a criminal nature, and therefore it is a criminal case within the meaning of Sec 528, and the District Magistrate may withdraw a case instituted under this section from the file of a first class Magistrate to his own file.—1905 P R 5. No appeal lies under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the order of a single Judge made on a revision petition against the order of a Magistrate under this section as the order is one passed in a criminal trial.—17 M I T 330. If the parties to the proceedings compromise the claim for maintenance, the Magistrate cannot pass an order in accordance with the terms of the compromise, because to do so would be to assume the functions of a Civil Court.—2 Weir 629.

But though the proceeding under this section is of a criminal nature, still the person proceeded against under this section cannot be called an accused; he can be examined as a witness and oath can be administered to him.—17 C P I R 127. The Calcutta High Court holds that proceedings under this section are civil proceedings and the defendant there to may give evidence on his own behalf.—16 Cal 781. This is now expressly provided by sub-section (2) of sec 340. A proceeding under this section being a proceeding of a civil nature the parties can be examined as witnesses.—18 Bom 468. The word 'accused' was formerly inadvertently used in sub-section (9). The Legislature has now corrected the error by substituting the words "any person" for the word 'accused'. This section is not intended to be punitive but a preventive one, and hence the neglect or refusal to pay maintenance is not an 'offence' within the meaning of section 4.—1893 P R 15, and an application for maintenance is not a complaint of an offence.—1885 P R 13, 17 C P L R 127. Compensation cannot be awarded under section 250 to the person proceeded against if the complaint is dismissed as false and frivolous or vexatious—6 M L T 261

1293 Revision:—The High Court has jurisdiction to set aside or modify the Magistrate's order, if the rate of maintenance awarded appears to be excessive, or to order further inquiry with a view to decide what amount should be allowed—Mad H C Lr 23—7—1887 The High Court can set aside in revision a previous order of a Criminal Court passed under this section in view of a subsequent decree of a Civil Court—16 Cr L J 609 (Oudh)

But the High Court does not interfere in revision when other issues are raised which should be settled in the Civil Courts, and when nothing is to be gained by protracted litigation in the Criminal Court. In such cases the persons aggrieved by Magisterial orders should take their case to the Civil Court—In re Kandasami 50 M L J 44 27 Cr L J 350

489 (1) On proof of a change in the circumstances of any person receiving under Section 488 a monthly allowance or ordered under the same section to pay a monthly allowance to his wife or child, the Magistrate may make such alteration in the allowance as he thinks fit

Provided that if he increases the allowance the monthly rate of one hundred rupees in the whole be not exceeded

(2) Where it appears to the Magistrate that in consequence of any decision of a competent Civil Court any order made under section 488 should be cancelled or varied, he shall cancel the order or vary the same accordingly

Change—In sub-section (1) the words one hundred have been substituted for the word fifty and sub-section (2) has been newly added by section 132 of the Cr P Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

1294 Scope:—This section furnishes the ground on which the Court passing an order under sec 488 can modify that order. An order of a competent Court under sec 488 for the maintenance of a child can be modified under this section. 2nd All 11 When a maintenance order is made with reference to the means of the husband he should apply under this section if he is aggrieved for reduction of the allowance—9 W R 1 The revision of an order of maintenance and the grant of it on a lower scale than that of the original order is not legal without an application under this section from one of the parties and without proof of change of circumstances—2 Weir 628

An application under this section can be made so long as there is a subsisting order under section 488. Thus, an order awarding maintenance to the wife was passed in 1910 afterwards in 1912 the husband obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, but he never executed it and went on paying the maintenance to his wife as before. In 1918, the wife applied for increase of the amount of maintenance under sec. 489. Held that this application could not be granted because there was no subsisting order under section 488, the same having been put an end to by the decree of 1912. The fact that the husband continued to pay the maintenance in spite of the decree of 1912 did not keep the order of 1910 alive—43 Bom 885

The change of circumstances in this section is a change of pecuniary or other circumstances of the party paying or receiving the allowance, which would justify an increase or decrease of the amount of the monthly payment originally fixed, and not a change in the status of the parties, which would entail stoppage of the allowance—19 All 50. The words 'alteration in the allowance' clearly indicate that the section refers to such change of circumstances as would necessitate only an alteration in the amount of allowance, and not to circumstances (e.g., divorce) which entail the discontinuance of allowance altogether—5 All 226 (per Mahmood J). Circumstances which necessitate not merely an alteration in the allowance but a cancellation of the order of maintenance do not come under this section but should fall under subsection (5) of section 488, and that subsection should be made much more comprehensive in its terms so as to include those circumstances. See Note 1286 under section 488, under subheading 'other cases'. But the Madras High Court has held in a recent case that the word 'alteration' includes cancellation. The reduction of the maintenance allowance to nothing (which is the same thing as cancellation of the order granting maintenance) would come within the meaning of the word 'alteration'. Therefore a Magistrate can, under this section, cancel the allowance granted to the daughter, if she has since been married and has thus become able to maintain herself by reason of her marriage—Meenakshi v. Karuppanna 48 Mad 503 48 M L J 183 26 Cr L J 732

The growth of the child, or the birth of another child, or the death of a child is a change in the circumstances—12 Mad 398, 12 Cal 535. The fact that the children are grown up and are no longer unable to maintain themselves amounts to a change in the circumstances—10 Cr L J 160 (Bur.), 9 L B R 49. Where a divorced Mahomedan wife has married again, the fact that the second husband has merely undertaken to maintain her child by the first husband, does not empower the Magistrate to cancel the order of maintenance passed against the first husband to maintain his child. There is no such change of circumstances as is contemplated by this section—27 All 11. The second husband is not bound by law to maintain the child, perhaps he may refuse to maintain it any day. So the change of circumstances in this case is not such as can be relied upon.

The change of circumstances must be actual and of such a nature that the law would recognise it. The mere fact that the wife might possibly be able to earn something by her own labour is not a ground on which the husband may apply for reduction of the rate of allowance—1897 A. W. N. 107, because the law does not compel a wife to work for her livelihood, while her husband is living and has sufficient means to maintain her. If the parties subsequent to an order under sec. 488 make an agreement modifying its terms, such agreement would amount to a change in the circumstances, and the party interested can apply under this section and get the order modified—25 All. 165.

1296 Alteration of allowance:—Is to whether 'alteration' means cancellation, see Note 1295 above.

An order of alteration of allowance under this section cannot take effect retrospectively. The Magistrate has no power to reduce the rate of maintenance which has already accrued due. His order will take effect in respect of the allowance that will fall due after the date of the order—2 Weir 650. The arrears which have fallen due will be enforced at the rate originally fixed.

When an application for modification of the allowance has been preferred under this section the Magistrate cannot inquire into the propriety or otherwise of the previous order of maintenance—2 Weir 650.

An application for alteration of allowance is no ground for staying the execution of an order of maintenance already granted, as that order carries with it all the proper consequences so long as it remains in force—22 Cal. 291.

The amount of maintenance payable to each person must be specified, otherwise it cannot be altered. See 9 I. B. R. 49 cited under Sec. 488 under heading 'Amount of maintenance'.

Sub-section (2)—See Note 1290 under section 488 under heading 'Effect of subsequent decree'.

490 A copy of the order of maintenance shall be given without payment to the person in whose favour it is made, or to his guardian, if any, or to the person to whom the allowance is to be paid, and such order may be enforced by any Magistrate in any place where the person against whom it is made may be, on such Magistrate being satisfied as to the identity of the parties and the non payment of the allowance.

1297 Who can enforce order:—An order under Sec. 488 can be enforced by a second class Magistrate, if the person against whom the order is passed resides within his jurisdiction—Ratanlal 288.

The words 'any Magistrate of any place where the person against whom it is made may be' do not deprive the Magistrate who has made the order of his power to enforce the order under Sec 488 (3). When the defendant is beyond his jurisdiction, he may issue a warrant for collection of the arrears of maintenance, or refer the applicant to the Magistrate having jurisdiction at the place where the defendant is to be found—4 Mad 230. The application for an order to enforce the recovery of maintenance may be made either to the Magistrate who passed the original order or to the Magistrate having jurisdiction over the place where the person resides. The provisions of this section cannot be held to derogate from the provisions of sec 488 (3)—7 L B R 116.

Powers and Duties of the Magistrate—It has been held in 25 All 165 that a Magistrate to whom an application has been made to enforce an order of maintenance, should not take into consideration anything further than the identity of the parties and the nonpayment of the allowance. He may also consider whether the person (in case of Mahomedans) to whom maintenance is ordered still holds the position of wife. But no further steps relaxing the clear words of Sec 490 should be allowed. The fact that the parties had made an agreement subsequent to the order modifying its terms is not a matter for the consideration of the Magistrate enforcing the order. If the person against whom an order for maintenance is made considers that such order should no longer be in force against him, it is for him to apply under Sec 489 and get the order altered. It is not suitable or expedient that it should be open to a second Magistrate to call in question an order duly given upon proof.

But a wider view has been taken in 10 Mad 13. In this case it has been held that where in answer to an application for enforcement of an order of maintenance, the husband pleads that the claim has been released, the wife having received a lump sum in satisfaction of her claims for maintenance, the Magistrate enforcing the order is competent to consider such plea, and if it is proved, to refuse to enforce the order.

But there can be no doubt that the Magistrate enforcing the order should take into consideration the question whether the person to whom the order has been given is, at the time she makes the application, still holding the position of wife (i.e., has not been divorced), on this point, there is no conflict of opinion between the High Courts. See 25 All. 165, 19 All 50, 1894 P R 21, 17 O C 260, 1915 U B R 1st Qr 53.

The Magistrate enforcing the order is also bound to consider a Civil Court decree passed subsequent to the order of maintenance. If the Civil Court has decided that the complainant is not and never had been the wife of the defendant, the Magistrate must refuse to enforce the order for maintenance—9 O C, 49. For further notes as to the effect of Civil Court decree, see Note 1290 under sec 488.

DIRECTIONS OF THE NATURE OF A HABEAS CORPUS

491 (1) The High Court may, whenever it thinks fit

Power to issue direct, direct, tions of the nature of a

- (a) that any person within the limits of its appellate criminal jurisdiction be brought up before the Court to be dealt with according to law,
- (b) that a person illegally or improperly detained in public or private custody within such limits be set at liberty,
- (c) that a prisoner detained in any jail situate within such limits be brought before the Court to be there examined as a witness in any matter pending or to be inquired into in such Court,
- (d) that a prisoner detained as aforesaid be brought before a Court martial or any Commissioners acting under the authority of any commission from the Governor General in Council for trial or to be examined touching any matter pending before such Court-martial or Commissioners respectively
- (e) that a prisoner within such limits be removed from one custody to another for the purpose of trial, and
- (f) that the body of a defendant within such limits be brought in on the Sheriff's return of cepi corpus to a writ of attachment

(2) The High Court may, from time to time, frame rules to regulate the procedure in cases under this section

(3) Nothing in this section applies to persons detained under the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation, 1818, Madras Regulation II of 1819 or Bombay Regulation XXV of 1827, or the State Prisoners Act, 1850, or the State Prisoners Act, 1858

proceedings under this section was confined to the limits of its original jurisdiction (44 Cal 76 and 46 Cal 52), under the present section the jurisdiction has been extended to mofussil places See 43 M L J 396 (F B) So also, the Criminal Appellate Bench of the High Court has power so dispose of applications under this section—Subodh Chandra v Emp., 29 C W N 98 52 Cal 319 26 Cr L J 625

The investment of the extraordinary powers of habeas corpus in a High Court does not take away from the litigants their ordinary rights which they have under the Civil Law Therefore a refusal by the High Court to exercise the powers under this section to recover the custody of a child will not deprive the applicant of his right to seek his remedy either by means of an application under the Guardians and Wards Act or by means of a regular suit—Sara Lay v Leo Boon, 4 Bur L J 269

This section does not apply to a case where there has been a conviction and sentence Where there has been a conviction and sentence, the proper course, if there is a miscarriage of justice, is to take the matter to the Crown for remedy—44 Cal 723 (F B)

High Court's power not taken away by the Extradition Act—The High Court's power to issue a writ of habeas corpus has not been taken away by the procedure provided in the Indian Extradition Act, sec 3 sub-sections (6) and (7)—46 Cal 52 The High Court has power to issue an order and to examine whether a person detained in public custody under the Extradition Act is legally detained, and this power is not taken away merely because the Government have already issued a warrant for surrender under sec 3 sub-section (8) of that Act—Rudolf Stollmann 39 Cal 164

1299 Clause (b).—Custody of children—The High Court before passing an order in respect of a minor child, ought to take into consideration the interest and welfare of the child—Zarabibi v Abdul 12 Bom I R 891, Sara Lay v Leo Boon 4 Bur L J 269 The Court will not ordinarily force a child to remain in a custody to which the child objects, and before deciding as to its custody, the Court will take account of the wishes of the child, if it is old enough to form an intelligent preference—33 Mad 288 Where a mother had for eight years neglected her child who had been educated at a mission school, the High Court refused her application for custody of the girl aged 15 years, on the ground that, if granted, it would be detrimental to the welfare of the child—16 Bom 307 Where the father has delegated the guardianship of his children to another person, the question whether the father is entitled to resume the guardianship depends on the children's interests and welfare—Annie Besant v Narayaniah 38 Mad 807 (P C)

Appeal—When a petitioner obtains a rule calling upon the other side to show cause why a child should not be delivered to her, and the rule is discharged, the order discharging the rule is a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and is therefore appealable—14 Bom 555

491-A In a High Court established by Letters Patent

Powers of High Court outside the limits of appellate jurisdiction may exercise the powers conferred by Section 491 in the case of any European British subject within such territories, other than those within the limits of its appellate criminal jurisdiction as the Governor General in Council may direct

This section has been newly added by Sec 31 of the Cr Law Amendment Act 1923. By this section European British Subjects even when outside the limits of British India will get the privilege of obtaining writs in the nature of Habeas Corpus from the High Courts.

PART IX.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONS

CHAPTER XXXVIII

OF THE PUBLIC PROSECUTOR

492 (1) The Governor General in Council or the Local Government may appoint, generally, or in any case, or for any specified class of cases, in any local area, one or more officers to be called Public Prosecutors

(2) * * The District Magistrate, or, subject to the control of the District Magistrate, the Sub divisional Magistrate, may, in the absence of the Public Prosecutor, or where no Public Prosecutor has been appointed, appoint any other person, not being an officer of police below such rank as the Local Government may prescribe in this behalf, to be Public Prosecutor for the purpose of any case

Change:—This section has been amended by section 133 of the Cr P C Amendment Act VIII of 1923. The following changes have been made—Firstly the words 'In any case committed for trial to the Court of Session' in the beginning of sub-section (2) have been omitted because the necessity of appointing a Public Prosecutor in the absence of that officer may arise not only in Sessions Courts but in all other instances. Secondly the italicised words have been substituted in place of the words 'the rank of Assistant District Superintendent,' because as there is a variety of nomenclature of the Police officers we think it better to leave it to the Local Governments to prescribe the rank of police-officers who may be appointed Public Prosecutors for the purposes of a particular case.—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

In U P, all Joint Magistrates and Assistant Magistrates exercising first class powers have been empowered to prosecute in sessions trials—Govt Notification, 31st December 1890

But it is highly objectionable to appoint the Magistrate who in the first instance tried and convicted the accused to be Crown Prosecutor to conduct an inquiry subsequently directed in the same case. To convert a Judge into an Advocate seeking to uphold his decision before another tribunal is quite unprecedented and most objectionable as he has an interest in the case which a Public Prosecutor should not have.—8 B H C R 126

1300 Duty of Public Prosecutor:—The purpose of a Criminal trial is not to support a theory but to investigate the offence and to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, and the duty of a Public Prosecutor is to represent not the Police but the Crown and this duty should be discharged by him fairly and fearlessly and with a full sense of the responsibility that attaches to his position. The guilt or innocence of the accused is to be determined by the tribunals appointed by law and not according to the tastes of any one else—Ram Ranjan v Emp, 42 Cal 422. There should be no unseemly eagerness on the part of the Prosecutor at securing a conviction. His object must be the furtherance of justice and not to act as counsel for any particular person or party—Reg v Hashimath 8 B H C R 126.

493 The Public Prosecutor may appear and plead with- out any written authority before any Public Prosecutor may plead in all Courts in cases under his charge. Pleaders privately instructed to be under his direction. Court in which any case of which he has charge is under inquiry, trial or appeal, and if any private person instructs a pleader to prosecute in any Court any person in any such case, the Public Prosecutor shall conduct the prosecution, and the pleader so instructed shall act therein under his directions.

1301 Pleader privately instructed—The Counsel instructed and retained by a private individual can watch the case on behalf of his client, but he can not without being especially empowered by the District Magistrate, conduct the prosecution—O S C No 31. Where in a criminal appeal pending before the Chief Court of Panjab the brother of the murdered man appointed a pleader to support the conviction held that the pleader so appointed was not a Public Prosecutor—Akbar v Emp 1886 P R 29.

Where the Public Prosecutor has charge of the prosecution the pleader instructed by a private person shall act under the directions of the Public Prosecutor—B A Ry Co Ltd v Shaikh Makhbul A I K 1925 Pat 755. The Public Prosecutor may always avail himself of the services of the counsel retained by a private individual but in doing so he does not deprive himself of the management of the case—11 B H C R 102.

Change—This section has been amended by section 134 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below

1302 Scope of Section—Under the old law this section applied only to Public Prosecutors appointed by Government. A Prosecutor especially appointed by the Magistrate, under sec. 492 (2) to conduct a case had not the power to withdraw from the prosecution under this section—8 All 291 2 Weir 653. A Government Pleader who was not appointed a Public Prosecutor under the provisions of sec. 492 (1) could not withdraw from the prosecution under this section. He could withdraw only under section 240 ie only in cases where several charges had been preferred against the same person and he had been convicted on one of those charges—2 Weir 258. The present section as now amended will confer the power of withdrawal on all Public Prosecutors.

No person other than the Public Prosecutor can withdraw from the prosecution even a Vakil acting under the directions of the Public Prosecutor cannot do so. But if the prosecution is withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor and the Vakil, and the application for withdrawal of the case is signed by both the persons the withdrawal is not invalid—46 Cal 700.

This section (as well as section 495) does not apply to security proceedings. It applies only to proceedings which can end in a discharge or acquittal of the accused, but security proceedings do not contemplate the frame of a charge at all, and as a result of the proceedings neither an order of discharge nor one of acquittal is passed therein. Hence sections 494 and 495 cannot apply to security proceedings—36 Mad 315.

1303 Withdrawal from prosecution—The Public Prosecutor cannot withdraw a case on the ground that the complainant was keeping out of the way and could not be served with summons. He should take steps to enforce his attendance—2 Weir 655.

The complainant has no locus standi in the matter of withdrawal of a prosecution. When a case has been started upon a police report, and the Court Sub-Inspector (who is the Public Prosecutor) wants to withdraw the case, the Court cannot reject the application for withdrawal simply because the complainant wants to proceed with the case—1 P L T 400.

Withdrawal of some of the charges—Under the old section, a Public Prosecutor was not competent to withdraw only one of the charges. If he withdrew at all he had to withdraw all the charges. Where one of the charges was withdrawn, and the accused was tried on the other charges, the High Court ordered the trial on the charge withdrawn—2 C L J 18 (n). But the law has now been changed, and this section empowers the Public Prosecutor to withdraw one or some of the charges.

Record of reasons—When a Court, acting under this section gives its consent to a withdrawal from a prosecution, it should record its reasons in an order that the High Court may be in a position to say whether the discretion vested in the Court has been properly exercised—22 C W N 69, 48 Cal 1105, 26 C W N 880, Sugan Chand v Chummal, 6 N L J 177, Abdul Gani v Abdul Hadir 2 Bur L J 287. The Madras and Patna High Courts hold that it is not necessary that the reasons are to be recorded by the Judge—5 M L T 216, Gulli Bhagat v Naram Singh, 2 Pat 708.

1304 Acquittal:—If the Public Prosecutor withdraws from the case after a charge is framed, he must be acquitted under clause (b), and not discharged—12 Mad 35. Where therefore a prisoner, the charge against whom was withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor was discharged, instead of being acquitted, and was again committed to the Sessions on a second charge for the same offence, it was held that the conviction was bad in law—12 Mad 35. In a summons case, an order of discharge under this section amounts to an order of acquittal—Vid Singh v Emp 24 Cr L J 433 (Lah).

Where a person is acquitted, on the charge being withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor, the acquittal should be recorded without taking the opinions of the assessors. An acquittal is a matter of right to the accused, whatever might be the opinions of the assessors—Ratanlal 307.

Retrial—An order of acquittal under this section bars a retrial for the same offence by virtue of sec 403—9 N L R 26, 40 Mad 976, 18 Cr L J 329 (Mad), 23 Cr L J 305 (Sind).

Accused a competent witness against co-accused—When a prosecution against a person has been withdrawn under this section, he can be examined as a witness in the case against his other co-accused—25 Bom 422, 33 Cal 1353, 47 Cal 154.

But the prosecution must be withdrawn and the accused discharged under this section, before he can be examined as a witness against his co-accused, because so long as he is in the position of an accused, no oath can be administered to him under sec 342 (4), and he cannot therefore be examined as a witness. Where the Court sanctions the withdrawal of a prosecution but omits to record an order of discharge, and the accused continues to be kept in custody, his position is in no way changed from that of the accused, and he cannot be examined as a witness—33 Cal 1353. But if the accused was in fact discharged from custody by virtue of withdrawal from prosecution, the omission to record a formal order of discharge would be cured by sec 537, and the accused would be a competent witness against the other accused—7 A L J 86, 15 C W N 1213.

1305 Revision:—The High Court is in a position to consider whether the discretion vested in the Magistrate to give consent to the withdrawal of a prosecution has been rightly exercised—Kajani Lunda v Hiss 48 Cal 1103, 25 C W N 615, 26 C W N 880, 2 P L T 400.

But where good reasons have been shown by the Court below for allowing the withdrawal of a prosecution, the High Court will be slow to interfere in revision against the order allowing the withdrawal—24 Cr L J 5 (Cal). Where the Sessions Judge has exercised his discretion in refusing permission to withdraw a case, and he has not improperly exercised that discretion, the High Court would be very reluctant to interfere with his discretion—In re Kakhappa 23 L W 101, 27 Cr L J 334. Where a discretion has been exercised by a Court of competent jurisdiction, which is not on the face of it arbitrary, the practice of the High Court is that as a revisional Court it will neither inquire into the reasons nor interfere. Specially where the Court has acquitted the accused upon withdrawal of the charges the High Court would not be right in interfering except upon a properly constituted appeal preferred by the Local Government under sec 417—Gulab Bhagat v Varan Singh 2 Pat 708 (710) 5 P L T 404, 25 Cr L J 446. A I R 1924 Pat 281 5 M L T 216. Abdul Gani v Abdul Kadir 2 Bur L J 28.

When a charge is withdrawn and the accused is acquitted, it is not competent to the revisional Court to consider the question of the legality of the charge. A number of persons were charged before the Magistrate with the offence of robbery. The Public Prosecutor withdrew the charge, and the Magistrate recorded an order of acquittal. On revision, it was contended that the charge of robbery was wrong in as much as more than five persons were implicated in the act, and the Magistrate ought to have framed a charge of dacoity, and therefore the acquittal on the charge of robbery was wrong. The High Court refused to enter into the question as to the legality of the charge, and held that the Magistrate's procedure was right. There being a charge before him, and that charge having been withdrawn, he acted rightly in recording an order of acquittal—2 A L J 30.

The High Court will not interfere with the order of acquittal passed by the trial Court under this section at the instance of a private prosecutor if the Court has allowed the Public Prosecutor to withdraw the case upon insufficient or improper grounds and has passed an order of acquittal. The private prosecutor cannot be heard to object to it in revision. The Local Government is the only authority who can take action for the correction of that error—Gulab Bhagat v Varan Singh 2 Pat 708 (711) 5 P L T 404, 25 Cr L J 446.

Further inquiry—Where the order of discharge under this Section is a proper one, no further inquiry should be directed under sec 436—Sitaramayya v. Emp., (1911) 2 M. W. N. 74. But a fresh complaint can be made on fresh materials.

495 (1) Any Magistrate inquiring into or trying any case may permit the prosecution to be conducted by any person other than an officer of police below a rank to be prescribed by the Local Government in this behalf * * * but no person, other than the Advocate General, Standing Counsel, Government Solicitor Public Prosecutor or other officer generally or specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf shall be entitled to do so without such permission.

(2) Any such officer shall have the like power of withdrawing from the prosecution as is provided by Section 494, and the provisions of that section shall apply to any withdrawal by such officer.

(3) Any person conducting the prosecution may do so personally or by pleader.

(4) An officer of police shall not be permitted to conduct the prosecution if he has taken any part in the investigation into the offence with respect to which the accused is being prosecuted.

The words 'with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council' have been omitted by the Devolution Act (XXVIII) of 1920.

1306 Permission to conduct prosecution—The permission of the Magistrate is discretionary and the High Court will not interfere with such discretion. Where a Magistrate has, after due consideration, exercised the discretion and allowed counsel to appear on behalf of the prosecution, the High Court cannot as a Court of Revision overrule the order of the Magistrate and direct him to refuse to allow counsel to appear—2 Weir 655. Similarly where the District Magistrate considers that the too frequent appearance of pleaders for the prosecution in petty criminal cases is detrimental to the interests of justice, he can refuse to permit the prosecution to be conducted by a pleader and the Chief Court will decline to interfere with the order of the District Magistrate—1905 1 R. 6.

Who can be permitted—The Magistrate is not precluded from exercising in exceptional cases his discretion by allowing private Vakils of good character to conduct the prosecution—12 M. I. J. 354. The words 'any person' include persons other than certificated pleaders. It is however discretionary with the Criminal Courts in each case to permit such persons to conduct the prosecution—Mid. H. C. Proc. 1904-1882.

The fact that a certain person is also a Prosecuting Inspector does not deprive him of his right as a private citizen, and he may in his private capacity ask for permission to prosecute in his case—10 Bur L T 213 So also, the fact that a particular person is a complainant is not a sufficient ground for not permitting him to prosecute the case—Ibid But it is doubtful whether the words 'any person' would include an absolute stranger who had no connection in the remotest degree with the prosecution and whose desire to help the prosecution was based on a personal grudge only—11 A L J 313

If the offence be of a nature affecting the public (e.g. rioting or unlawful assembly) which the Crown alone in the interests of public peace and security has a right to conduct, a private person should not be permitted to conduct the prosecution—18 Cr L J 329 (Mad)

Under a notification of the Madras Government all superior police officers above the rank of a first class Head constable in charge of a police station are generally empowered to conduct the prosecution without even the permission of the Magistrate under sub section (1) such officers would be entitled under sub section (2) to withdraw from the prosecution with the permission of the Court as mentioned in section 494—Anantharama v Muthia Thera, 1914 M W N 776

Sub section (2) — Iny such officers—These words refer only to the Advocate General Standing Counsel etc., mentioned in sub section (1) If any person other than these officers (e.g. an Advocate privately engaged by the complainant and permitted by the Magistrate) withdraws from the prosecution the effect provided in sec 494 does not follow, in other words the trial will proceed—1908 U B R 1st Qr (Cr P C) 15 see also 1911 M W N 106

Sub-section (3) —A person whether a private complainant or not when he is permitted to conduct the case as prosecutor, may instruct a counsel to appear—11 B H C R 102

It is not open to a Magistrate to decline to allow the complainant, who is conducting the prosecution, to have a particular pleader of his own choice This section does not authorise the Magistrate to take the prosecution out of the hands of the pleader of the complainant and to assign it to some other person who is not the Public Prosecutor—Ghadilly v Emp, 18 S L R 30 25 Cr L J 571

1307 Sub section (4) —Exclusion of Police officer—In all important cases and specially in cases of murder and dacoity, the police-officer making the investigation should be examined as a witness regarding the circumstances of the investigation For this reason he is debarred from conducting the prosecution—Ranlal 173 Where the police-officer who conducted the investigation by arresting the accused and seizing the property found, was allowed to conduct the prosecution, it was held that such a procedure was highly improper but since in this case the accused were not prejudiced thereby, the irregularity did not vitiate the trial but was cured by section 537—26 Bom 533

CHAPTER XXXIX

OF BAIL

496 When any person other than a person accused of a non-bailable offence is arrested or

In what cases bail to be taken.

detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station, or appears or is brought before a Court, and is prepared at any time while in the custody of such officer or at any stage of the proceedings before such Court to give bail, such person shall be released on bail. Provided that such officer or Court, if he or it thinks fit, may, instead of taking bail from such person, discharge him on his executing a bond without sureties for his appearance as hereinafter provided.

Provided, further, that nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the provisions of Section 107 sub-section (1), or Section 117, sub-section (3)

Change:—The second proviso has been added by section 13, of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. For notes relating to this proviso, see Note 240 under sec 107.

1308 Grant of bail—This section is imperative in its terms and the Court is bound to comply with its provisions. In every bailable offence bail is a right and not a favour. Detention in the lock up is the alternative, not the original, order—32 Cal 80, 6 C P L R 31. When a man who is arrested is not accused of a non-bailable offence, no needless impediments should be placed in the way of his being admitted to bail. The intention of the law is that in such cases the man is ordinarily to be at liberty, and it is only when he is unable to furnish such moderate security, if any is required of him, as is suitable for the purpose of securing his appearance before a Court pending inquiry, that he should remain in detention—Emp v Mir Hashamali 20 Bom L R 121. The Magistrate cannot refuse to pass an order of bail on the ground of expediency and of the inability of the accused's pleader to show a provision in the Code how he could claim a bail—6 C P L R 31.

When the Police arrests a person under sec 53, he should be given the option of bail—14 All 45.

Where a person arrested under Chap VIII claims a bail he is entitled to bail as a matter of right—6 C P L R 31, 32 Cal 80, 36 Mad 474, 20 Bom L R 121.

Refusal of bail—If the Magistrate refuses to grant bail, he must record his reasons for such refusal. In the absence of any record of reasons the High Court in revision granted bail—14 C W N 111.

If the Magistrate improperly refuses bail, no objection can be taken—14 C W N 111.

him for such improper refusal. The duty of a Magistrate in accepting or refusing bail is not merely a ministerial but a judicial duty. A mistake in the exercise of that duty, without malice, will not sustain an action—2 M H C R 396

Court to decide sufficiency of bail—When the bail is ordered by the Court, the duty of deciding as to the sufficiency or otherwise of the bail is with the Court itself and not with the police. If such duties are irregularly entrusted to police, two dangers are likely to arise: first a police officer may sometimes be unscrupulous enough to take advantage of the power entrusted to him for the purpose of extortion; and secondly the bringing of false charges against the police. But the Court when it admits a man to bail is at liberty to call for a report from the police as to the sufficiency of the bail—15 Cal 455

1309 Bond—Bail means security with sureties, whereas the bond referred to in the first proviso is a simple recognizance of the principal without any surety.

Bond of agent—Where the personal attendance of the accused is dispensed with, a recognizance bond if deemed necessary, should be taken from him (and not from his agent) binding him to appear, either in person or by agent. A Magistrate has no legal authority to secure the attendance of the agent by a bond taken from the agent—5 B H C R 64. The Magistrate wants the accused and not his agent, and therefore the bond is to be executed by the accused himself and not by his agent although he may appear by agent.

497 (1) When any person accused of any non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station or appears or is brought before a Court, he may be released on bail, but he shall not be so released if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life.

When bail may be taken in case of non-bailable offence

Provided that the Court may direct that any person under the age of sixteen years or any woman or any sick or infirm person accused of such an offence be released on bail.

(2) If it appears to such officer or Court at any stage of the investigation, inquiry or trial, as the case may be, that there are not reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed a non-bailable offence, but that there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt, the accused shall, pending such inquiry, be released on bail, or, at the discretion of such officer or Court, on the execution by him of a bond without sureties for his appearance as hereinafter provided.

(1) An officer or a Court releasing any person on bail under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall record in writing his or its reasons for so doing

(4) If at any time after the conclusion of the trial of a person accused of a non-bailable offence and before judgment is delivered, the Court is of opinion that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is not guilty of any such offence, it shall release the accused if he is in custody on the execution by him of a bond without sureties for his appearance to hear judgment delivered

(5) A High Court or Court of Session and in the case of a person released by itself any other Court may cause any person who has been released under this section to be arrested and may commit him to custody

Change.—This section has been amended by section 136 of the Criminal Pro Code Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. In sub-section (1) the words "an offence punishable with death or transportation for life" have been substituted for the words "the offence of which he is accused". The proviso and sub-sections (3) and (4) have been newly inserted and the italicised words in sub-section (5) have been added. It was pressed upon us that the provisions as to bail in non-bailable cases are much too stringent. One suggestion made to us was that in section 497 we should delete all words after "may be released on bail" in sub-section (1) and the whole of sub-section (2). The result would have been to give all Courts full discretion in the matter of allowing bail in non-bailable cases, and we felt generally that this was going too far. What we have done is to allow the Court or police officer to release on bail in a non-bailable case unless there appear to be reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or transportation and, as some safeguard against this we have provided in sub-section (5) for a review by the Sessions Court or the High Court of any order admitting to bail in a non-bailable case.—Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

1310 Principle.—Under the old section the general rule was that bail was not to be taken in respect of non-bailable offences—8 Bom 1 R 420, 36 Cal 166 10 S I R 208 2 Weir 657. Under the present section, the Legislature by defining the offences under which bail is not to be granted (viz offences punishable with death or transportation) has practically laid down that bail should ordinarily be granted and that only in respect of heinous offences it will be refused. This cannot but be regarded as the result of a liberating influence on the policy of the Legislature, and the discretion of the Courts will henceforth be less fettered than before.—In re Nagendra Nath 51 Cal 402 (417)

As the law stands now, it is no longer the case that bail ought to be refused merely because the offence is a non-bailable one. That rule is now restricted to offences punishable by death or transportation for life.

The mere fact that the offence is a serious one is not a ground for refusing bail. Where the accused is an old man of 70 and is a Government servant and it is found that if he is not released on bail there would be nobody to instruct his counsel in going through the documentary evidence and thus he would not be able to make a proper defence, held that bail should be granted—Abhram Bal v Emp 28 O C 220 12 O L J 394 26 Cr L J 1286

Reasonable grounds for believing etc—The section says nothing about taking into consideration the likelihood of the accused person absconding. All that the Court has to consider is whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty—6 L B R 172. Other considerations may arise in deciding the question as to granting bail, and one of those considerations is whether there are any grounds for supposing that the accused would abscond. But the main question for consideration in determining matters of bail is whether there are reasonable grounds for believing the accused to be guilty—Janum v A F 36 Cal 174. Whether there are reasonable grounds or not for believing that the accused is guilty must be decided judicially, that is to say, there must be tangible evidence on which if un rebutted, the Court might come to the conclusion that the accused might be convicted—36 Cal 174.

The phrase 'an offence punishable with death or transportation for life' is ambiguous and is not a particularly elegant expression from a grammatical point of view. This phrase is intended to cover only offences which are punishable with death as well as in the alternative with transportation for life i.e. it covers those offences in which either punishment may be inflicted at the discretion of the sentencing Court. The phrase is not intended to be disjunctive; if it were so intended, the legislature would have used the expression 'offence punishable with death, or with transportation for life'. Therefore, the phrase does not cover offences which are punishable only with transportation for life—Id Euzof v A F, 3 Rang 538 27 Cr I J 401 A I R 1926 Rang 51.

The discretionary power of the Court to admit to bail is not arbitrary but is judicial and is governed by established principles. The object of the detention of the accused being to secure his appearance to abide the sentence of law, the principal enquiry is whether a recognizance would effect that end. In seeking an answer to this enquiry, Courts have considered the seriousness of the charge, the nature of the evidence, the severity of the punishment prescribed for the offence and in some instances the character, means and standing of the accused—In re Nagendra Nath 51 Cal 402 (416) 38 C L J 388.

Magistrates are bound to consider the nature of the offence charged, the character of the evidence against the prisoner, and the punishment which the event of conviction is likely to be inflicted on the prisoner. Again, while mere vague allegations that the prisoner if released will tutor witnesses should not be taken into account, the Magistrate may well refuse to enlarge on bail where the prisoner is of such a character that his presence at large will intimidate witnesses or where there are reasonable grounds for believing that he will use his liberty to suborn evidence—Mad Eusoof v K E, (supra)

Proviso:—"This clause provides for the grant of bail in any case at the discretion of the Court, if the accused is a minor, female, sick or infirm person"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

1311 Sub section (2)—Bond for appearance:—When a Police officer takes a bond under this section, he has power to make it a condition of the bond that the accused person shall appear before the police the law does not require that the accused person shall always be directed to appear before a Court. When the law enables a Police officer to take bonds, that officer can certainly direct the accused to appear before the police. To hold otherwise would be to render secs 499 and 514 meaningless—1913 P R 22. But in 11 Cal 77 it has been held that a bond for appearance before a Police officer is void.

1312 Sub section (4).—This sub section did not occur in any of the Bills but has been added during the course of the Debate in the Legislative Assembly. The reason has been thus stated by Mr Rangachariar on whose motion the amendment was carried. The reason for this amendment is this. As Honourable Members are aware, at the conclusion of the trial in the original Court, oftentimes judgment is not ready for delivery at once, but the Court has come to the conclusion, after taking the verdict of the assessors or the jury in a Sessions trial or the Magistrate has made up his mind, that the accused is not guilty and therefore proposes to acquit him. As sections 366 and 367 stand, a doubt has been expressed whether really the accused could be set at liberty before judgment is actually pronounced. In fact an unfortunate client of mine was acquitted like this and judgment was delivered a week later. The complainant took the matter up to the High Court and a Full Bench had to sit to consider the question whether the whole trial was not vitiated by such a procedure. In order to avoid such things this provision is necessary.—Legislative Assembly Debates 12th February 1923 page 2206

The Full Bench case referred to by Mr Rangachariar is Sankaralinga v Narayan 45 Mad 913 (F B). In this case a trial was held with the aid of assessors, and they gave their opinions that the accused were not guilty. The Sessions Judge then wrote a short note setting forth the findings of the assessors, and adding his own finding agreeing with the assessors that the accused were not guilty, and they were acquitted. At a later date he wrote a full reasoned judgment. Held by the Full Bench that the procedure was a mere irregularity curable by section 537.

The present sub-section validates such procedure, making it conditional on the accused to execute a bond for appearance when judgment is to be delivered.

1313 Sub section (5):—Cancellation of bail.—The Magistrate cancel any bail allowed to an accused person and direct him to surrender if it appears on the production of further evidence that a case is made against him—10 C W N 1093, 36 Cal 173. The High Court of Session can cancel a bail granted by the Subordinate

The High Court and the Court of Session can cancel a bail granted by the Subordinate Court.

But the District Magistrate has no power to cancel a bail and order the re-arrest of a person released on bail by a Subordinate Magistrate—4 Bur L T 70 Subsection (5) gives that power only to the High Court and the Court of Session

Under this clause, the powers of the High Court are confined to cases of persons released by the Trial Magistrate. Therefore, there is no jurisdiction in the High Court to entertain an application under this clause against an order granting bail passed by a Sessions Judge in a case pending before a sub-Magistrate. But under sec 561A the High Court has inherent power to interfere with an order granting bail passed by a Sessions Judge—Local Govt v Gulam Jilani, 25 Cr L J 1363 (Nag)

1314 Revision:—The proceedings in which it is, or has to be determined whether bail from an accused person should be taken or not, fall within the definition of "judicial proceedings" and the High Court has power to interfere with the orders made in such proceedings when they prove to be illegal—6 Mad 63. But the District Magistrate cannot revise any order as to bail passed by a subordinate Magistrate under this section. If the District Magistrate considers the subordinate Magistrate's order to be wrong, he should report it to the High Court—22 Bom 549

Even the High Court's power of interference is limited. The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision, only if the Judge has passed an illegal order. Where a Sessions Judge after considering the evidence thinks that there are no reasonable grounds for believing the accused to be guilty of the offence of which he is accused, and releases him on bail, the High Court will not go behind this finding and cancel the order of the Judge releasing the accused on bail—10 M L J 411, 3 A L J 419. 1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be answered. This involves understanding the context and the specific information required.

1. The High Court of Justice, in the case of Re M. J. J., [1965] 1 W.L.R. 1218, 1220, 1221, 1222, 1223, 1224, 1225, 1226, 1227, 1228, 1229, 1230, 1231, 1232, 1233, 1234, 1235, 1236, 1237, 1238, 1239, 1240, 1241, 1242, 1243, 1244, 1245, 1246, 1247, 1248, 1249, 1250, 1251, 1252, 1253, 1254, 1255, 1256, 1257, 1258, 1259, 1260, 1261, 1262, 1263, 1264, 1265, 1266, 1267, 1268, 1269, 1270, 1271, 1272, 1273, 1274, 1275, 1276, 1277, 1278, 1279, 1280, 1281, 1282, 1283, 1284, 1285, 1286, 1287, 1288, 1289, 1290, 1291, 1292, 1293, 1294, 1295, 1296, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1300, 1301, 1302, 1303, 1304, 1305, 1306, 1307, 1308, 1309, 1310, 1311, 1312, 1313, 1314, 1315, 1316, 1317, 1318, 1319, 1320, 1321, 1322, 1323, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1327, 1328, 1329, 1330, 1331, 1332, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1336, 1337, 1338, 1339, 1340, 1341, 1342, 1343, 1344, 1345, 1346, 1347, 1348, 1349, 1350, 1351, 1352, 1353, 1354, 1355, 1356, 1357, 1358, 1359, 1360, 1361, 1362, 1363, 1364, 1365, 1366, 1367, 1368, 1369, 1370, 1371, 1372, 1373, 1374, 1375, 1376, 1377, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1381, 1382, 1383, 1384, 1385, 1386, 1387, 1388, 1389, 1390, 1391, 1392, 1393, 1394, 1395, 1396, 1397, 1398, 1399, 1400, 1401, 1402, 1403, 1404, 1405, 1406, 1407, 1408, 1409, 1410, 1411, 1412, 1413, 1414, 1415, 1416, 1417, 1418, 1419, 1420, 1421, 1422, 1423, 1424, 1425, 1426, 1427, 1428, 1429, 1430, 1431, 1432, 1433, 1434, 1435, 1436, 1437, 1438, 1439, 1440, 1441, 1442, 1443, 1444, 1445, 1446, 1447, 1448, 1449, 1450, 1451, 1452, 1453, 1454, 1455, 1456, 1457, 1458, 1459, 1460, 1461, 1462, 1463, 1464, 1465, 1466, 1467, 1468, 1469, 1470, 1471, 1472, 1473, 1474, 1475, 1476, 1477, 1478, 1479, 1480, 1481, 1482, 1483, 1484, 1485, 1486, 1487, 1488, 1489, 1490, 1491, 1492, 1493, 1494, 1495, 1496, 1497, 1498, 1499, 1500, 1501, 1502, 1503, 1504, 1505, 1506, 1507, 1508, 1509, 1510, 1511, 1512, 1513, 1514, 1515, 1516, 1517, 1518, 1519, 1520, 1521, 1522, 1523, 1524, 1525, 1526, 1527, 1528, 1529, 1530, 1531, 1532, 1533, 1534, 1535, 1536, 1537, 1538, 1539, 1540, 1541, 1542, 1543, 1544, 1545, 1546, 1547, 1548, 1549, 1550, 1551, 1552, 1553, 1554, 1555, 1556, 1557, 1558, 1559, 1560, 1561, 1562, 1563, 1564, 1565, 1566, 1567, 1568, 1569, 1570, 1571, 1572, 1573, 1574, 1575, 1576, 1577, 1578, 1579, 1580, 1581, 1582, 1583, 1584, 1585, 1586, 1587, 1588, 1589, 1590, 1591, 1592, 1593, 1594, 1595, 1596, 1597, 1598, 1599, 1600, 1601, 1602, 1603, 1604, 1605, 1606, 1607, 1608, 1609, 1610, 1611, 1612, 1613, 1614, 1615, 1616, 1617, 1618, 1619, 1620, 1621, 1622, 1623, 1624, 1625, 1626, 1627, 1628, 1629, 1630, 1631, 1632, 1633, 1634, 1635, 1636, 1637, 1638, 1639, 1640, 1641, 1642, 1643, 1644, 1645, 1646, 1647, 1648, 1649, 1650, 1651, 1652, 1653, 1654, 1655, 1656, 1657, 1658, 1659, 1660, 1661, 1662, 1663, 1664, 1665, 1666, 1667, 1668, 1669, 1670, 1671, 1672, 1673, 1674, 1675, 1676, 1677, 1678, 1679, 1680, 1681, 1682, 1683, 1684, 1685, 1686, 1687, 1688, 1689, 1690, 1691, 1692, 1693, 1694, 1695, 1696, 1697, 1698, 1699, 1700, 1701, 1702, 1703, 1704, 1705, 1706, 1707, 1708, 1709, 1710, 1711, 1712, 1713, 1714, 1715, 1716, 1717, 1718, 1719, 1720, 1721, 1722, 1723, 1724, 1725, 1726, 1727, 1728, 1729, 1730, 1731, 1732, 1733, 1734, 1735, 1736, 1737, 1738, 1739, 1740, 1741, 1742, 1743, 1744, 1745, 1746, 1747, 1748, 1749, 1750, 1751, 1752, 1753, 1754, 1755, 1756, 1757, 1758, 1759, 1760, 1761, 1762, 1763, 1764, 1765, 1766, 1767, 1768, 1769, 1770, 1771, 1772, 1773, 1774, 1775, 1776, 1777, 1778, 1779, 1780, 1781, 1782, 1783, 1784, 1785, 1786, 1787, 1788, 1789, 1790, 1791, 1792, 1793, 1794, 1795, 1796, 1797, 1798, 1799, 1800, 1801, 1802, 1803, 1804, 1805, 1806, 1807, 1808, 1809, 1810, 1811, 1812, 1813, 1814, 1815, 1816, 1817, 1818, 1819, 1820, 1821, 1822, 1823, 1824, 1825, 1826, 1827, 1828, 1829, 1830, 1831, 1832, 1833, 1834, 1835, 1836, 1837, 1838, 1839, 1840, 1841, 1842, 1843, 1844, 1845, 1846, 1847, 1848, 1849, 1850, 1851, 1852, 1853, 1854, 1855, 1856, 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1

Verbal direction to appear—By the terms of a bail bond the defendant bound himself to appear on the first inquiry or at other times required. He appeared on the first day of the inquiry and was verbally directed to appear on a subsequent date but failed to do so. It was held that the amount secured by the bond could be legally forfeited by reason of such non attendance—2 Weir 658

Omission of date by surety—Where in the bail bond the accused bound himself to appear on a specified date and below his signature was the undertaking by the surety that he would cause the accused's appearance, but this declaration did not mention the date for the accused's appearance. The accused having made default the security was forfeited. It was held that the bail bond and the undertaking by the surety should be read as one document, and the undertaking should be read as referring to the date mentioned in the portion of the bond signed by the accused, that the omission of date by surety was immaterial, and that therefore the security was rightly forfeited—19 Cr L J 687 (Nag)

Harchand v Crown 10 S L R 208 When the High Court is concerned with persons who have been actually convicted, the principle which will necessarily guide the High Court in granting bail will be whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that the convicts committed the offences in question—Sh Karim v Emp. 27 Cr L J 319 (Nag)

When High Court can grant bail—The High Court and the Court of Session can exercise their power of granting bail, as soon as the Police have arrested the accused and even before the case is sent up to the Magistrate—7 Bur L R 86 They can admit a person to bail even where he has been convicted and has not appealed—5 A L J 419 Where the accused obtained special leave from the Privy Council to appeal to that tribunal, and applied for bail to the Judicial Committee, and the Judicial Committee expressed an opinion that the matter should be decided by the High Court, whereupon the petitioner applied to the High Court for bail, held that the High Court had jurisdiction to make an order in the case releasing the accused on bail, pending the decision of the Privy Council—Queen Empress v Subrahmaniam Ayyar, 24 Mad 161 But when in a case the petitioner has no right to appeal to the Privy Council, and the High Court has no power to give leave to appeal to that tribunal the High Court cannot, after it confirms the conviction of the Court below, admit the petitioner to bail, simply because he proposes to apply (but has not yet applied) to the Judicial Committee for leave to appeal to the Privy Council It cannot do so even under clause 41 of the Letters Patent As soon as the High Court confirms the conviction on appeal or revision, it becomes functus officio and has no jurisdiction afterwards to grant bail in order that a petition for leave to appeal may be made to His Majesty in Council or until the petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is disposed of—Tulsi Tehni v Emperor 50 Cal 585 Diwan Chand v King Emperor, 1908 P R 15, Hannantrao v Emp., 21 A L R 161 27 Cr L J 185

When High Court will not grant bail—Where the accused relies merely on a technical ground against the probability of his conviction, he should not be admitted to bail—Rianaji 480 The High Court refused to grant bail where the application for bail contained defamatory statements and allegations consisting of attacks on the trying Magistrate and on the public and private conduct of other officers of high rank in the service of the Government—15 Bom 488

1316 Power of Sessions Judge—The Sessions Judge can grant bail to 'any person' who has been wrongly convicted by the Magistrate and whose case he can either deal with himself or can refer to the High Court But the words 'any person' do not include a person convicted by the Sessions Judge himself When a Sessions Judge, after convicting the accused, released them on bail pending their appeal to the High Court, it was held that he had no jurisdiction to do so This section does not give him power to alter or vary his own order—4 Bom L R 55

The Sessions Judge has power to admit the petitioners to bail in any case e.g., on a reference under section 123 (2) It stands to reason that if in the case of a person who is convicted and who has preferred

an appeal, bail is allowable, bail can similarly be allowed in the case of a person against whom an order has been made under sec. 118 and which order is liable to be revised by the Sessions Judge under section 123, sub-section (2)—Ihmed Ali Sardar v Emperor, 50 Cal 969

Where a surety has applied for cancellation of the bail bond and the Magistrate has received the application there is no other alternative left to the Magistrate than to cancel the bail-bond. There is no need to hear the application on the merits and the Magistrate cannot dismiss it because of the applicant's failure to attend and plead—9 Bom L R 1285

CHAPTER XL

OF COMMISSIONS FOR THE EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES

- 503 (1) Whenever, in the course of an inquiry, a trial or any other proceeding under this Code, it appears to a Presidency Magistrate, a District Magistrate, a Court of Session or the High Court that the examination of a witness is necessary for the ends of justice, and that the attendance of such witness cannot be procured without an amount of delay expense or inconvenience which, under the circumstances of the case, would be unreasonable such Magistrate or Court may dispense with such attendance and may issue a commission to any District Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such witness resides, to take the evidence of such witness
- (2) When the witness resides in the territories of any Prince or Chief in India in which there is an officer representing the British Indian Government, the commission may be issued to such officer
- (3) The Magistrate or officer to whom the commission is issued, or, if he is the District Magistrate, he or such Magistrate of the first class as he appoints in this behalf, shall proceed to the place where the witness is or shall summon the witness before him, and shall take down his evidence in the same manner, and may for this purpose exercise the same powers as in trials of warrant cases under this Code
- (4) Where the commission is issued to such officer as is mentioned in sub section (2), he may delegate his powers and duties under this commission to any officer subordinate to him whose powers are not less than those of a Magistrate of the first class in British India

1319 Scope of section:—This section provides for the issue of a commission to examine a witness in British India or in the territories of any Prince or Chief in India in which there is an officer representing the British Government. This section does not provide for the examination of a witness residing outside India—5 Bom 338, Emp v Ibidul 49 Bom 878 27 Bom L R 1373, 10 Cr L J 571 (All)

This section relates to the issue of a commission and does not empower the trying Magistrate himself to go to the house of a witness to examine him—2 S L R 8

'In the course of inquiry'—A committing Magistrate is competent to examine a witness in the course of the inquiry before himself. But after making the order of committal he has no jurisdiction to issue a commission for taking evidence so that it might be available at the trial before the Court of Session or High Court. After a commitment is made applications for the examination of witnesses on commission must be made to the High Court or to the particular Judge exercising original criminal jurisdiction in the High Court or to the Court of Session as the case may be—19 Cal 113, 19 Bom 749

'Witness'—This section relates to commission for the examination of witnesses. In the preliminary stage of a proceeding a complainant is not a witness, and a commission cannot be issued for his examination. But if a complainant calls himself to testify to matters within his knowledge he will as regards such testimony be a witness for the prosecution and the issue of a commission for his examination is perfectly legal—1866 P R 10, 1913 P W R 11, 42 Cal 19

Witness residing within jurisdiction—There is nothing in the language of this section to support the contention that the Court has no authority to examine a witness on commission when he is within the Court's jurisdiction—6 Bom 285 24 Cal 551

Expert witnesses—Where an expert in handwriting appears to be the principal witness in the case, he ought not to be examined on commission but should appear before the Court—(1911) 2 M W N 97

1320 Pardanashin ladies—A pardanashin lady has a right, as a witness in a criminal case, to be exempt from personal appearance at Court and to be examined on commission—4 Cr 20. This section allows the examination on commission of a witness who is a ghosha woman, although she is practically the complainant—2 Weir 159. Although pardanashin women are not of right exempted from personal appearance at Court, the word 'inconvenience' in this section empowers the Court to allow their examination by commission where according to the customs and manners of the country they ought not to be compelled to appear in public—5 All 92. See also 1 S L R 5. An application by a pardanashin woman to be examined on commission on the ground that her appearance in Court would cause social degradation to her, was granted where she lived near the Court house and volunteered to pay the expenses of the commission, and the opposite party did not insist on her examination in open Court—15 Cal 775, 24 Cal 551. Even a daughter of a prostitute is entitled to be examined on commission if she is pardanashin and living a married life, despite her lowly origin—1913 P W R 11.

In an Allahabad case, however, it has been held that it would be weakness to surrender as a general principle to be adopted that pardanashin ladies whose evidence is required in criminal trials are in all cases to be allowed to compel the Court to examine them on commission at some other place than the Court house itself. If it becomes imperatively necessary to take her evidence, the Magistrate should make arrangements, so as to take her evidence either in an empty Court room in the presence of himself, the accused, his pleader and the pleader for the prosecution, if there be any, or if no empty room is available, in his own private room or some other room in the Court building—12 All 69. In another Allahabad case it was held that where the pardanashin woman was not merely a witness but was also the complainant in a case of defamation (which gave both a civil and a criminal remedy), the fact that she avoided the civil remedy and chose to set the criminal law in motion materially altered her position as regards the question whether she should be exempted from personal appearance, and the accused had a right and a privilege to have her evidence taken in his presence in the Court—5 All 92.

1321 Delay, expense or inconvenience—The taking of evidence on commission in criminal cases ought to be most sparingly resorted to. Such a procedure may be adopted only in extreme cases of delay expense or inconvenience—5 All 92. If a witness is unable to attend the Court owing to illness (e. g. weak heart and a painful internal mildry) the proper course for the Magistrate would be to first ascertain whether it would be possible for the witness to come to Court within a reasonable time, and if not possible, then the Magistrate will have to reluctantly come to the conclusion that his evidence should be taken on commission—Jamuna Singh v A E 3 Pat 591 (514). Where the evidence of two witnesses was a most material one in the case in as much as they deposed to the identification of the stolen property, on which deposition the whole case depended, the witnesses ought not to have been examined on commission but their attendance before the Court ought to have been procured and the expense of Rs 500 in procuring their attendance was not considered to be unreasonable or excessive, having regard to the circumstances of the case—6 All 224.

May issue —Discretion of Court—The issue of a commission for examination is entirely in the discretion of the Court. In criminal cases the issue of a commission would be a most unsatisfactory course of proceeding and one dangerous to the interests of the community—8 Cal 866. The issue of commission is an unsatisfactory proceeding, because on the one hand the Court has no opportunity of noting the demeanour of witness, and on the other hand of controlling irrelevant and unnecessary or harassing cross-examination of the witness. The discretion to issue a commission should be sparingly exercised, and only in cases of real hardship and inconvenience having due regard to the prejudice which is likely to be thereby caused to the opponent—Ishnoo v Dipchand, 27 Cr L J 89 (Sind)

Commissioner cannot make complaint under sec 195—Although the commissioner appointed under this section may be a 'Court' for the purpose of issuing process against the witness and for recording evidence still he is not a 'Court' within the meaning of sec 195 Therefore where a witness gives false evidence before such commissioner, the proper authority to make a complaint for the prosecution of the witness for perjury is not the commissioner but the Court which issued the commission—11 C W N 909

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the power of the High Court to issue commissions under the Slave Trade Act, 1876, Section 3

Change—In sub-section (1) the word 'such' has been substituted for 'the said,' and sub-section (1A) has been newly added, by section 137 of the Cr P C Amendment Act VIII of 1923 This clause enables a Chief Presidency Magistrate to delegate to a subordinate Presidency Magistrate his powers and duties under any commission issued in his name—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Change—The italicised words have been added by section 138 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. This amendment is consequential to the amendment made in sec. 504

506 Whenever in the course of an inquiry or a trial or any other proceeding under this Code before any Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate it appears that a commission ought to be issued for the examination of a witness whose evidence is necessary for the ends of justice and that the attendance of such witness cannot be procured without an amount of delay expense or inconvenience which under the circumstances of the case would be unreasonable such Magistrate shall apply to the District Magistrate, stating the reasons for the application and the District Magistrate may either issue a commission in the manner hereinbefore provided or reject the application is desirable and necessary that if there are previous convictions they should properly be proved—17 Cr L J 179 Magistrates are not absolved from the ordinary rules of evidence in taking proof of previous convictions Whenever it is required to prove a previous conviction against a man whether it be for the purpose of enhancement of punishment under section 75 I P C, or in proceedings under Chap VIII of the Cr P C, such previous conviction must be proved strictly and in accordance with law Unless it is so proved, no Court can properly take such previous conviction into consideration—43 Cal 1128

Previous convictions should regard being had to the provisions of this section, be proved by copies of judgments or extracts from judgments or by any other documentary evidence of the fact of such previous convictions, and the exemption of the accused in respect of those convictions is, having regard to sec 342, without legal warrant or jurisdiction—28 Cal 689, 28 Bom 129

When the previous conviction has been put to the accused and he denies it, the certified extract from the records of the Court in which he was convicted should be put in evidence, proof should be given that he and the person named therein are one and the same person and the Court should record a specified finding upon that point—1881 A W N 144 15 W R 53 But a mere Koifiat from the record office is not sufficient to prove a previous conviction—15 W R 53

Finger impression—The manner in which a previous conviction may be proved is not limited to the method laid down by this section Any relevant evidence upon which the Court can properly base a finding that the accused was on a previous occasion convicted of an offence will do as well as the methods indicated by this section Thus, a previous conviction may be proved by finger impressions See 3 N L R 1, 6 C P L R 3 32 Cal 759 1 C W N 33, 1906 P L R 3 If the identity of the accused is to be proved by a comparison of finger prints, the one taken in Court being compared with certain finger prints contained in the record of previous convictions there ought to be evidence to prove the similarity between the two, and the identification of the last mentioned finger prints as those of the person who has been previously convicted—Ramdas v King Emp 21 C W N 469 The papillary ridges on the bulbs of the fingers and thumbs, by means of which finger impressions are made, while proved to be almost beyond change from birth to death, are never wholly repeated in the case of the fingers of any other person and they therefore furnish a surer test of identity than any other comparable bodily feature Where two prints made on different occasions resemble one another in the minutae and contain no points of disagreement, an irresistible conclusion arises that they were made by the same finger—3 N L R 1

512 (1) If it is proved that an accused person has absconded, and that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him, the Court competent to try or commit for trial

Record of evidence in absence of accused such person for the offence complained of may, in his absence, examine the witnesses (if any) produced on behalf of the prosecution, and record their depositions. Any such deposition may, on the arrest of such person, be given in evidence against him on the inquiry into, or trial for, the offence with which he is charged if the deponent is dead or incapable of giving evidence or his attendance cannot be procured without an amount of delay, expense or inconvenience which, under the circumstances of the case, would be unreasonable.

(2) If it appears that an offence punishable with death or transportation has been committed by some person or persons unknown, the High Court may direct that any Magistrate of the first class shall hold an inquiry and examine any witnesses who can give evidence concerning the offence. Any depositions so taken may be given in evidence against any person who is subsequently accused of the offence, if the deponent is dead or incapable of giving evidence or beyond the limits of British India,

1331 Scope of section—This section has been specially enacted for enabling the Magistrate to record evidence in the absence of an absconding accused and therefore a Magistrate cannot reject an application of the complainant to summon witnesses or to call on them to produce documents because the accused has absconded—2 Bom L R 707

The Magistrates can only record the evidence, and cannot convict or sentence the accused in his absence—1917 P R 36

A pardon can be tendered to a co-accused under sec 337 even though the principal accused has absconded; in such a case the approver's evidence will be recorded under this section—46 Bom 120

Proof of absconding—In order to give jurisdiction to the Court to examine witnesses in the absence of the accused it must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the accused has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him—1890 A W N 100, 1896 A W N 182. So where evidence was recorded by the Magistrate while there was no proof that the accused had absconded, there was no judicial proceeding and any witness giving false evidence therein could not be prosecuted for an offence under sec 193 I P C—Emp v Makhni 1890 A W N 100.

According to the Lahore High Court, to satisfy the requirements of this section, all that is necessary is that it should be proved that the accused has absconded and it is not necessary that a finding should be given by the Court to that effect—Daya Ram v Emp, 6 Lah 489 27 Cr L 247 26 P L R 845. But in an earlier case the Punjab Court held that where the accused had absconded the Court as to the accused person having absconded, and should record a finding to that effect. In the absence of such proof and finding, the recording of the deposition of witnesses in the absence of the accused was illegal—Wahid v Emp. 1883 P R 21. In an Allahabad case also it has been held that the Court which records the deposition under sec 512 must first of all record an order that in its opinion it has been proved that the accused has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him—Emp v Rustam 38 All 29 13 A L J 1043 16 Cr L J 801. But in a later case the same Court has held that where the Magistrate clearly found that the accused had absconded the mere fact that he did not recite in his order a finding that there was no immediate prospect of arresting the accused would not render the evidence taken in the absence of the accused inadmissible against them when arrested—Emp v. Bhagwati 41 All 60 16 A L J 602 20 Cr L J 6. In Ghurbin v Q F in Cr L 1097 the Calcutta High Court has laid down that evidence can be recorded against the accused in his absence only if the fact of his absconding is alleged, tried and established before the deposition is recorded, but nothing is said in this case as to whether the Court should record a finding as to the absconding of the accused as in fact the evidence in this case was not recorded under sec 512.

Value of the deposition given in absence of accused—The latter part of sub-section (1) seems clearly to indicate that the witnesses who were examined during the absence of the absconding accused should be examined in the presence of the accused, when he is found, unless it is impracticable to obtain their attendance. The statements recorded by a Magistrate under Sec 512 in the absence of the accused cannot be treated as evidence in the Sessions Court, if the witness is living and can be procured—Pakhia v Emp 1911 P L R 157. Where it was not impracticable to obtain the attendance of the witnesses when the accused was found and the accused was committed to the Sessions merely on the strength of the recorded deposition of those witnesses, the commitment was held to be illegal—22 W R 33. But if the accused pleads to the charge, the commitment cannot be quashed—12 C L R 120. If, however, upon such commitment, the Sessions Judge in the course of the trial is of opinion that the prosecution has not laid a basis for the reception of the deposition taken before the Magistrate in the absence of the accused, he should adjourn the trial and under Sec 540 summon such witnesses as he may deem material—12 C L R 120.

'Incapable of giving evidence'—Where a witness who had been examined under section 512 appeared in Court at the trial but could not remember the details of the occurrence, held that he could not be considered as 'incapable of giving evidence' within the meaning of this section. What the Court should do in such a case is to refresh the memory of the witness by reading out his deposition and then ask him if he remembers the details of the occurrence—Bhika v Emp 25 Cr L J 95 (Lah).

CHAPTER XLII.

PROVISIONS AS TO BONDS

513 When any person is required by any Court or officer to execute a bond, with or without sureties, such Court or officer may, except in the case of a bond for good behaviour, permit him to deposit a sum of money or Government promissory note to such amount as the Court or officer may fix, in lieu of executing such bond

Deposit instead of recognizance

Except in case of bond for good behaviour—The object of law in making this exception in good behaviour cases, is to secure the good conduct of the person bound over, not by means of money but by a bond and sureties, and by making the sureties responsible for the good behaviour of the person bound down. See 2 N W P H C R 295

1332 Deposit of money—The deposit of money is in lieu of executing a bond. Where a person was ordered to execute a bond for good behaviour and also to deposit a certain sum in addition thereof, the order as to deposit was illegal, because it was not in lieu of but in addition, to, execution of bond, and also because it is a good behaviour case—Ratnivil 671

Where money has been deposited in Court as bail, the Magistrate is bound to return the amount, on the appearance of the accused to the person who made the deposit. It has no jurisdiction to attach this money in order to realise out of it the fine imposed on the accused—Raghunandan v Emp 11 O I J 296 Girdhari Lal v Emp, 19 A L J 887

514 (1) Whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court by which a bond under this Code has been taken, or of the Court of a Presidency Magistrate, or a Magistrate of the first class,

Procedure on forfeiture of bond or when the bond is for appearance before a Court, to the satisfaction of such Court, that such bond has been forfeited, the Court shall record the grounds of such proof, and may call upon any person bound by such bond to pay the penalty thereof, or to show cause why it should not be paid

(2) If sufficient cause is not shown and the penalty is paid, the Court may proceed to recover the same by issue warrant for the attachment and sale of the moveable property belonging to such person or his estate if he be dead

(3) Such warrant may be executed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which issued it and it shall authorize the attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to such person without such limits, when endorsed by the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such property is found

(4) If such penalty is not paid and cannot be recovered by such attachment and sale, the person so bound shall be liable by order of the Court which issued the warrant, to imprisonment in the civil jail for a term which may extend to six months

(5) The Court may, at its discretion, remit any portion of the penalty mentioned and enforce payment in part only

(6) Where a surety to a bond dies before the bond is forfeited, his estate shall be discharged from all liability in respect of the bond * * *

(7) When any person who has furnished security under section 106 or section 118 or section 562 is convicted of an offence the commission of which constitutes a breach of the conditions of his bond or of a bond executed in lieu of his bond under section 514 B a certified copy of the judgment of the Court by which he was convicted of such offence may be used as evidence in proceedings under this section against his surety or sureties and if such certified copy is so used the Court shall presume that such offence was committed by him unless the contrary is proved

Change—This section has been amended by section 139 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. In sub-section (3) the word 'attachment' has been substituted for the word 'distress' as the former word is more appropriate. In sub-section (6) the words 'but the party who gave the bond may be required to find a new surety' have been omitted but a separate provision to the same effect is made in the new section 514 A. Sub-section (7) has been newly added, the reason is stated below

1333 What amounts to forfeiture—Bonds for appearance should be strictly construed. If the bond requires the accused to appear on a day fixed and if he appears on that day the bond is complied with and the failure of the accused to appear on any other day on which the case is called does not entail a forfeiture of the bond—a Weir 663 4 M H C R App 44 36 Cal 749. Where bonds were taken from the accused and his sureties to appear on Sunday when the Court was closed and when on the next Monday the case was called on and the accused not being present the bonds were forfeited, it was held that as the bond required the attendance of the accused on the day fixed, i.e., on Sunday and not on the next day, the failure of the accused to appear on Monday did not cause a forfeiture of the bond—2 C W N 519 If, however, the bond requires the accused to appear from day to day until the close of the trial, the bond is not illegal—6 M H C R App 38, and the accused will forfeit his bond if he fails to appear on any adjourned hearing Where a bond required the accused to appear 'on the first hearing or at other times required and the accused appeared on the first day as mentioned in the bond, and was verbally directed to appear on a subsequent date on which he failed to appear, it was held that the failure to comply with the verbal direction would entail a forfeiture of the bond—2 Weir 658 Where on a person being arrested under Sec 55 of this Code, the usual security bond was taken for his appearance, held that the bond was only with respect to the offence for which the person was arrested under Sec 55, and the failure of the surety to produce the person in connection with any other offence which he might be suspected of having committed subsequently did not entail a forfeiture of the bond—Manu v Emp, 25 Cr L J 131 (Lah.) A bail bond should not be forfeited for failure of the surety to produce the accused person, where the failure to produce is due to an act of law, e.g., on account of the accused being arrested for another offence—Alauddin v Emp 4 Pat 259, 6 P L T 397 26 Cr L J 833

Where a bond requires the accused to appear before a particular Court, the failure of the accused to appear before another Court to which the case has been transferred, does not work a forfeiture of the bond, if no obligation to appear in the latter Court has been specified in the bond—Shamsuddin v Emp, 30 Cal 107, 36 Cal 749, 18 A L J 631, Maung Aye v A E, 2 Rang 581 (585) 26 Cr L J 389

As to the forfeiture of bond for keeping the peace or for good behaviour, see Notes 297 and 298 under sec 121

Proof of forfeiture of bond—The words whenever it is proved show that no person who has entered into a recognizance bond should be called upon to show cause why he should not have his recognizance declared forfeited, without prima facie proof that the bond has been forfeited—11 B H C R 170, 3 P J T 381 An order for forfeiture of recognizance or of a bail bond must be made upon evidence in the case and not upon evidence taken in other cases—10 C L R 571, 12 W R 54

The Court must record the grounds of forfeiture Failure to do so will vitiate the proceedings—3 P L T 381

Illegal bonds cannot be forfeited—A bond which is null and void has no effect at all, such a bond cannot be forfeited Thus, where by mistake a bond under sec 110 was taken from a person ordered to execute a bond under sec 107, the bond is illegal and an order forfeiting the security furnished under the bond is illegal and will be set aside—1904 P L R 42 Where a warrant was issued to a woman in the first instance instead of a summons, without recording reasons under sec 90, the is wholly illegal and the bond given by the surety for the woman -

warrant for the attachment and sale of the moveable property belonging to such person or his estate if he be dead

(3) Such warrant may be executed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which issued it: and it shall authorize the attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to such person without such limits, when endorsed by the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such property is found

(4) If such penalty is not paid and cannot be recovered by such attachment and sale, the person so bound shall be liable, by order of the Court which issued the warrant, to imprisonment in the civil jail for a term which may extend to six months

(5) The Court may, at its discretion, remit any portion of the penalty mentioned and enforce payment in part only.

(6) Where a surety to a bond dies before the bond is forfeited, his estate shall be discharged from all liability in respect of the bond * * *

(7) When any person who has furnished security under section 106 or section 118 or section 562 is convicted of an offence the commission of which constitutes a breach of the conditions of his bond or of a bond executed in lieu of his bond under section 514 B, a certified copy of the judgment of the Court by which he was convicted of such offence may be used as evidence in proceedings under this section against his surety or sureties, and, if such certified copy is so used, the Court shall presume that such offence was committed by him unless the contrary is proved

Change:—This section has been amended by section 139 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. In sub-section (3) the word 'attachment' has been substituted for the word 'distress' as the former word is more appropriate. In sub-section (6) the words "but the party who gave the bond may be required to find a new surety" have been omitted, but a separate provision to the same effect is made in the new section 514-A. 1333 What amounts to forfeiture:—Bonds for appearance should be strictly construed. If the bond requires the accused to appear on a day fixed, and if he appears on that day, the bond is complied with, and the failure of the accused to appear on any other day on which the case is called does not entail a forfeiture of the bond—2 Weir 663, 4 M H C. A bail bond should not be forfeited for failure of the surety to produce the accused person, where the failure to produce is due to an act of law, e.g., on account of the accused being arrested for another offence—Alauddin v Emp, 4 Pat 259, 6 P L T 397 26 Cr L J 833

Where a bond requires the accused to appear before a particular Court, the failure of the accused to appear before another Court to which the case has been transferred, does not work a forfeiture of the bond, if no obligation to appear in the latter Court has been specified in the bond—Shamsuddin v Emp 30 Cal 107, 36 Cal 749, 18 A L J 631, Maung Nge v A E, 2 Rang 581 (585) 26 Cr L J 389

As to the forfeiture of bond for keeping the peace or for good behaviour see Notes 297 and 298 under sec 121

Proof of forfeiture of bond—The words "whenever it is proved" show that no person who has entered into a recognizance bond should be called upon to show cause why he should not have his recognizance declared forfeited, without prima facie proof that the bond has been forfeited—11 B H C R 170, 3 P L T 381 An order for forfeiture of recognizance or of a bail bond must be made upon evidence in the case and not upon evidence taken in other cases—10 C L R 571, 12 W R 54

The Court must record the grounds of forfeiture Failure to do so will vitiate the proceedings—3 P L T. 381.

Illegal bonds cannot be forfeited—A bond which is null and void has no effect at all such a bond cannot be forfeited Thus, where by mistake a bond under sec 110 was taken from a person ordered to execute a bond under sec 107, the bond is illegal and an order forfeiting the security furnished under the bond is illegal and will be set aside—1904 P L R 42 Where a warrant was issued to a woman in the first instance instead of a summons, without recording reasons under sec 90, the warrant is wholly illegal and the bond given by the surety the woman's attorney once has no legal force and cannot be forfeited if the woman does not appear—1918 P W R 7, 1907 P W R 23.

Death of accused—The death of the accused discharges the sureties from all liabilities. "The object of the surety bonds is to ensure that the accused person shall not evade justice by flying from the jurisdiction of the Court. But if the accused elects to die sooner than face his trial, that can hardly be a sufficient reason for forfeiting the bonds of sureties: it cannot impose upon them any moral obligation or responsibility to the Court.—18 Bom L R 683 37 Mad 156

1334 What Court can proceed under this section:—So far as bonds generally are concerned, action may be taken under this section by the Court by which the bond was taken or by the Court of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class. But in the case of a bond for appearance before a Court, the tribunal indicated is the Court and there is no other tribunal. Where the bond is for appearance before a Sessions Court, a Deputy Magistrate cannot take action for the forfeiture of the bond. The Sessions Judge cannot delegate that function to the Deputy Magistrate under sec 516 which deals with the levy of the amount only—14 C W N 259. Where a bail bond was executed for due appearance of the accused before a certain Court, and no provision was made therein for his appearance before any other Court to which the case might thereafter be transferred, held that after such transfer, the former Court had no jurisdiction to forfeit the bond on the ground of the non appearance of the accused either before the Court to which the case was transferred or before itself—Maung Nge v A B 2 Rang 581 (586). A personal recognizance to appear was taken from the accused by the Magistrate of Karjat. The accused having failed to appear on the day fixed, the Magistrate at Karjat issued a notice to the accused under this section. In the meanwhile, the accused was transferred to the Court of the Magistrate at Khalapur who forfeited the bond and directed the accused to pay the penalty. It was held that the Magistrate at Khalapur had no jurisdiction to make the order under this section, as he was not the Magistrate who had taken the bond or before whom the accused had to appear on the date of default—In re Mir Husen 16 Bom L R 84. The Presidency Magistrate of Bombay has no jurisdiction under section to order the forfeiture of a bond for appearance before the Police taken by the Police under sec 106 of the City of Bombay Police Act (Bom Act IV of 1902)—42 Bom 400.

1335 Notice to show cause:—If an order of forfeiture is passed without any notice to the person whose bond is forfeited, it amounts to a failure of justice, and the defect cannot be cured by sec 537—Sarju v Jas Raj Kumar, A I R (1925) Oudh 51. Before a warrant can be issued for the attachment of his property, the surety should be called upon to show cause why he should not pay the penalty mentioned in the bond; and it should be clear on the face of the record that he was so called upon. A mere verbal and unrecorded order to show cause is not sufficient—15 W R 82. A summary order for recovering the amount due on the security bond from a surety without serving upon him any notice to pay the same or to show cause why it should not be paid, is invalid—9 W R 4.

Procedure, if party appears to show cause—If the party appears to show cause, he should be allowed an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses upon whose evidence the rule to show cause was issued—4 Cal 865, 25 Cal 440 If the accused appears and shows cause, and the Magistrate still considers that the recognizance should be forfeited, it is his duty to record the evidence upon which it is proved that the accused has acted in such a way that it becomes necessary to forfeit the recognizance There must be a regular judicial trial and legal inquiry before punishment can be inflicted—12 W R 54 Before it can be declared that a bond executed by a surety is forfeited, there must be a formal finding arrived at after taking evidence in the presence of such surety, which evidence must prove that the principal person has so acted as to necessitate or render it advisable that the surety should, by reason of the act of the principal, forfeit his bond—25 Cal 440

1336 Order when to be passed:—If the accused's bond is forfeited, the Court may at once proceed to pass an order of forfeiture If the accused fails to appear on the day fixed, the order of forfeiture of the bond of appearance is not illegal if it is passed on the very next day—2 Bom L R 589 Indeed a Magistrate ought to take action immediately otherwise it will be deemed that the Magistrate has decided not to take action under this section Thus, where a person who is already bound over under Chapter VIII is charged with an offence before a Magistrate, and the Magistrate at the time of passing his sentence in the second offence knows that there is an outstanding recognizance, he should decide once for all whether he will proceed on it or not If he does not make any order for the forfeiture of the recognizance, it must be taken that he has decided not to forfeit the recognizance, and he cannot afterwards, in a subsequent and separate proceeding, reconsider his decision and direct forfeiture of the recognizance—Munshi v Emp 25 Cr I J 4 (Felt), 1913 P R 13, 1904 P R 26, 1 C L R 131, 3 C L R 406 But it is sufficient if the Magistrate passes an order of forfeiture in substantially the same proceeding in which he convicts the accused though he does not pass such order immediately on conviction Thus where the Magistrate did not pass an order of forfeiture of security at the time of conviction of the principals but while convicting them he plainly wrote in his judgment that "in as much as the sureties would forfeit Rs 4000 presently, I refrain from passing a heavy sentence on the accused," and then the Magistrate issued process to the sureties and confiscated the security in full it was held that the Magistrate having plainly showed in his judgment his intention to confiscate, the order of forfeiture of security though passed subsequently after conviction was legal—Hussain Khan v Crown, 1917 P R 15 But the Allahabad High Court holds that the mere fact that no immediate action is taken against a person under this section is no bar to his taking such action at a subsequent time, the Magistrate can wait till the time of appealing has expired or till the appeal has been dismissed, and then he can proceed under this section—26 All 202

If a person is bound down to keep the peace, say for one year, the bond is forfeited, proceedings for forfeiture of the bond must

uated within the term of the bond, i.e., within one year from the date of the bond, and if the proceedings are started within that period, the termination of the period of the bond before the proceedings are finished will not invalidate the subsequent order of forfeiture—20 A L J 692; 44 All 657

Movable property—During the surety's lifetime, only movable property can be attached and sold for recovery of the penalty—16 A I J 503 (see this case cited under sec 118) But a surety can offer house property as security under sec 118, though his movable property alone can be attached and sold—Ibid

'His estate if he be dead'—These words were introduced into the Code of 1898 to meet 1894 P R 22, where it was held that the legal representative of a deceased surety could not be proceeded against under the provisions of this section

1337 Liability of sureties:—The bond executed by the principal and the bond executed by the surety are to be considered as one bond for one amount and is discharged on forfeiture by the payment of the amount due by either the principal or the surety—Laku v Q E, 1894 P R 26 In no case can an amount in excess of the amount secured by the bond be demanded or recovered from the person bound or his sureties, individually or collectively—Ib Mahomed v Emp, 1911 P L R 226 12 Cr L J 404 Where the principal accused was bound over (under sec 107) in the sum of Rs 500, and his surety in the same amount, and on forfeiture of the bond the Magistrate ordered that the principal should forfeit the whole amount of his bond, viz Rs 500, and the surety should forfeit Rs 250, held that the order was illegal the Magistrate could not demand a sum in excess of Rs 500, whether from the principal or from the surety or from both The High Court modified the order of the Magistrate by directing the principal to pay Rs 250 and the surety to pay Rs 250—Harnam v Crown, 5 Lah 448 (449) When the amount of the bond has been recovered from the principal, the sureties are not liable to any further amount The liability of the surety is only a joint and several liability with the principal and there is no warrant to collect the amount twice over—U B R (1905) 31, 2 L B R 235, 1894 P R 26, 4 Lah 462 But the Calcutta High Court dissents from this view and holds that when a person executes a bond for keeping the peace under sec 107, and another stands surety for him, then on the breach of the bond both the surety and principal are liable to pay the penalty of their respective bonds, and the surety is liable quite irrespective of the question whether the amount of the bond of the principal has been realised or not The liability of the surety is not co-extensive with that of the principal as in the ordinary case of a surety for a debtor for the payment of his debt, where the surety is discharged as soon as the principal debtor pays the money due from him Here the surety is an additional safeguard against a breach of the peace Therefore where the principal accused was bound down in the sum of Rs 100, to keep the peace under sec 107, and the surety bound himself in the sum of Rs 50 that the former would not commit a breach of the peace, and upon the bond of the accused being declared forfeited, both he and his surety were ordered to pay the amounts of their respective bonds (viz, Rs 100 and 50), held that the order was not illegal and that the surety was bound to pay Rs 50 in spite of the fact that the accused had already paid Rs 100—Saligram v Emp 36 Cal 562

A regards the liability of sureties per se, if three sureties sign a bond, they are jointly and severally liable to pay the amount of the bond, but every one of them cannot be called on to pay the whole amount, the sum named can only be recovered once—Mahomed Ibrahim v Crown 8 S L R 173 16 Cr L J 100

Since sureties on a bond are required in order that the failure of the principal to appear may be to their peril it follows that the object of this provision is defeated if the principal and surety are allowed to relieve the latter of the peril and confine it to the former by an arrangement among themselves. Therefore, an agreement by an accused with his surety that he will indemnify the surety if the bail is forfeited on account of the accused's non-appearance, is void—Jodhraj v Bishaulal 20 N L R 166

Sub section (4):—Imprisonment—When default is made in payment, the Magistrate cannot forthwith direct imprisonment. He should order the attachment and sale of the defaulter's moveable property, and if the penalty cannot be recovered from such attachment and sale, then and then only can he direct imprisonment—10 C 1 R 371

1338 Sub section (5):—Remission of penalty—This sub section gives the Court power to remit the penalty or to reduce its amount. Under the Codes of 1872 and 1861, neither the Magistrate nor even the High Court in revision had power to reduce the amount of the penalty under a recognizance bond which had been forfeited. See 8 C 1 R 72, 3 Cal 757, 19 W R 1. If the Magistrate thought that the amount of recognizance was excessive, he was to refer the matter to Government—Ibid

1339 Sub section (7):—Admissibility of judgment of convictions—This sub section has been newly enacted. Under the old law there was a conflict of opinion among the High Courts. The Allahabad and Punjab Courts laid down that where a person who had given a security bond with a surety for good behaviour, was convicted of an offence, the production of the judgment of conviction and the proof, if necessary, of the identity of the principal was sufficient evidence upon which a Magistrate was competent to issue notice to the surety. It was not incumbent on the Magistrate to prove that the principal was properly convicted, by re-summoning the witnesses on whose evidence the principal was convicted—21 All 86, 1903 P R 32, 1911 P W R 35. But in 25 Cal 440 and 11 Cal 77, it was held that the mere production of the original record or a certified copy of the trial in which the principal was convicted would not be conclusive evidence to show that the accused had really committed an offence, such fact must be proved by evidence taken in the presence of the surety, unless it was admitted by him. The present sub section adopts the view of the Allahabad and Punjab decisions. 'There has been a conflict of opinion whether a judgment convicting the principal in a bond taken under the Code and ordering the forfeiture of the bond is sufficient prima facie pr

tiated within the term of the bond, i.e., within one year from the date of the bond, and if the proceedings are started within that period, the termination of the period of the bond before the proceedings are finished will not invalidate the subsequent order of forfeiture—20 A L J 692, 44 All 657

Moveable property—During the surety's lifetime, only moveable property can be attached and sold for recovery of the penalty—16 A L J 503 (see this case cited under sec 118) But a surety can offer house property as security under sec 118, though his moveable property alone can be attached and sold—Ibid

His estate if he be dead These words were introduced into the Code of 1898 to meet 1894 P R 22, where it was held that the legal representative of a deceased surety could not be proceeded against under the provisions of this section

1337 Liability of sureties:—The bond executed by the principal and the bond executed by the surety are to be considered as one bond for one amount, and is discharged on forfeiture by the payment of the amount due by either the principal or the surety—Kaku v Q E, 1894 P R 26 In no case can an amount in excess of the amount secured by the bond be demanded or recovered from the person bound or his sureties, individually or collectively—In Mahomed v Emp 1911 P L R 226 12 Cr L J 404 Where the principal accused was bound over (under sec 107) in the sum of Rs 500, and his surety in the same amount, and on forfeiture of the bond the Magistrate ordered that the principal should forfeit the whole amount of his bond, viz Rs 500, and the surety should forfeit Rs 250, held that the order was illegal the Magistrate could not demand a sum in excess of Rs 500 whether from the principal or from the surety or from both The High Court modified the order of the Magistrate by directing the principal to pay Rs 250 and the surety to pay Rs 250—Harnam v Crown, 5 Lah 448 (449) When the amount of the bond has been recovered from the principal the sureties are not liable to any further amount The liability of the surety is only a joint and several liability with the principal and there is no warrant to collect the amount twice over—U B R (1905) 31, 2 L B R 235, 1894 P R 26, 4 Lah 462 But the Calcutta High Court dissents from this view and holds that when a person executes a bond for keeping the peace under sec 107, and another stands surety for him, then on the breach of the bond both the surety and principal are liable to pay the penalty of their respective bonds, and the surety is liable quite irrespective of the question whether the amount of the bond of the principal has been realised or not The liability of the surety is not co-extensive with that of the principal as in the ordinary case of a surety for a debtor for the payment of his debt, where the surety is discharged as soon as the principal debtor pays the money due from him Here the surety is an additional safeguard against a breach of the peace Therefore where the principal accused was bound down in the sum of Rs 100, to keep the peace under sec 107, and the surety bound himself in the sum of Rs 50 that the former would not commit a breach of the peace, and upon the bond of the accused being declared forfeited, both he and his surety were ordered to pay the amounts of their respective bonds (viz, Rs 100 and 50), held that the order was not illegal, and that the surety was bound to pay Rs 50 in spite of the fact that the accused had already paid Rs 100—Saligram v Emp 36 Cal 562

A regards the liability of sureties per se, if three sureties sign a bond, they are jointly and severally liable to pay the amount of the bond, but every one of them cannot be called on to pay the whole amount, the sum named can only be recovered once—Mahomed Ibrahim v Crown 8 S L R 173 16 Cr L J 100

Since sureties on a bond are required in order that the failure of the principal to appear may be at their peril it follows that the object of this provision is defeated if the principal and surety are allowed to relieve the latter of the peril and confine it to the former by an arrangement among themselves. Therefore, an agreement by an accused with his surety that he will indemnify the surety if the bail is forfeited on account of the accused's non appearance is void—Jodhraj v Bishalal 20 N L R 166

Sub section (4):—Imprisonment—When default is made in payment, the Magistrate cannot forthwith direct imprisonment. He should order the attachment and sale of the defaulter's moveable property, and if the penalty cannot be recovered from such attachment and sale, then and then only can he direct imprisonment—10 C L R 571

1338 Sub section (5):—Remission of penalty—This sub section gives the Court power to remit the penalty or to reduce its amount. Under the Codes of 1872 and 1861, neither the Magistrate nor even the High Court in revision had power to reduce the amount of the penalty under a recognizance bond which had been forfeited. See 8 C L R 72, 3 Cal 757, 19 W R 1. If the Magistrate thought that the amount of recognizance was excessive, he was to refer the matter to Government—Ibid

1339 Sub section (7).—Admissibility of judgment of convictions—This sub section has been newly enacted. Under the old law there was a conflict of opinion among the High Courts. The Allahabad and Punjab Courts laid down that where a person who had given a security bond with a surety for good behaviour, was convicted of an offence, the production of the judgment of conviction and the proof, if necessary, of the identity of the principal was sufficient evidence upon which a Magistrate was competent to issue notice to the surety. It was not incumbent on the Magistrate to prove that the principal was properly convicted, by re-summoning the witnesses on whose evidence the principal was convicted—21 All 86, 1903 P R 32, 1911 P W R 35. But in 25 Cr L 440 and 11 Cal 77, it was held that the mere production of the original record or a certified copy of the trial in which the principal was convicted would not be conclusive evidence to show that the accused had really committed an offence, such fact must be proved by evidence taken in the presence of the surety, unless it was admitted by him. The present subsection adopts the view of the Allahabad and Punjab decisions. "There has been a conflict of opinion whether a judgment convicting the principal in a bond taken under the Code and ordering the forfeiture of the bond is sufficient prima facie in proceedings under this section against the sureties. The amendment permits the use of such a judgment as evidence in such proceedings and directs that the Court shall presume that such offence was committed unless the contrary is proved.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

The judgment of conviction is undoubtedly evidence against the principal himself. Thus, where the bond is given by the person bound down to keep the peace, the judgement convicting him of a breach of the peace is admissible in evidence against him, and may form a sufficient basis for an order under this section, he having had an opportunity of cross-examining the witness on whose evidence the forfeiture is held to be established—25 CrL 440, 4 Cal 865

Revision.—The High Court can revise all orders made under this section. See notes under section 515

1340 Nature of proceedings under this section:—The proceeding to realise a penalty is of the nature of a civil proceeding (3 P L T 381) and the person against whom it is taken is competent to give evidence on oath in his own behalf—15 W R 87. It is not a criminal proceeding and no charge need be drawn up. After the Magistrate has satisfied himself that the bond has been forfeited, he can at once call upon the person concerned to pay the penalty. The proceeding therefore cannot be held to be a trial in the sense of the Code—2 Mad 169

the first class, may order the person from whom such security was demanded to furnish fresh security in accordance with the directions of the original order, and if such security is not furnished, such Court or Magistrate may proceed as if there had been a default in complying with such original order

This section has been newly added by sec 140 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923, to make up the deletion of certain words in sub-section (6) of section 514. It also covers the case of a surety who becomes insolvent.

514-B When the person required by any Court or officer

Bond required from a minor to execute a bond is a minor, such Court or officer may accept, in lieu thereof, a bond executed by a surety or sureties only

We have added a new section 514B to provide for the case of a bond being required from a minor.—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

Under the old law, where a person released on probation under sec 562 and ordered to execute a bond for good conduct was a minor, the bond could not be executed by his sureties, see 4 L B R 12 This is no longer good law, having regard to the provision of this section

515 All orders passed under Section 514 by any Magistrate other than a Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate, shall be appealable to the District Magistrate, or, if not so appealed, may be revised by him

Appeal from and revision of orders under Section 514 -

1341 Appeal and revision—Under the old Codes of 1861 and 1872 there was no provision for appeal or revision of orders forfeiting a security bond under sec 514 see 2 Wld 169 This section makes provision for such appeal or revision

Under this section all orders passed by the subordinate Magistrates shall be appealable to the District Magistrate, but not to any first Class Magistrate—Ratanlal 384

A bond for keeping the peace or for good behaviour is not given to any particular person but to the Court, and no private party is entitled to appeal against an order of a Magistrate refusing to forfeit the bond, but it is open to the District Magistrate to take action in revision—Swynn v Jai Raj Kumar A I R (1925) Oudh 51

Orders passed by a District Magistrate under this section may be subject to revision by the High Court—1905 P R 15

516 The High Court or Court of Session may direct any Magistrate to levy the amount due on a bond to appear and attend at such High Court or Court of Session

Power to direct levy of amount due on certain recognizances

This section empowers the Court of Session to delegate his power of levying fine to a Magistrate, but he cannot delegate his power of initiating proceedings for forfeiture of the bond—14 C W N 259 (cited in Note 1334 under sec 514)

CHAPTER XLIII

OF THE DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY

516A When any property regarding which any offence appears to have been committed, or which appears to have been used for the commission of any offence, is before any Criminal Court du

Order for custody and disposal of property pending trial in certain cases inquiry or trial the Court may make such order as it thinks fit for the proper custody of such property pending the conclusion of the inquiry or trial, and, if the property is subject to speedy or natural decay, may, after recording such evidence as it thinks necessary, order it to be sold or otherwise disposed of

This section has been newly inserted by section 141 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1933. It is proposed to add to the chapter a new section to enable the Court to give orders for the custody or disposal of property during an inquiry.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). Under the old law an order for disposal of property could be made only when the inquiry or trial was concluded (see 517) but no order could be made while the offence committed in connection with such property was still under inquiry and the trial was not yet entered.—হাইদারাবাদ 5 C. L. J. 229, 24 M. L. J. 1. This section enables a Court to make an order for disposal of property during the inquiry or trial.

517 (1) When an inquiry or a trial in any Criminal Court is concluded, the Court may make such

Order for disposal of property regarding which offence committed order as it thinks fit for the disposal by destruction, confiscation, or delivery to any person claiming to be entitled to possession thereof or otherwise of any property or document produced before it or in its custody or regarding which any offence appears to have been committed or which has been used for the commission of any offence.

(2) When a High Court or a Court of Session makes such order and cannot through its own officers conveniently deliver the property to the person entitled thereto, such Court may direct that the order be carried into effect by the District Magistrate.

(3) When an order is made under this section in a case in which an appeal lies, such order shall not (except when the property is live stock or is subject to speedy and natural decay) be carried out until the period allowed for presenting such appeal has passed or, when such

(3) When an order is made under this section, such order shall not, except where the property is live stock or subject to speedy and natural decay, and save as provided by subsection (4), be carried out for one month, or when an appeal is presented, until such appeal has been disposed of.

appeal is presented within such period, until such appeal has been disposed of

(4) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to prohibit any Court from delivering any property under the provision of sub-section (1) to any person claiming to be entitled to the possession thereof on his executing a bond with or without sureties to the satisfaction of the Court engaging to restore such property to the Court if the order made under this section is modified or set aside on appeal

Explanation—In this section the term "property" includes, in the case of property regarding which an offence appears to have been committed, not only such property as has been originally in the possession or under the control of any party, but also any property into or for which the same may have been converted or exchanged, and anything acquired by such conversion or exchange, whether immediately or otherwise

Change—This section has been amended by section 142 of the C. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The following changes have been introduced—

(1) The italicised words have been added in sub-section (1) "any such words are added to elucidate the order for disposal of property of a person before a Court by explaining that this means disposal by confiscation or restoration to the person claiming to be entitled to the possession thereof"—Statement of Objects and Reasons 1923

(2) Sub-section (3) has been changed as shown in proposed section "It allows one month for the presentation of an appeal or an application for revision where this is allowed"—Report of the Select Committee of 1926

(3) Sub-section (4) has been newly added "By this clause a Court is enabled, if it sees fit, to restore the property to the person claiming to be entitled to it, who is willing to execute a bond for its return if need be"—Statement of Objects and Reasons 1923

1342 Scope of section—Under the Code of 1861 the operation of this section was much restricted, and the Court could exercise its power under this section only with reference to property which was the subject of any offence had been committed or which had been the subject of the commission of any offence, otherwise not—24 Cal 449, 25 Cal 434, 26 Cal 434, 27 Cal 434, 28 Cal 434, 29 Cal 434, 30 Cal Under the 1898 Code, the scope of the section has been enlarged, and an order can be made with regard to any property produced before the Court or in its custody even though it has not been used for the commission of any offence or though no offence in regard to it has been committed—34 Cal 347, In re Pyde Ramanma, 20 Cr J 135 42 Mad 9, 21 Cr L J 414 (Nag), or though the offence actually under investigation is not in connection with the property or is not proved—2 Weir 666 The ruling in 2 Weir 665 is no longer good law The decision in 30 Cal 690 is erroneous as it did not notice the change in the law in the 1898 Code

1343 Property:—Property produced in Court—When a portion of a property (e.g. a portion of salt or other article in bulk) is produced in Court and received in evidence as a sample, the whole bulk is taken to have been produced before the Court and the Magistrate can make an order with respect to the entire bulk—2 Weir 670

Property in respect of which an offence has been committed—These words mean property which has been the subject of offences like theft or criminal misappropriation—34 Cal 986 Where the accused gave false information that his jewels were stolen, and afterwards these jewels were found in his possession, and the Magistrate after convicting him of an offence under sec 182 I P C confiscated those jewels under this section, it was held that the order under this section was illegal, because the jewels were neither produced before the Court, nor was there any offence committed with regard to them—9 C W V 597

Cash is not, strictly speaking property, except in so far as it is capable of being possessed and identified in specie If, however, it is certain that the coins found on the person of thieves are the actual coins which have been the subject of theft, then it is permissible to treat such coins as stolen property and the Magistrate can pass an order as to their disposal (e.g. an order to pay them to the complainant as compensation) But coins which have been put into circulation and passed on to other persons can not be treated in the same way as stolen coins actually remaining in the possession of thieves—Parsh v Emp 18 S I R 218 26 Cr L J 1315 But in an Allahabad case, where the accused embezzled some money from a Bank and sent part of the embezzled money to one of his creditors in notes under insured cover which was traced and seized by the police, and the Magistrate after convicting the accused ordered the money to be handed over to the Bank, held that the order was strictly justified under the provisions of this section, as the money was "property in respect of which an offence was committed" and it was property to which the Bank was entitled—Bankey Lal v Allahabad Bank, 23 A L J 889 26 Cr L J 1232 A I R 1926 All 47

The Magistrate can dispose of property stolen in British territory, though the Police might have seized it in foreign territory—1878 P R 20

Property used for the commission of an offence—This means property which has been instrumental in committing an offence e.g. guns or swords—34 Cal 986 But any instrument of thing which is too remotely connected with the commission of an offence can not be confiscated under this section. Thus it is illegal to confiscate a press in which a sed matter has been published because the press is a too remote instr and cannot be said to be property which has been used for the comm of the offence—34 Cal 486 1907 P W R 37. A Magistrate conv a person for gambling under section 6 and 7 of the Madras Nuisances Act cannot confiscate the money found in his waistcoat p when there was no evidence to show that the money was actually sta 41 Mad 644. S also a boat which has been used by the accus going to commit a theft or in escaping from pursuit cannot be sa be property used for the commission of an offence—8 C W N see also Ratnaji 688. Similarly where the accused has been guil rash driving it is illegal to pass an order that the cart and pos the accused should be sold and the sale proceeds paid over to complainant is compensation—1904 P L R 9.

Property must be movable—This section has no application to moeable property. Where the accused dispossessed the complainant his garden by breaking the padlock of its gate and were convict the offence of criminal trespass, the Court had no power to orde restoration of the garden to the complainant under this section or sec 522—18 C W N 1146. See also 36 Cal 44 1900 A W N and 12 I W 227. Contra—4 I B R 220 where the word 'pro was held to include immovable property.

Property must have been in existence—No order can be made this section with respect to property which was not in existence at the of the offence. Thus an innocent purchaser of a stolen cow can ordered to deliver up the calf which was not even in embryonic ex when the theft took place but which was given birth to by the while she was in his possession—in Mad 25.

1344 Order, when can be made—According to the wor this section an order for disposal of the property can be made only the conclusion of the trial, and not long after the conclusion of the 24 Cr I J 804 (M). An order for disposal of property pass days after the date of the passing of judgment in the trial is not in Kishan Chand v Nanak Chand 7 Lah L J 625 26 Cr L J. But in another Lahore case it has been held that the order under se and the judgment in the trial must be contemporaneous. And so, order is passed by a Court in respect of the disposal of the property conclusion of the trial of the accused the Court has no jurisdiction pass order at any subsequent time directing delivery of the prop to the complainant—Ibduf v Ghulam Muhammad 4 Lah 460 (461) case has been dissented from in 7 Lah L J 625 cited above.

No order as to the disposal of property can be made under this if the trial is barred under sec 403. The words 'when an inquiry c is concluded' cannot apply to a case in which the Court is prohibite conducting a trial at all—4 I B R 229. Similarly, an order di delivery of property cannot be made by a Magistrate without any proceeding before him or any other Magistrate, but merely on the cation of the person in whose favour the order is made—6 C L J.

Where a person charged with criminal breach of trust in respect of certain jewels died before the day fixed for his trial, and there was no trial, no order could be made by the Magistrate under this section. The jewels were ordered to be returned to the person from whom the Police recovered them—29 Mad 375

Order discretionary—Orders under this section are discretionary. This section invests the Magistrate with a discretionary power and it is a rule of law that such power must be exercised judicially, i.e., according to the sound principles of law and not in an arbitrary manner—11 Bom L R 16. This discretion is open to correction by the High Court where it has been exercised in violation of judicial principles—40 Bom 186

1345 Nature of order under this section:—The old section stated that the Magistrate could make such order as he thought fit for the disposal of the property. This is a general term and the nature of the order to be passed for disposal was not specified. It depended upon the discretion of the Magistrate to say what order was to be passed having regard to all the facts of the case—11 Bom L R 16. Under the present section the word 'disposal' has been elucidated by certain explanatory words.

Order in a bribe case—When the accused was convicted of taking bribe and the money paid as bribe was deposited in Court by the complainant, the Magistrate could order a portion of the bribe to be confiscated and the rest to be paid to the complainant—1873 P R 9

Order in respect of currency note—Where the accused stole a currency note from the complainant and changed it at the Government Treasury, then on conviction of the accused for this the currency notes should be delivered to the Treasury and not to the complainant. Currency note is money and the ownership passes by mere delivery and the original owner cannot claim the amount is against the Treasury—19 Cal 52. The accused purchased some gold ornaments and handed to the jeweller a currency note which he had stolen. The jeweller not having had adequate cash took the note to a neighbouring shopkeeper who cashed it in good faith. Afterwards, during the prosecution of the accused, the note was attached from the shopkeeper, and on conviction of the accused the Magistrate ordered it to be returned to the Crown whose property it was found to have been. Held that the currency note should be returned to the shopkeeper, for property in it had passed to him by mere delivery—40 Bom 186. See also 7 N H C R 233, 3 Cal 379, 1 N W P H C R 298

So is the rule in respect of current coins. But Dabashahi coin is not current coin in British India, and it is to be delivered to the complainant from whom it is stolen, like any other common article or property—25 Bom 702

Order of forfeiture—An order of disposal under this section includes an order of forfeiture or confiscation—Ratanlal 492. This is now expressly provided for in the present section. In 5 N L R 59 it was held that the disposal of property could not be held to include confiscation or forfeiture, as the penalty of confiscation or forfeiture having been expressly provided for in secs 62, 121 etc of the Indian Penal Code and in numerous other sections of other Acts, it could not be included in the general word

'disposal' used in this section. The same view was taken in 5 P L J 321 34 Cal 986 1907 P W R 37. These rulings are no longer correct in view of the express words of the present section.

An order for the confiscation of property which is the subject matter of an offence cannot be made without first giving notice to and hearing the person to whose prejudice the order would be. Want of notice would be a good ground for setting aside the order—17 Cr L J 207 (Bur.)

Order of destruction of counterfeit coin—If the accused is convicted of an offence under sec 241 I P C, and counterfeit coin is found in his possession the Magistrate can order the destruction of the coin—2 Weir 669.

Order of restoration of property—If no offence is proved to have been committed in respect of any property produced before the Court, and the accused is acquitted, the Magistrate should restore the property to the person from whom it was last taken—14 C P L R 60 1897 A W N 26, 2 Weir 669, 18 C W N 959 27 Bom 844, 1 C W N 561, 2 Weir 668, 1 Bom 630, 10 Bom 197, 7 Bom 748 9 Mad 448, 14 Cal 834, 5 W R 55. In such a case, an order of confiscation is not proper—16 Cr L J 811 (Mad). See also 17 Bom L R 79, 42 Mad 9. The property should be restored especially when there is no finding in the case that it belongs to some one else—3 M L T 334.

But if a case of theft fails because the dishonest intention of the accused is not proved, the property can be restored to the complainant, and need not be given back to the accused—16 M L J (Sh N) 4. So also where the Magistrate, though he discharges the accused, believes that the property in his custody is the subject of some offence, he is not bound to restore the property to the person from whom it was taken, but can make an order of disposal under this section—9 Mad 448.

A Magistrate cannot, on dismissal of a complaint, restore the property to the accused, if he disclaims the property. In such a case the Court should retain the property until one or other of the parties has established his right in the Civil Court—1913 P W R 37.

If a complaint of theft of a certain property is dismissed on the ground of there being a bona fide dispute about the ownership of the property, the Magistrate should take custody of the property, sell it (if it is perishable) and retain the sale proceeds until they are shown to be payable to one or other of the parties, either by virtue of a decree of Court, or of an agreement between themselves—16 Bom L R 951, 16 Cr L J 104 (Mad). In 2 Weir 667, it has been held that in such a case, the Magistrate may deliver the property to the person from whose possession it was last taken, with a condition that the property, or its value, must be forthcoming in case the rival claimant establishes a title. But if it is found that the property belongs partly to the accused and partly to another person, it is not illegal to deliver the property to both of them on their joint receipt—34 Mad 91.

1346 Order, when rights of third parties are concerned.—A property with regard to which an offence has been committed should not be delivered to the owner of the property when it has been pledged to another person (see 19 Cr L J 785) without allowing the pledgee an opportunity of being heard. But when the evidence disclosed that the property was obtained by fraud from the owner and subsequently pledged the property should be delivered to the owner and the remedy of the pledgee was to bring a suit in the Civil Court to enforce his lien on the property—4 L B R 13 But where certain jewels were given to the accused to sell but the accused instead of selling them gave them to another person who pledged them to a third person it was held that the jewels should be restored to the pledgee and not to the owner because the owner, having parted with the jewels to be disposed of for money was not entitled to the assistance of a Criminal Court in recovering them from a pawnee to whom they were so disposed of—3 Bur L T 111 4 L B R 25, 23 Cr L J 216 But if in such a case the pledgee was not a bona fide pledgee and knew that the pledgor had no authority to pledge the articles, held that the articles should be delivered to the owner and not to the pledgee—K E v Nga Po Chit 1 Rang 199 Where a pledged property was stolen from the possession of the pledgee by the pledgor who was thereupon convicted of theft the Court should pass an order restoring the property to the pledgee and not to the person to whom the pledgor had sold it for value after the theft—Gour Mohan v Bansidhar 24 Cr L J 238 (Cal) A goldsmith was entrusted with a certain quantity of gold and diamonds for making a comb for the complainant When the article was nearly completed the goldsmith pledged it to a diamond merchant who had no knowledge that the property was the property of the complainant The Court ordered the jewel to be returned to the complainant Held that the order was justifiable—Chaganlal v Maung Po Kauk 2 Bur L J 152 Where certain jewels were given to a broker for sale and the broker sold the jewels and misappropriated the sale proceeds and was convicted of criminal breach of trust the jewels ought to be restored to the purchaser and not to the owner because the offence was committed not with respect to the jewels but with respect to the sale proceeds and therefore the Magistrate was not competent to make any order with respect to the jewels which validly belonged to the purchaser—4 Bur L T 170

1347 Question of title —An order under this section does not decide the question of ownership of the property It merely decides the question of the right to possession till a Civil Court decides the question of ownership—11 Bur L T 267 Where a question of bona fides and of title by purchase or otherwise clearly arises, the duty of the Criminal Court is not to pass any order under this section, but to leave the complainant to his remedy in the Civil Court if he thinks he has one—Naimi Mall v Emp 24 Cr L J 804 (All) If conflicting claims are put forward to the property by different parties, the Magistrate cannot give a decision as to the ownership of the property the proper procedure would be to keep the property in Court pending any order which may be made by a competent Civil Court—Ram Khelawan v Tulsi 28 C W N 1094 Where the property in dispute was a certain quantity of wood the proper order would be to sell the property and retain the sale proceeds in Court until they were shown to be payable to one or other of the parties either in virtue of a decree or in virtue of an agreement among themselves—16 Bom L R 951

1348 Improper orders:—(1) Disposal in charity—The section does not place the property at the disposal of the Magistrate in the sense of enabling him to bestow it in charity. He is to make such legal disposition thereof as seems right i.e. to direct its restoration to some one to whom it seems to belong or permit it to continue in the possession in which it is found or otherwise—2 Weir 666

(2) Order regarding custody of children—Orders regarding custody of children cannot be passed under this section—1 Weir 348

(3) Order for removal of building—Where the accused built a new wall abutting on the road in contravention of the rules of the Municipality, and the Magistrate after convicting and fining the accused ordered the wall to be pulled down, it was held that the order as to the removal of the wall was illegal—1900 A W N 81

(4) Order demanding security—The Magistrate cannot take a bond from the accused to produce the property (with respect to which an offence is alleged to have been committed) in Court whenever required. There is no provision of the law which enables a Magistrate to make an order demanding security. He can proceed under sec 94 in order to secure the production of the property, and on failure of the accused to produce it, he can proceed under sec 96—7 C W N 522. Sub section (4) does not apply to the case, because under that sub section a Magistrate can take a bond from a person at the time of delivering the property to him.

(5) Detention of property—If no offence is proved in respect of the property produced in Court the proper order that the Court may pass is to restore the property to the person from whom it was originally taken. It cannot detain the property until the title of the rightful owner is declared by a Civil Court—22 Bom 844

Sub section (4)—If no offence is proved to have been committed, the Magistrate may restore the property to the accused, and at the same time demand security from him for its production whenever required—2 Weir 668

1349 Explanation.—The words 'conversion and 'exchange' used in the Explanation to the section must be taken in their ordinary sense. They apply to such acts as melting down of gold and silver into ornaments or the exchange of notes for cash. When therefore a person fraudulently obtained a decree upon a forged promissory note and in execution of that decree purchased a garden and was subsequently convicted of cheating it was held that the convicting Court could not direct restoration of the garden to its owner, because it could not be said that the garden was acquired by the conversion of the forged promissory note into a decree—4 Bur L R 211. A gold ornament was stolen from the complainant and sold by the thief for Rs 184 to the applicant who converted it into gold and sold it in pieces to different persons. In the course of the trial of the theft case, the applicant was made to produce Rs 184 and at the end of the trial the Magistrate ordered the sum to be paid over to the complainant. It was held that the money could not be paid over to the complainant, since it merely represented the sum which the applicant paid.

the accused as the price of the gold bangles, and it could not be treated under the Explanation to this section as the exchanged property with reference to which an offence had been committed—20 Bom. L. R. 604

In view of this Explanation, the objection that the coins directed to be returned are not the identical coins stolen cannot be sustained—4 S. L. R. 255

Appeal:—See section 520

1350 Revision:—The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere with an order of the Magistrate passed under this section—2 Weir 669; 40 Bom. 186. An order made under this section may be revised by the High Court either under sec. 520 or by virtue of the powers conferred on it by sec. 439 read with secs. 435 and 423 (d) of the Code—18 C. W. N. 959. But where the case is one in which an appeal lies, any party aggrieved by an order as to the disposal of property must go to the Court of appeal. In such a case, a Court of revision has no jurisdiction to interfere with an order as to the disposal of property. It is only when there is neither an appeal nor a confirmation that a Court of revision or reference can interfere—35 Bom. 253. The High Court will not exercise its revisional powers against an order under this section except as a Court of last resort—14 C. P. L. R. 107, 11 C. P. L. R. 47.

1351 Power of Appellate Court to make orders under this section:—Under clause (d) of sec. 423 the Appellate Court is competent to make any incidental or consequential order that may be just or proper. An order directing the disposal of property is a 'consequential or incidental order' within the meaning of sec. 423 (d). Therefore where such order was not passed by the Court of first instance, the Appellate Court is entitled to do so—3 A. L. J. 770, 35 All. 374. See notes under sec. 423 (d). Contra—2 Weir 674, where it is held that an Appellate Court cannot pass an order under this section when the Subordinate Court has not done so.

Since the High Court in Revision possesses all the powers of an Appellate Court, the High Court can in revision pass an order under this section. See notes under sec. 439.

518 In lieu of itself passing an order under Section 517, the Court may direct the property to be delivered to the District Magistrate or to a Sub-divisional Magistrate, who shall in such cases deal with it as if it had been seized by the police and the seizure had been reported to him in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

Scope of section:—An order under this section can be made only in respect of property regarding which an offence appears to have been committed or which has been used for the commission of an offence,—Ratanlal 496

519 Where any person is convicted of any offence which includes or amounts to theft or receiving stolen property and it is proved that any other person has bought the stolen property from him without know-

Payment to innocent purchaser of money found on accused

ing or having reason to believe that the same was stolen, and that any money on his arrest has been taken out of the possession of the convicted person, the Court may, on the application of such purchaser and on the restitution of the stolen property to the person entitled to the possession thereof, order that out of such money a sum not exceeding the price paid by such purchaser be delivered to him

'Any money has been taken out of the possession etc'—The Magistrate can give compensation to an innocent purchaser only out of any money found on the person of the accused, when no money was found in the possession of the person convicted, the Magistrate cannot grant compensation to the innocent purchaser out of the fine imposed on the accused—2 Weir 671, 3 Bom L R 449, 3 Bom L R 764 See also Ratanlal 631

The Magistrate cannot call upon the owner to pay the purchase money of the stolen property to the bona fide purchaser, and an order delivering the property to the purchaser from the thief because the original owner would not pay him the purchase money, is illegal—1896 A W N 91

520 Any Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision may direct any order under Section 517, Section 518 or Section 519 passed by a Court subordinate thereto,

Stay of order under section 517, 518 or 519 to be stayed pending consideration by the former Court, and may modify, alter or annul such order and make any further orders that may be just 1352 "Any Court of appeal or revision":—The words "any Court of appeal" are not necessarily limited to a Court before which an appeal in the main case is pending. The orders under Secs 517—519 are appealable quite independent of the fact whether an appeal has been preferred or not from the main order of conviction or acquittal—3 Cal 379, 9 Mad 448. Therefore where a second class Magistrate restored certain property to the complainant when no offence was found to have been committed, the District Magistrate was competent to annul the order and restore the property to the person from whose possession it was taken, although there was no appeal pending before the District Magistrate—2 Weir 673. So also, even where no appeal has been preferred from a conviction by a subordinate Court, the District Magistrate has got jurisdiction to interfere as a Court of revision under sec 520 with an

passed by the trial Court under sec 517—Emp v Nga Po Chit, 1 Rang 199

But the Sessions Judge is not a Court of appeal or revision in respect of an order passed by a second class Magistrate. So also, a Sessions Judge is not a Court of appeal in respect of an order passed by a sub-divisional Magistrate on appeal from the decision of a second class Magistrate because there can be no second appeal to the Sessions Judge. Moreover, the Sessions Judge has no revisional powers over the order of a sub-divisional Magistrate passed on appeal—Sonu Pillai v Krishna Pillai 47 M L J 481 25 Cr L J 1247 20 L W 521

Moreover, the words 'Court of Appeal' imply the Court to which an appeal lies in the particular case and not the Court to which appeals would ordinarily lie from the Court deciding the particular case. And therefore where a 1st class Magistrate in acquitting the accused person charged with theft of cattle, ordered the cattle to be restored to him, but the complainant appealed to the Sessions Judge as regards the order relating to the disposal of property, whereupon the Sessions Judge revised the order and held that the complainant was entitled to the cattle, held that the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to act under sec 520 since he was not a Court of appeal in this particular case, because no appeal could lie to him against a judgment of acquittal the appeal ought to have been preferred to the High Court—In re Khema 42 Bom 664. The trying Magistrate acquitted the accused who was charged with theft of a drum, and under sec 517 directed the drum to be returned to the accused. On appeal the District Magistrate set aside the order under sec 517 and directed the drum to be delivered to the complainant. Held that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to do so, because he was not a Court of appeal within the meaning of sec 520, since no appeal could lie to him against an order of acquittal. The District Magistrate was also not a Court of confirmation, reference or revision, the only Court which could pass orders on a reference or revision being the High Court—Emp v Devi Ram 46 All 623 (624) 22 A L J 505 25 Cr L J 1168. An appeal from an order of a second class Magistrate ordinarily lies to the District Magistrate but if the District Magistrate has directed an appeal or a certain class of appeals to be heard by a Sub-divisional Magistrate, the Court of the Sub-divisional Magistrate, and not that of the District Magistrate is the Court of Appeal under this section. Therefore where an appeal in the main case lies to the Sub-divisional Magistrate, that Magistrate has jurisdiction to pass an order as to the disposal of property under this section—In re Arunachala Thevan 46 Mad 162

But when no appeal is preferred against the main order in the case (i.e. against the acquittal or conviction), but the appeal is confined entirely to the question of disposal of property, the appeal would lie to the Court to which an appeal ordinarily lies i.e. to the District Magistrate (from an order of a second class Magistrate) and not to the Sub-divisional Magistrate—46 Mad 162 (165), Jogi Venkiah v Station House Officer, 42 M L J 534. But see 42 Bom 664 (cited above) where the appeal was not against the main order of acquittal, but against the order as to disposal of property, but still the High Court held that the Court of appeal was not the Sessions Judge to whom the appeal would ordinarily lie, but the High Court to which the appeal would lie against the main order in the particular case (i.e. against acquittal)

But when an appeal has been preferred to a particular Court from the main order of conviction or acquittal, no appeal or revision against an order as to the disposal of property can be preferred to any other Court. The jurisdiction of the other Courts as to the revision of the order is suspended owing to the seizure of the whole case by the Court of Appeal—17 C. P. L. R. 107. But where the Appellate Court in dealing with an appeal has left untouched the order passed by the original Court under Secs. 517—519, there exists no bar to an application for revision of that order being made in any other Court having jurisdiction to revise that order—17 C. P. L. R. 107.

Where a Magistrate disposing of a criminal appeal fails to pass an order under section 520, it will be open to his successor to do so—In re Subba Naidu, 43 M. L. J. 87. See sec. 559.

Notice—An order under this section should not be passed without giving notice to the opposite party—35 Bom. 253, 4 Lah. 49 (51). Although there is no rule of law which requires that such a notice is absolutely necessary, still if there is some interval between the date of the main order in the appeal and the order as to disposal of property, it is desirable that notice should be given to the opposite party before passing the second order—46 Mad. 162.

1353 "And make any further orders that may be just";—These words did not occur in the old Codes and were for the first time introduced into the Code of 1898. Under the old Codes it was doubted whether the Appellate or Revisional Court could direct restitution of property when setting aside the order of the Lower Court. But now the addition of the words "and make any further order that may be just" in this section gives such power to the Superior Court beyond any doubt. See 46 Mad. 162 (at p. 167), 18 C. W. N. 959, and 19 Cr. L. J. 995 (Pat.). Owing to this change in the section, the following rulings are no longer good law—9 W. R. 57, 14 Cal. 834, 1 Bom. 630, 8 Bom. 575, 22 Bom. 434.

It is not necessary that an order as regards the property should be passed under this section by the Appellate Court simultaneously with the disposal of the appeal. Thus, where a conviction for theft of bulls was set aside by the Appellate Magistrate but at that time he forgot to pass any order as to the bulls, and some time after the disposal of the appeal he passed an order for restoration of the bulls to the accused, held that the second order was not illegal as it could be treated as part of the proceedings of the main appeal (the interval being a short one)—46 Mad. 162.

When an application is made to the Superior Court "to make any further order as may be just," such application should not always be deemed as an appeal and need not be presented within the period of limitation prescribed for filing an appeal from the order of a Magistrate. Thus, a person was convicted by the Magistrate in June 1920 for dishonestly receiving currency notes to the value of Rs 400, and was ordered by the Magistrate to make over the money to the complainant. On appeal, the Sessions Judge in July 1921 reversed the conviction and acquitted the accused but passed no order as regards the amount of Rs 400. Subsequently, in January 1922, the accused made an application to the Sessions Judge for the restoration of this money. The Sessions Judge rejected the application as barred by limitation. Held, that the application for the return of Rs 400 was in no sense an application by way of an appeal against the order of the trying Magistrate, but an independent application to the Sessions Judge with a view to his taking action under Sec 520 and 'passing any order that may be just. No period of limitation is prescribed for such an application, and it can be made within a reasonable time from the date on which an accused person is acquitted of the crime with which he is charged—Kanshi Ram v Crown, 4 Lah 49 (51)

1354 Revision.—When an order of the Lower Court has been set aside by the Sessions Court under this Section, the order of the Sessions Court is not appealable, the remedy is by way of revision to the High Court—1898 A W N 40. The words 'any proceeding' in sec 435 are wide enough to empower the High Court to revise an order passed under this section—2 Weir 669

521 (1) On a conviction under the Indian Penal Code Section 292, Section 293, Section 501 or Destruction of libel lous and other matter
 Section 502, the Court may order the destruction of all the copies of the thing in respect of which the conviction was had and which are in the custody of the Court or remain in the possession or power of the person convicted

(2) The Court may, in like manner on a conviction under the Indian Penal Code, Section 272, Section 273, Section 274 or Section 275 order the food, drink, drug or medical preparation in respect of which the conviction was had, to be destroyed

522 (1) Whenever a person is convicted of an offence session of immovable property.

 force or by criminal intimidation and it appears to the Court that by such force or show of force or criminal intimidation any person has been dispossessed of any immovable property, the Court may, if it thinks fit, when convicting such person or at any time within one month from the date of the conviction order the person dispossessed to be restored to the possession of the same

(2) No such order shall prejudice any right or interest to or in such immoveable property which any person may be able to establish in a civil suit

(3) In order under this section may be made by any Court of appeal, confirmation,, reference or revision

Change:—The italicised words and sub section (3) have been added by section 143 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923 " This amendment provides for the order of restoration being passed within one month from the date of conviction secondly, it extends the scope of the section to ouster from possession by show of criminal force or criminal intimidation and thirdly, it gives power to an Appellate Court or to the High Court in revision to pass such an order —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

1355 Scope of section.—Sec 522 which enables a Magistrate to deprive a wrong-doer of possession, is limited only to cases in which possession has been obtained by criminal force attending an offence and the wrong-doer has been convicted of such offence—2 Weir 98

An order under this section should not be made where the accused person has not been convicted of an offence attended by criminal force—12 C W N 269, 37 All 654 Thus, no order can be passed under this section, where the trespass which the accused was alleged to have committed was not a criminal trespass but merely a civil one—12 C W N 269 If the conviction is set aside in appeal or revision, the order under Sec 522 resulting from the conviction must also be set aside—24 Cr L J 493

1356 Criminal force.—To justify an order under this section, the Court must find that the offence of which the accused is convicted was attended with criminal force as defined in Sec 350 of the I P Code, and therefore where a person was convicted of criminal trespass, in which no criminal force was used, the Magistrate could not make an order under this section—Churaman v Ramlal 25 All 341 Chunni v Baldeo, 21 A L J 593, Ishan v Dena Nath 27 Cal 174, 3 L B R 20, Balram v Chamru, 2 P L T 120, 1919 P R 16, 1906 P R 12, 23 W R 54, 24 O C 352, (1922) M W N 356 If the accused armed with sticks and lathis rushed at the complainant and used threats, whereupon the complainant was obliged to run away from his field, held that there was criminal force as defined in secs 349 and 350 I P C although actual physical force was not used, and an order under this section was justified—Emp v Ishiq Hussain 45 All 25 (26)

But the words attended by criminal force do not mean an offence of which criminal force is an ingredient, to hold such view is to put a narrow construction on the general words—26 Mad 49, 31 Cal 691. Contra—25 Cal 434, 23 W R 54, 12 L W 227 and 4 P L W. 329 where the words were interpreted to mean an offence in which criminal force formed an ingredient

The word 'force' means force to a person as defined in section 349 I P C and not force to property Thus where the accused dispossess the complainant of his garden by breaking open the padlock of the gate but used no force or violence to any person, it was held that the case not fall under this section—18 C W N 1146 Where the accused committed rioting and used violence to the complainant's fencing but not to any person, it was held that this section did not apply—18 C W N 1150 This section does not apply to a case of criminal trespass and dispossession of the complainant unless it is found that the trespass was attended with use of criminal force on the person of the complainant—2 P L T 120 Where trespass was committed in the absence of the complainant, an order for restoration cannot be passed—Mangi Ram v Emp, 26 P L R 500

1357 Show of force.—An order may now be passed under this section even if the offence is attended with mere show of force On this point there was a conflict of opinion prior to the present amendment In some cases it was held that there must be actual criminal force and not mere show of criminal force Thus, it was held that the offence of being members of an unlawful assembly was one in the composition of which the use of criminal force did not enter, though the show of criminal force might exist, and therefore an order under this section could not be passed on conviction for being members of an unlawful assembly—25 Cal 434, 5 C W N 250, 27 Cal 174, 23 Bom 494, 4 P L W 329, Mahesh v Emp, 20 Cr I J 270 (Pat) But these cases were dissented from in 11 C W N 467 1918 U B R 3rd Qr 111 and 20 Cr L J 115 (Bur), where it was held that an order as to possession of property could be passed by a Magistrate even where a person was dispossessed by mere show of criminal force The Legislature has now given effect to the ruling in the latter set of cases by inserting the words show of force or criminal intimidation in this section, and the former set of cases must be deemed as overruled And thus it has been held under the amended Code that where the accused succeeded in taking possession of the complainant's house by means of criminal trespass threatening to use force to the complainant and his men, the accused is not clearly crime within this section and an order for restoration of the house to the complainant was just and proper—Rameshar v A J 4 Pat 438 27 Cr L J 137 A I R 1925 Pat 683

1358 Dispossession.—To justify an order under this section it must be shown that a party has been dispossessed by criminal force Where there is no evidence of such dispossession, an order under this section cannot be sustained—2 Weir 674, 1917 P W R 38 There should be an express finding that the person in whose favour the order was made had been dispossessed by the use of criminal force—23 W R 54 Where the accused was convicted of rioting and an order was passed under this section to the effect that one of the witnesses be put in possession of certain land until ousted by a Court of competent jurisdiction, held that as there was no evidence that the witness had been dispossessed by criminal force, the order of the Magistrate was bad—2 Weir 674 If the Magistrate purported to act under sec 145, he should have instituted separate proceedings

Where it is found that neither party is in actual possession, an order under this section cannot be made—2 Weir 675

Order affecting possession of third person—The object of the provisions of this section is to enable the criminal Court, by a summary order, to restore the state of things which existed at the time of the dispossession

by the convicted person or persons. It cannot go behind the state of affairs existing at the time of forcible dispossession leading to the criminal prosecution. Where an auction purchaser of a mortgaged property was put in possession of the property by ejecting the tenant, and the auction purchaser was forcibly dispossessed by the accused, it was held that upon the conviction of the accused the auction purchaser was entitled to be restored to actual possession which he held of the house at the time of his dispossession, that the tenant had no right to any possession and that he should seek his remedy in the Civil Court.—C W N 374

An order under this section can only be binding between the parties to the order and can have no finality in favour of one who was not a party to the order and does not claim under a party—Adinarayana v. Suramma 48 M L J 372

1359 Order when can be made:—An order under this section, although it can be made only on the conviction of an offence is an independent order and need not be made simultaneously with the conviction—23 Bom 494. It is not essential in law that an order restoring possession should find a place in the actual judgment. But it must be immediate, that is, directly arising out of the judgment of the Court convicting in the case, and without any fresh materials having in the meantime been produced—14 Cr L J 172 (Cal), see also 16 A L J 489. It is proper if it is made within a reasonable time from the date of conviction—U B R, (1918) 3rd Qr 111. 20 Cr L J 115 (Bur). It is not necessary for the Magistrate to pass an order under this section simultaneously with the conviction and there is no illegality if he passes the order at any time after the conviction if the cause of delay in applying for the order is fully explained to his satisfaction and the complainant moves the Court promptly after the cause of delay has ceased—Ghulam Muhammad v. Karan Singh, 1914 P R 15. In this case there was 20 months delay owing to the filing of a civil suit by the accused, and the Court excused the delay, since the complainant applied for restoration immediately after the civil suit had terminated in his favour. It should be noted that the present section as now amended gives only one month's time.

In 4 C W N 308 however, it has been held that an order under this section must be made simultaneously with the order of conviction of the accused, and cannot be made subsequently. But this ruling is no longer good law in view of the words "or at any time within one month" newly added in this section. We do not think that an order of restoration need be made simultaneously with the conviction, but we think that any application for such an order should be made promptly, and that one month is sufficient time to allow for this purpose.—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

1360 Notice to party.—Since an order under this section is to be immediate, that, is directly arising out of the judgment of the Court convicting the accused, and without any fresh materials having in the meantime been produced, it is not necessary that any notice should go to the accused before the order is passed—14 Cr L J 172 (Cal). But the Magistrate should give the party an opportunity to show cause as a of due exercise of judicial discretion—3 L B R 20 Where an order under this section was made in respect of a house on a conviction of rioting and hurt, and the Sessions Judge on appeal set aside the conviction but directed the order under sec 522 to be in abeyance pending a reference to the High Court, and subsequently in the absence of the complainant declared the order to be void, it was held that the Sessions Judge's order should not have been made behind the back of the party affected by it—23 C W N 862

Subsection (2) —Limitation for civil suit—See Art 47 of the Indian Limitation Act, which provides a period of three years from the date of the order

An order under this section may be passed by the Court of appeal or revision at any time howsoever long after the conviction by the Magistrate, and not necessarily within one month from the date of conviction—Rameshwar v A B 4 Pat 438 A I R 1925 Pat 689

1362 Appeal or Revision.—Since an Appellate Court can pass an incidental or consequential order under section 423 (d) an order under this section (which is in the nature of an incidental or consequential order) is also subject to appeal and is similarly subject to the revisional powers of the High Court under sec 439—29 Cal 724 The ruling in 25 Cal 630 is not correct in view of section 423 (d) An Appellate Court may set aside an order under this section, while affirming the conviction—19 C W N 990 The High Court has full power to interfere with an order passed by a Magistrate under this section, although this section is not mentioned in sec 520—36 Cal 44

523 (1) The seizure by any police officer of property taken under Section 51 or alleged or Procedure by Police suspected to have been stolen, or upon seizure of property taken under Section 51 or stolen found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence, shall be forthwith reported to a Magistrate, who shall make such order as he thinks fit respecting the disposal of such property or the delivery of such property to the person entitled to the possession thereof, or, if such person cannot be ascertained, respecting the custody and production of such property.

(2) If the person so entitled is known, the Magistrate may order the property to be delivered to him on such conditions (if any) as the Magistrate thinks fit. If such person is unknown, the Magistrate may detain it and shall, in such case, issue a proclamation specifying the articles of which such property consists, and requiring any person who may have a claim thereto, to appear before him and establish the claim within six months from the date of such proclamation.

Section 517 and 523—Section 517 applies only when an inquiry or trial in a Criminal Court is concluded. But Sec 523 applies even though there has been no inquiry or trial as in a case where a complaint has been dismissed under sec 203—24 M L J 1.

1363 Scope of section:—This section does not apply where the property was not taken possession of by the Police under sec 51 or 54 i.e. where it was not seized by the police under the suspicion of its being stolen property nor had the petitioner committed any offence in respect to the property. This section does not apply where the police obtained possession of the property in question in the course of an investigation into an offence which is in no way related to the property—Chun Lal v Ishar Das 4 Lth 38 (42-43). This section applies only to property seized by the Police of their own motion in the exercise of the powers conferred on them i.e. under secs 51, 54, 165 and 166. Such property should be disposed of by the Magistrate under this section. But property seized by the Police under a search warrant issued by the Magistrate during the course of an inquiry or trial comes under sec 517 and not under this section—17 Bom 748. So also this section does not apply where the property is seized by the Police on the complaint of certain persons claiming as owners thereof—29 Mad 375 (377). Contra—26 Bom 552, where it has been held that the words 'seized by the Police' apply equally whether the seizure was under a warrant of the Magistrate or without such warrant, and the Magistrate has power under this section to dispose of the property seized under a search warrant.

Property—Standing crops do not come under the provisions of this section—23 Bom 494.

1364 Order under this section:—Under this section the Magistrate may make such order as he thinks fit. The discretion given by these words should be properly exercised. If there is no evidence as to the ownership of the property, it should be delivered to the person from whose possession it was taken—5 Bom L R 25, 17 Bom L R 79, 4 L B R 14, 8 S L R 141. A Magistrate is also competent to order the property seized by the Police to be made over to the complainant if the Magistrate finds on the materials before him that the complainant is entitled to property—12 Bom L R 232. But if the property is alleged or to have been stolen or found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence, the Magistrate can pass order that the property should be at the disposal of the Government even though the complainant may be entitled thereto—24 M I J 1 So also, if neither party succeeds in establishing his title to possession, the property would be at the disposal of the Government—Ibid

Conditional order regarding property—The Magistrate cannot demand security (either under this section or under sec 517), from the person in whose possession the articles are, for their production if required—7 C W N 522 (see the case cited under sec 517) But if before the inquiry or trial, it becomes necessary to pass an immediate order to save the property from possible loss or decay, the Magistrate can order the property to be delivered to one of the parties on certain terms—5 C W N 415

1365 Inquiry—It has been pointed out in a Bombay case that the provisions of this section are wider than those of the corresponding section of the Code of 1872, and the Magistrate, instead of delivering the property to the person from whom it was taken, may now hold an inquiry and then deliver it to the person legally entitled—8 Bom 338 In another case it has been held that the Magistrate is bound to make a proper inquiry before making an order concerning the right of possession of property under this section—In re Ratanlal 17 Bom 748 See also 26 Bom 552 But the Madras High Court rightly holds that from a study of the section it appears that there is no obligation on the Magistrate to hold an inquiry for the purpose of determining as to which of the contending parties is entitled to the property 'It does not appear that it is authorised to usurp the functions of a Civil Court and convert the trial of an accused person into an inquiry in regard to property—29 Mad 375 (378) In another Bombay case also it is laid down that the Magistrate need not hold an inquiry but may proceed on such evidence as is available and pass an order under this section He can base his order on a mere statement made by the accused to the Police that the property was stolen by him from the adjudged owner—Q E v Tribhovan 9 Bom 131 The Magistrate is not bound to make a judicial inquiry by examination of witnesses on oath before making an order under this section All that the law requires is that he should have materials before him to satisfy himself as to who is entitled to possession—12 Bur L T 265, 4 Lah 78 (42) An order under this section can be passed on police reports and papers alone without any independent inquiry on oath with regard to the question of ownership—Chuni Lal v Ishar Das, 4 Lah 38 (42) If there is no question that the property was taken out of the complainant's possession, the Magistrate can return the property to the complainant without making any inquiry—Ratanlal 365

When the Magistrate has issued a proclamation under sub-section (2), he is not bound to make any inquiry till after the expiry of the six months from the date of the proclamation—22 Cal 761

Question of title—The Magistrate deciding a case under this section should not decide any question of title but must be confined only to the question of possession—Musansha v Mashaksha, 12 Bom 1 R 232 The order under this section does not conclude the right of any person The real owner may proceed in the Civil Court against the holder of the articles for damages—9 Bom 131 5 P I J 321

1366 Proclamation—When the person legally entitled to the property is known, the Magistrate need not make a proclamation nor wait for six months before delivering the property to him. He may deliver the property to the person entitled whether he has issued a proclamation or not. If he has issued a proclamation that fact will not invalidate an order for immediate delivery of the property to such a known person—3 I B R 197

1367 Revision—On a proper case being made out the High Court in revision has jurisdiction to examine an order passed under this section—Chuni Lal v Ishar Das 4 I R 38 (42). The High Court has power in revision not only to set aside a Magistrate's order for the disposal of property passed under this section but also to order restitution of the property to the person entitled thereto—11 Bur L T 165

Review—Orders under this section cannot be reviewed. When once a Magistrate has passed an order restoring possession of the property he cannot reconsider it and pass another order subsequently—4 Bom L R 12

524 If no person within such period establishes his claim to such property, and if the

Procedure where no claimant appears within six months person in whose possession such property was found is unable to show that it was legally acquired by him such property shall be at the disposal of Government and may be sold under the orders of the Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or Subdivisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class empowered by the Local Government in this behalf

(2) In the case of every order passed under this section an appeal shall lie to the Court to which appeals against sentences of the Court passing such order would lie

1367A Unable to show that him —When the proclamation has been issued under Sec 523 and the six months have expired, then the provisions of Sec 524 come in, and the person in whose possession the property was found can come up and prove his title to the property—22 Cal 761. If he is unable to show that the property is his own, it may be forfeited to Government. But the words "unable to show that it was legally acquired by him" do not reverse the presumption laid down in Sec 110 of the Evidence Act, i.e. it should be presumed that the accused is the owner of the property in the absence of any proof to the contrary. Where the police seized certain property from the accused and no claimant came forward to claim the same though a proclamation was issued, and several items of the property bore the name of the accused, but the Magistrate said that the evidence produced by the accused was suspicious, though no evidence was elicited to show clearly that the accused's claim was false.

it was held that under the circumstances the proper and safest course is to follow the presumption laid down in Sec 110 of the Evidence Act—8 S L R 141 Where no offence is found to have been committed the property should be returned to the accused and not be confiscated to the Government—17 Bom L R 79

1368 Appeal—The appeal allowed by subsection (2) is an appeal in the full sense of Chapter XXXI and the provisions of that chapter must be fully complied with Where an appeal to the Court of Session from an order of the District Magistrate was treated as a sort of miscellaneous application and decided ex parte without a notice to the other party, and none of the procedure of Chapter XXXI was followed, the order of the Sessions Judge was set aside—1881 A W N 150

Civil suit—As this section allows an appeal from an order under the section it is doubtful whether the law contemplates a remedy by suit—19 Bom 668

525 If the person entitled to the possession of such property is unknown or absent and the property is subject to speedy and natural decay, or if the Magistrate to whom its seizure is reported is of opinion that its sale would be for the benefit of the owner or that the value of such property is less than ten rupees the Magistrate may at any time direct it to be sold and the provisions of Sections 523 and 524 shall, as nearly as may be practicable, apply to the nett proceeds of such sale

The italicised words have been added by section 144 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

CHAPTER XLIV

OF THE TRANSFER OF CRIMINAL CASES

High Court may transfer case or itself try it 526 (1) Whenever it is made to appear to the High Court—

- (a) that a fair and impartial inquiry or trial cannot be had in any Criminal Court subordinate thereto, or
- (b) that some question of law of unusual difficulty is likely to arise, or
- (c) that a view of the place in or near which any offence has been committed, may be required for the satisfactory inquiry into or trial of the same, or

- (d) that an order under this section will tend to the general convenience of the parties or witnesses, or
- (e) that such an order is expedient for the ends of justice, or is required by any provision of this Code, it may order—

- (i) that any offence be inquired into or tried by any Court not empowered under sections 177 to 184 (both inclusive) but in other respects competent to inquire into or try such offence
- (ii) that any particular * * * case or appeal or class of * * * cases or appeals be transferred from a Criminal Court subordinate to its authority to any other such Criminal Court of equal or superior jurisdiction
- (iii) that any particular * * * case or appeal be transferred to and tried before itself or
- (iv) that an accused person be committed for trial to itself or to a Court of Session

(2) When the High Court withdraws for trial before itself any case from any Court other than the Court of a Presidency Magistrate it shall except as provided in Section 267 observe in such trial the same procedure which that Court would have observed if the case had not been so withdrawn

(3) The High Court may act either on the report of the lower Court or on the application of a party interested or on its own initiative

(4) Every application for the exercise of the power conferred by this section shall be made by motion which shall, except when the applicant is the Advocate General be supported by affidavit or affirmation

(5) When an accused person makes an application under this section, the High Court may direct him to execute a bond, with or without sureties, conditioned that he will, if so ordered, pay any amount which the High Court has power under this section to award by way of costs to the person opposing the application

(6) Every accused person making any such application shall give to the Public Prosecutor

Notice to Public Prosecutor of application under this section notice in writing of the application, together with a copy of the grounds on which it is made, and no order shall be made on the merits of the application unless at least twenty four hours have elapsed between the giving of such notice and the hearing of the application

(6A) Where any application for the exercise of the power conferred by this section is dismissed, the High Court may, if it is of opinion that the application was frivolous or vexatious, order the applicant to pay by way of costs to any person who has opposed the application any expenses reasonably incurred by such person in consequence of the application

(7) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect any order made under Section 197

(8) If, in any criminal case or appeal, be

Adjournment on application under this section before the commencement of the hearing, the Public Prosecutor, the complainant or the accused notifies, to the Court before which the case or appeal is pending, his intention to make an application under this section in respect of the case, the Court shall exercise the powers of postponement or adjournment given by Section 344 in such a manner as will afford a reasonable time for the application being made and an order being obtained thereon, before the accused is called on for his defence, or, in the case of an appeal, before the hearing of the appeal

(8) If in the course of any inquiry or trial

Adjournment on application under this section or before the commencement of the hearing of any appeal, the Public Prosecutor, the complainant or the accused notifies to the Court before which the case or appeal is pending his intention to make an application under this section in respect of such case or appeal, the Court shall adjourn the case or postpone the appeal for such a period as will afford a reasonable time for the application to be made and an order to be obtained thereon.

(9) Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, a Judge presiding in a Court of Session shall not be required to adjourn a trial under sub-section (8) if he is of opinion that the person notifying his intention of making an application under this section has had a reasonable opportunity of making such an application and has failed without sufficient cause to take advantage of it

Change:—This section has been amended by sec 145 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. In clauses (ii) and (iii) the word 'criminal' has been omitted, in subsection (5) the words "any amount application" have been substituted for the words "the costs of the prosecutor", subsections (6A) and (9) have been newly added, and subsection (8) has been materially altered as shown in parallel columns. The reasons are stated below in their proper places

Secs 526 and 269—Sec 269 in no way limits the powers of transfer conferred on the High Court by this Section. The High Court has power to transfer a case from a jury district to a non jury district—10 S L R 154 (cited under sec 269)

1369 Conditions precedent—Before an application is made to the High Court for transfer, the District Magistrate must be moved first. The High Court will not ordinarily entertain an application for transfer when the applicant can under the law move the District Magistrate for the same relief but has not done so. The High Court will interfere only in the last resort—Ravi Chandra v Sundar 26 Cr L J 960 (All) 6 Bom L R 480, 24 Cr L J 466 (Lah). The case to be transferred must be a case pending before a competent Court. The High Court cannot under this section transfer a case which is not properly before a Subordinate Court of competent jurisdiction to receive and try it—10 Bom 274 9 All 191 9 Mad 356. In re Sikka 17 L W 69 6 Cal 30 7 Bom L R 104 3 Bom L R 121. If the complaint has been made to a Magistrate who is not competent to take cognisance of the case he shall return the complaint for presentation to the proper Court with an endorsement to that effect (see Sec 201). The application for transfer must be made before the disposal of the case. A case cannot be transferred after acquittal. This Section contemplates interference by the High Court by way of transfer, when a person is aggrieved or injured by any order of the Magistrate before the disposal of the case. It is not intended to give power to interfere in order to set aside an acquittal or discharge—2 Cal 290, 1 Bom L R 782

1370 Cases which can be transferred.—In clauses (i) and (ii) of the old section, the Legislature used the words criminal case and so the word criminal led to a divergence of views in several cases. Thus, as regards cases under Chapter VIII, it was held in 28 Cal 709, 41 Cal 719, 33 All 642, 12 A L J 262, 1913 P R 1 and 1 S L R 98 that such cases were criminal cases and were therefore covered by this section, but in 1914 P R 5 and 1916 P L R 78 it was held that those cases not being criminal cases could not be transferred from one Court to another.

So also, as regards cases under Chapter XII, in 2 C L J 614, 26 Mad 188 34 All 533 and 11 O C 61, it was held that proceedings under section 145, being criminal proceedings could be transferred from one Court to another, whereas the contrary view was taken in 25 Bom 179 and 8 S L R 215. The Legislature has now wisely omitted the word 'criminal' so that all cases inquired into and tried in any criminal Court can now be transferred under this section. "The word criminal has been omitted to make it clear that the powers of a High Court to transfer criminal cases extend to the transfer of miscellaneous proceedings under the Code"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). Proceedings under Sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act are neither civil nor criminal, but as they are held in criminal Courts they can be transferred from one Court to another under this section. The contrary view held in 1888 P R 41 is no longer correct.

This section applies to proceedings pending in Courts subordinate to the High Court. Panchayet Courts established under the U P Act VI of 1920 are not subordinate to the High Court, and the power under this section cannot be exercised to transfer a proceeding pending in one Panchayet Court to another—Sat Narain v Sarju, 46 All 167 (168, 169). In this case, Kanhuji Lal J is of opinion that the High Court cannot transfer a case from one village Panchayet to another under the provisions of this section but it can do so under sec. 22 of the Letters Patent—Ibid (p. 170).

Future cases cannot be transferred—The High Court can transfer actual cases only i.e. cases actually pending before a Court it cannot direct that cases that may be filed in future should, when filed, not be heard by the authority to which they are presented but should be transferred to some other Court—Ratnial 973.

Inquiry—An inquiry under the Workmen & Breach of Contract Act is an inquiry contemplated by this section and can be transferred from one Court to another—Bansi v Lakshmi 45 All 700 (701).

1371 Clause (a) —Reasonable apprehension of not having a fair trial!—The basis of all applications for transfer of criminal cases must be that the accused must have a reasonable apprehension that he will not receive a fair trial—1 P L J 399. When there are circumstances existing to create a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he will not receive a fair and unprejudiced trial, a transfer should be directed, though there is really no bias in the mind of the Court from which the transfer is sought and though the circumstances may be capable of explanation—2 Weir 678 28 Cal 297, 23 CrL 495, Kali Churn v Emp 33 Cal 1183 18 Cal 247 19 All 64, 25 Bom 179, 3 Lah 443 15 C P L R 192 1 P L T 522 2 P L T 297, Benode Behari v Emp 5 P L T 63 25 Cr L J 590, 20 Cr L J 566 (Pat), 25 Cr L J 638 (Lah). Confidence in the administration of justice is an essential element of good Government, and a reasonable apprehension of failure of justice in the mind of the accused person should therefore be taken into serious consideration on an application for transfer—Kali Churn v Emp, 33 Cal 1183 10 C W N 793; Sardari Lal v Emp, 3 Lah, 443.

When a transfer is asked for, it is not sufficient merely to allege that the applicant would not get an impartial trial, but he must place before the Court the facts which give rise to this belief in his mind—Amar Singh v Sadhu Singh 6 Lah 396 7 Lah L J 241 26 Cr L J 853

When sufficient grounds are made out for a transfer, the High Court is bound to act under this Section. It is precluded from considering the possible effect which the transfer may have on the reputation or authority of the Magistrate concerned—10 C W N 441. One of the most important duties of the High Court is to create and maintain confidence in the administration of justice, and this can be done by giving to every citizen an assurance that so far as practicable he will never be forced to undergo a trial by a Judge or Magistrate when he has reasonable apprehension that a fair and impartial trial cannot be obtained from that Judge or Magistrate—1 S L R 8. In transferring a case from one Magistrate to another, the High Court ought not to be guided by the impressions produced in its own mind as to the impartiality of the Magistrate but must look to the effect likely to be produced in the minds of the parties and their witnesses by the selection of a Magistrate whose personal antecedents or circumstances have however unavoidably connected him with either one party or the other—25 Bom 179.

It is the duty of the Magistrate not only to conduct the case impartially, but also to conduct himself in such a manner that the parties may have absolute confidence in him that only full justice will be dealt out to them. If the Magistrate though not actually biased, still conducts himself in such a manner and utters such words as to impair the confidence of any of the parties then there is good ground for the transfer of the case from his file to that of some other Magistrate—25 Cal 727, 28 Cal 709 Mid Akbar v Emp 47 All 288 23 A L J 133. Magistrates should not fail to remember that it is their duty no less to preserve an outward appearance of impartiality than to maintain the internal freedom from bias which is incumbent on all judicial officers and that if they allow their executive zeal to appear to outrun their judicial discretion their action is certain to induce the party to make an application to the High Court for transfer—1 S L R 8.

What is a reasonable apprehension should be decided according to the incidents of the case and in reference to the special circumstances. It is difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule under which a transfer should be made for the circumstances in one case might differ from those of the other—33 Cal 1183 5 P L T 63 36 Cal 904 1 P L T 494. It is not sufficient if the accused merely alleges that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had. He should also place before the Court the facts and circumstances from which he is led to entertain such belief and if these will reasonably give rise to that belief, a transfer will be made—10 O C 165, 1917 P W R 13. It is not every kind of apprehension that will entitle an accused person to get a transfer of the case, the apprehension of the accused must be shown to be reasonable—1 P L T 494 Pulin v Asutosh 39 C L J 330. The High Court will not order a transfer merely in deference to the susceptibilities of the accused when there is no reasonable ground for the apprehension—10 C W N 441 What is a reasonable apprehension must of course depend on the degree of intelligence of the accused—Ahmad Din v Emp, 25 Cr L J 638, Sardari v Emp, 3 Lah 443 In determining whether an application is reasonable, it is the duty of the High Court to place itself in the position of the accused and to consider the facts and circumstances attending his position Abstract reasonableness ought not to be the standard—33 Cal 1183, 15 Cal 455, 8 C W N 77, 29 Cal 211, Pulni v Asutosh, 39 C L J 330 In a Sind case it is laid down that the apprehension to be established must be an apprehension reasonable in the opinion of the Court, and not such apprehension as would appear reasonable in the mind of the accused The Court itself should be satisfied on that point, and the real test is not what the accused may reasonably have been led to think about it—10 S L R 183 But this would be putting a wrong construction on the section See 25 Bom 179 cited above. For, it has been rightly observed that the law of transfer of cases is based not so much upon the motives which might be supposed to bias the Judge as upon the susceptibilities of the litigant parties One important object at all events is to clear away everything which might engender suspicion and distrust of the tribunal and so to promote the feeling of confidence in the administration of justice which is so essential to social order and security—a P L T 198, following Sergeant v Dale, 2 Q B D 558 (567), Anant v Emp, 7 N L J 155, Mochal v Matru 10 N L R 15 25 Cr L J 196

1372 Instances of reasonable apprehension—When the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge expressed an opinion that an impartial jury could not be obtained if the case was tried in the district, it was held that the expression of such belief was sufficient to shake the confidence of the public and of the parties in the fairness and impartiality of the jury, and to create in their minds a reasonable apprehension that a fair and impartial trial could not be had if the case was tried there, and therefore an order for transfer was expedient for the ends of justice under this section—25 Cal 727 When in a case of petty theft, the Magistrate issued non bailable warrants against the accused in the first instance, and exacted very heavy bail from them, there was a sufficient ground for apprehension that a fair trial could not be had from him, and therefore a transfer should be directed—8 C W N 589 Where in a summons case the Magistrate had issued a warrant without any apparent reason, and there was reason to believe that in other proceedings connected with the case the Magistrate had formed an opinion unfavourable to the accused, there ought to be a transfer of the case—18 Cal 247 The issue of a warrant for the arrest of a complainant who has not appeared is not justifiable, and this action on the part of the Magistrate is a sufficient ground for transfer of the case from his file—Fazal Ahmad v Abdulla 26 P L R 701 7 Lah L J 571 Where it appeared that during the course of an inquiry preliminary to commitment some entries in the order sheet were not made by the Magistrate daily as required by the rules of the High Court, and certain orders were not recorded either on the particular day or possibly even on the following day, and in one instance the Magistrate did not record the order with reference to the order of proceedings before him, and it further appeared that the Magistrate, even after the receipt of the order of the High Court staying all further proceedings in the case, proceeded to record the evidence of a medical officer, held that the Magistrate had acted with impropriety and the case should be transferred to another Magistrate—2 C W N 639 Where a Magistrate acquitted the accused on a consideration of the complainant's statement alone, and without examining his witnesses, it showed that the Magistrate had formed a decided opinion before hearing the evidence for the prosecution, the High Court set aside the order of acquittal and directed the transfer of the case to another Magistrate—20 Mad 388 Where the Magistrate makes inordinate delay in examining the complainant, or disregards the preliminaries prescribed by this Code for dealing with complaints, or awaits the consideration of the evidence in another case with which the accused has no concern, in order to decide whether any action should be taken upon the complaint, these may give rise to a reasonable apprehension that a fair trial cannot be had, and the case should be transferred—1 P L T 494 Where the complainant made a verbal statement in chambers before the District Magistrate who at once arrested the accused before making any inquiry, and there was a likelihood of the Magistrates of the district figuring as witnesses in the case, held that the case should be transferred to a different district altogether—1 P L T 522 Where after the application of the accused for adjournment of the case to enable them to move the High Court for transfer, the Magistrate raised the amount of bail of some of the accused from Rs 100 to Rs 250, and cancelled the bail bonds of others, it was held that the action of the Magistrate might be absolutely bonâ fide but it was sufficient to create a reasonable apprehension in the minds of the accused that they would not have a fair trial before him—1 P L T 652 Where the Magistrate exhibits haste in recording the statement of an accused person before all the evidence for the prosecution is concluded, this fact may create an apprehension in the mind of the accused that he will not get a fair trial and entitles him to a transfer of the case—18 A L J 1145 Where in a proceeding under sec 107, the persons against whom the proceeding was taken were appointed special constables, it might raise a reasonable apprehension that they would not have a fair and impartial trial, and a transfer ought to be allowed—11 C W N 121, 10 C W N 82 Where it was alleged by the accused that the District Magistrate had cancelled his license for arms and refused to see him when he called to pay his respects, it was held that these incidents were likely to lead the accused to believe that the District Magistrate was displeased with him and there was a reasonable apprehension of his not having a fair trial from the Magistrate—35 All 5 Where the trying Magistrate stopped the cross-examination of the complainant in a case because in his view the complainant had been fully cross-examined for one hour, it was held that the act of the Magistrate was indiscreet and might reasonably lead the accused to believe that they would not get a fair trial at his hands, and the case should therefore be transferred to another Magistrate—20 Cr L J 559 (Pat) Where there was an order of the Superintendent of Police that the accused was to be allowed facilities for instructing legal advisers only on application to him, it was held that there might be a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that his movements were unduly restricted by that order, and the High Court therefore allowed a transfer of the case to another place—23 C W N 481, see also 23 C W N 479 Where the Magistrate refused to dispense with the personal appearance of pardanashin ladies belonging to respectable families, and repeatedly insisted on their appearance in Court, the High Court transferred the case from that Magistrate—17 C W N 1248 A complaint of murder had been preferred against the accused before the Subdivisional Magistrate During the pendency of the complaint the Deputy Commissioner of the District made a speech in the presence of all the Magistrates of the District including the Subdivisional Magistrate in question, that the rumours were baseless that the accused was innocent and that baseless charges had been imputed from malicious motives Held that under the circumstances, the apprehension on the part of the complainant that he would not get justice at the hands of the Magistrate was reasonable and that there was a sufficient ground for transferring the case from the file of the subdivisional Magistrate—Rup Narain v Abdul Hamid, 11 O L J 657 25 Cr L J 1374

The applicant who wants the transfer of the case on the ground of bias in the mind of the Magistrate must show the very clearest grounds for believing that the Magistrate is likely to be prejudiced or influenced by any improper motive in the decision of the case In the absence of such ground, it is highly improper to transfer a case from his Court and thus to throw a gratuitous slight upon the Magistrate—6 B H C R 69 Ratanlal 323 1887 A W N 139

The transfer of a criminal case should not be necessarily ordered simply because an accused person thinks that he would not get an impartial trial but the real question to be considered is whether on the facts disclosed in the application for transfer, there arises a reasonable inference that the Magistrate who is seized of the case may be prejudiced willingly or unwillingly against the accused—12 A L J 33 Moreover, to justify a transfer it must be shown that the Magistrate possessed such a substantial interest in the result of the case as would justify a conclusion that he had a real bias in the matter—Ratanlal 685

For a transfer of a case on the ground of bias on the part of the Magistrate it is rarely possible for an accused person to prove actual bias, it is sufficient to show circumstances which may raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of an accused person that he will not have a fair and impartial trial although the circumstances may be susceptible of explanation and may have happened without any real bias in the mind of the Magistrate—2 Weir 6-8 18 Cal 247, 23 Cal 495, 25 Cal 727, 28 Cal 709 28 Cal 297 33 Cal 1183, 19 All 96, 25 Dom 179, 1 P L T 522, 20 Cr L J 566 (Pat) Bisar Singh v Sadhu Singh 7 Lah L J 241 26 P L R 273 15 C P L R 192 The grounds of transfer need not show actual bias but it is sufficient if there are grounds alleged for suspecting bias But if false charges of bribery and corruption are trumped up against the Magistrate, no transfer will be ordered, even when there are sufficient grounds for suspecting bias—2 L B R 220

Although each of the circumstances alleged may not be by itself sufficient to show that there was a bias on the part of the Magistrate, a transfer would nevertheless be justified, where having regard to all the circumstances taken together, the accused might reasonably apprehend that he would not have a fair trial—9 C W N 619, 1 P L T 652, 1 P L T 522

1373 Expression of opinion on the case:—A Magistrate who has already formed a decided opinion about the case before him and has expressed a strong opinion as to the guilt of the accused, is precluded from trying the case and a transfer ought to be directed—10 Bom L R. 201, 31 All 642, 7 A L J 813, 22 A L J 430, 20 Cal 857, 18 Cal 247; 8 C W N 641, 3 C W N 278, 20 Cr L J 566 (Pat), 23 Cr L J 168, 6 Bom L R 856 Where a case was sent to a Magistrate for disposal with a remark by the District Magistrate that it was quite a clear case and the defence was ridiculous, it was a good ground for transfer of the case to another district—Md Yakub v Emp, 2 O W N 688, 26 Cr L J 152, A Magistrate in recording the evidence of a witness made a note regarding the demeanour of the witness (sec 363) to the effect that the witness faltered and that from his demeanour it appeared that he had not told the truth, held that as the witness was altogether disbelieved by the Magistrate, this was a sufficient ground for transfer of the case to some other Magistrate—Golam Lari v Yar Ali, 29 C W N 316, 26 Cr L J 852

Expression of opinion in a connected or counter case—A Judge is not disqualified from trying a case of rioting merely because he has decided a counter case of rioting and expressed an opinion. But the Judge should be careful to confine himself in the trial to the evidence before him and should not let his mind be influenced by the evidence given in the former case—1 C W N 420, sec also, Rajom Kanta v Emperor 36 Cal 904 Judges are presumed to be upright men who will approach each case from the point of view of that case alone and not permit their minds to be affected in any way by anything that has gone before that case. The mere fact that the Judge in a former proceeding arising out of a counter case to the one now coming before him expressed certain views upon the evidence in the former case as to which of the two versions is correct, is not a reasonable ground of apprehension that the accused will not have a fair trial—1 P L J 399, Emp v Hargobind, 33 All 583 Interest or bias on the part of the Magistrate is not to be inferred from opinions formed on evidence judicially recorded, otherwise a Magistrate would, after disposing of one of two counter cases, be disqualified from trying the other—1 S L R 37, 6 Bom L R 1092 But when in a case and a counter case, the Magistrate in discharging the accused in one case expressed a strong opinion on the guilt of the accused in the other case, a transfer of the case pending will be directed—Rangasami v Emp 30 Mad 233 Where in a proceeding it appeared that the Magistrate had expressed his opinion in a very strong language against the petitioner in a connected case, a transfer should be directed—1916 P L R 78, Isranath v Emp, 27 Cr L J 210 (Nag) 11 O L J 556

1374 Inspection by Magistrate—The inspection of a locality by the Magistrate acting fairly and judiciously during the inspection is not only not illegal, but under certain circumstances proper for the right understanding of the evidence. The Magistrate does not constitute himself a witness by a mere local inspection, and such inspection is no ground for transferring the case—1901 P L R 89, 1901 P R 13. But if the Magistrate goes to inspect the locality accompanied with one party (e.g., a partisan of the complainant) the action of the Magistrate is improper and is a sufficient ground for transferring the case—1901 P L R 165, 12 C W N 748. It is not only not objectionable but in many cases highly advisable that a Magistrate trying a criminal case should himself inspect the scene of occurrence in order to understand fully the bearing of the evidence given in Court. But if he does so, he should be careful not to allow any person on either side to say anything to him which might prejudice his mind one way or another. If the Magistrate goes out of his way in making a local inspection and makes the inspection with the complainant without notice to several of the accused and in their absence, the accused may very rightly apply for a transfer under this section—21 Cr L J 166, 6 O L J 680, In re Lalji, 19 All 302, Atiar Rai v Emp, 39 Cal 476. See also notes under sec 556, under heading "Local Inspection."

Magistrate being a witness in the case—The fact that the Magistrate may be a witness in the case for the defence is a ground of transfer, but in applying to the High Court for a transfer on that ground, it must be shown that the Magistrate will be a necessary and essential witness for the defence—19 Cr L J 632 (Cal). When in a criminal case the evidence of the Magistrate is found necessary by the defence, it is proper that the case should be transferred to another Magistrate—26 All 536. In 1897 A W N 17, it has been held that the mere fact that a Magistrate in whose Court a case is pending may be summoned as a witness for the defence, is not of itself a ground for the transfer of the case from the Court of such Magistrate but it may be a ground for such Magistrate committing the case to the Court of Session, instead of passing sentence himself, in the event of a conviction.

1375 Magistrate having previous knowledge of the case:—When a Magistrate initiates proceedings under sec 110 on information within his own knowledge, he is not the proper person to conduct the inquiry under sec 117, the case must be transferred to some other Magistrate—6 C W N 595, 28 Cal 709. But in an Allahabad case it has been held that there is nothing to limit the source or the nature of the information on which a Magistrate can act under sec 110, and therefore the mere fact that the Magistrate has initiated proceedings on information based upon his own personal knowledge is not a ground for transfer—27 All 172. Where a Magistrate became aware of some of the facts in connection with a case by his taking part, or at any rate by his being present, at a search made by the Police during the investigation, it was expedient that the case should be transferred to the file of some other Magistrate—5 C W N 864. Where a Magistrate has dealt with the dispute in an Informal manner as a private arbitrator, it is desirable that the case should be transferred to another Court, as his previous informal knowledge would necessarily hamper him at every turn—18 C L J 150

1376 Magistrate being friend or relation of complainant — The mere fact that the Magistrate is the master of the complainant does not deprive him of his jurisdiction, but in such a case it would generally be expedient for him to refer the complainant to another Magistrate—9 Bom 172

The fact that the Magistrate is a friend or remote relation of the complainant is no ground for transfer—1912 P W R 4 The fact that both the complainant and the accused are acquainted with the Magistrate who sometimes gets medical help from each, is not a ground of transfer—1917 P W R 13 So also, the fact that the Magistrate is a relation of the Sub Inspector of Police or that he is in private life a guardian of a person who has a claim to the estate whose manager or servant instituted the proceeding is not a valid ground of transfer—28 Cal 297 But in 13 C W N 1 (note), the fact that the prosecution witness was a relation of the Magistrate was held to be a sufficient ground for transfer And in a recent Calcutta case the fact that the complainant's mukhtar was a near relation of the Magistrate was held to be a ground for transfer—Nityaranjan v K E, 29 C W N 648 26 Cr L J 1183

1377 Magistrate being interested in the case.—Where the District Magistrate's letter showed that he had taken a keen personal interest in the matter which had led up to the proceedings being taken against the accused and that he had even taken part in the inquiry and had himself instituted the proceedings (under sec 107) and was more or less convinced of the accused's guilt, held that the proceedings ought to be transferred to another district—7 A L J 813, 32 All 642 Where the accused was connected with a Raj estate which was under the management of the District Magistrate as Collector and Agent to the Court of Wards, the High Court granted the application for transfer of the case from the file of the District Magistrate, lest there might be some bias in the mind of the Magistrate inducing him to look with favour upon the interests of any party—8 C W N 77 Where a Magistrate has interested himself in a case pending before him in the way of obtaining a settlement by the parties it is to the interest of both the parties and it is but fair to the Magistrate himself that he should not hear the case—Muraffar Husain v Md Yalub 47 All 411 23 A L J 191 26 Cr L J 869, Gobinda Chandra v Gopal Chandra 18 C L J 150 14 Cr L J 602 But the mere fact that the District Magistrate in his capacity as Collector is concerned in the management of an estate under the Court of Wards is no ground for transfer of a case instituted by a servant of the estate against a tenant of the estate and pending before a Subordinate Magistrate in the district especially where there was not even a suggestion that the Collector or Manager knew of the institution of the case—28 Cal 297 See also notes under sec 536

Magistrate proceeding with the case after issue of rule for transfer:
—See Note 1388 under sub-section (8).

1378 Other cases:—Where from the number of witnesses on both sides the case could not be finished in one day but the Judge insisted on finishing the case in one day and was unwilling to grant an adjournment to another date, held that this constituted a sufficient ground for the transfer of the case from that Magistrate—17 A L J 48 Where the trying Magistrate ordered that he would examine only one witness a day during the trial and would devote no more time each day, and thus prolonged the trial of the case, held that this was a sufficient ground for transfer of the case—Narain Das v Emp, 26 Cr L J 1363 (Lah) Where during a trial a prosecution witness made certain statements which showed his complicity in the offence and the Magistrate ordered him to be put on trial along with the accused, held that the action taken by the Magistrate was quite right but inasmuch as the witness had been examined on oath before the Magistrate who might to a certain extent have been prejudiced, the case against him should be tried by a different Magistrate—20 Cr L J 385 (Cal) Where in a case of rioting and murder committed to the Sessions Court, which had apparently aroused considerable local interest, it appeared that the Civil Surgeon had been discussing the case at the local club with the officers of the station including the Sessions Judge, held that this fact by itself was sufficient to justify an order of transfer of the case from the Sessions Judge—19 A L J 946 Where the Magistrate had asked the pleader for the defence not to defend the accused, held that under such circumstances the accused could not have confidence in the impartiality of the Magistrate and the case should be transferred—3 Lah L J 528 Where no practitioner in a District ordinarily employed in criminal cases is willing to act for the accused, it is a good ground for transfer of the case to another district—Lalla v Zahoor Ahmed 2 O W N 682 26 Cr L J 1272

Where at the request of the complainant, his case is sent to a particular Magistrate for trial, the accused will be justified in asking for a transfer from that Court—25 Cr L J 989 (Lah)

1379 What are not grounds of transfer:—Want of temper and discretion on the part of the Magistrate in dealing with the petitioner's written statement and failure to give satisfactory explanation to the High Court are not, by themselves sufficient grounds for granting an application for transfer—2 W R 58

The mere fact that the complainant is a man of importance in the place where the trial is held is not sufficient to justify a transfer to another place—Ratanlal 474

A bona fide mistake of law is not a ground of transfer Thus in a case under sec 380 I P C the Magistrate should at once give the accused an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses if he so desires, even though the charge may not be framed, but a refusal to give such opportunity, when the Magistrate acts bona fide under a mistaken view of the law, is not a good ground for transferring the case—8 C W N 838 So also the mere fact that a trial Court has committed an error of judgment in admitting an evidence is no ground for transferring a case from such Court—20 Cr L J 609 (Pat) So also, errors of judgment, e.g., refusing to summon a prosecution witness for cross-examination insisting on his being summoned as a witness for the defence, disallowing objections as to the fitness of a person to serve as assessor, and permitting the prosecution to examine in chief a witness on the substantive case of the prosecution after the defence has disclosed its case in the cross-examination of the witnesses, are insufficient by themselves to justify a transfer of the case—3 P L T 32 The fact that a Magistrate erroneously refused to admit a document in evidence or asked a party to deposit the probable expenses for summoning a person as witness is no ground for transferring a case—Nand Kishore v Kalka 5 P L T 487 25 Cr L J 458

The fact that the Magistrate has released the accused on bail and thus shown a tendency to treat the accused with undue leniency is not a ground of transfer—22 Bom 539 The fact that the trying Magistrate had already tried certain other persons charged with the same offence is not a ground of transferring the case of the accused now being tried for the same offence—24 Cr L J 800 (Oudh) It is not a sufficient ground for transfer of a case that the presiding Judge belongs to the Hindu or Moslem faith and cannot be expected to deal impartially with a communal dispute—Bhagwan Das v Emp 22 A L J 1103

The mere refusal by the Magistrate to allow the accused to cross examine the complainant is not a ground of transfer especially when the case has reached a very advanced stage—1917 P W R 29 So also the mere fact that the trial Magistrate frequently cross examined the witnesses of the complainant or disallowed questions as irrelevant is no ground for a transfer of the case—Shadi Lal v Gaurish 25 Cr L J 1185 (Oudh)

The fact that the Magistrate accepted the complaint at a late hour in the evening and issued warrant forthwith or the fact that the Magistrate recorded statements of only one of the accused persons or the fact that the complainant and the accused are both acquainted with the Magistrate who sometimes gets medical help from each is not a sufficient ground for transfer—1917 P W R 13 When a case is adjourned the Court can award costs of adjournment whenever it thinks proper and the passing of such order of costs against a party does not disclose any prejudice on the part of the Magistrate and is not a valid ground for the transfer of the case to another Magistrate—2 P L W 218 When the District Magistrate refuses to produce the papers called for by the defence on the ground that some are missing and others are confidential it cannot be said that the trial Court entertains any bias against the accused or that the accused should reasonably apprehend any such bias—20 Cr L J 609 (Pat) The mere fact that the Magistrate's son is a pleader and that he has been engaged by the other side is no ground for granting a transfer to another Court—Peary Lal v Paltan 26 Cr L J 440 (Oudh) But see 29 C W N 648 cited in Note 13-6 It is not a ground of transfer that the Magistrate is a subordinate of the officer making the complaint—Nasudeo v Emp 26 Cr L J 1425 (Nag)

1380 Onus of proof.—When an application for transfer is

jected to by the accused, the prosecution must bring forward the very best evidence to prove that a fair trial cannot be held in the district in which the case is ordinarily triable—6 Cal 491

Clause (b)—Since the Code allows appeals and revision applications from convictions, and since the verdict of the jury is not in all cases final, the High Court is loath to transfer a case to itself on the ground of any difficult question of law arising in the case. If the Lower Court errs in any point of law, it can be set right afterwards by the High Court in appeal or revision. See 15 W R 69 (per Phear J)

1381 Clause (d) — Convenience of parties—When all the acts constituting the offence took place in Bombay, but the complainant chose to lodge his complaint in the Ratnagiri Sessions Court and the accused also wished to be tried there, the High Court ordered the trial to proceed before the Sessions Judge of Ratnagiri—2 Bom L R 394. In transferring a case no consideration should be had to the fact that by the transfer to a particular district the accused will have the benefit of a trial by a jury, where previously he had none. The real question is that of convenience of parties—8 C L J 59. The convenience of defence witnesses when they are numerous will outweigh the convenience of the prosecution witnesses especially when they are few, and a transfer will be directed to suit the convenience of the former—Ratanlal 927. A transfer will be allowed from one Court to another, where the accused are residents within the jurisdiction of the latter Court, and all the witnesses belong to the same place so that it will be conducive to the convenience of parties if the case is inquired into in the latter place—Bansi v Lakshmi 45 All 700 (1901)

1382 Clause (e) — Expedient for the ends of justice—When a Magistrate who had seized of the case did not know English and there was a large amount of evidence oral and documentary in English in the case, a transfer was necessary in the interests of justice—16 Cr L J 73 (All). But the fact the Magistrate was not well versed in Telugu and Sanskrit in which a book produced in evidence was written is not a ground of transfer, because it is a difficulty which is of common occurrence—(1911) 2 M W N 50

Where the case was relating to a dispute between Hindus and Mahomedans in respect of a mosque it is desirable that the case should be tried by the District Magistrate or some other European Magistrate—Kader Baksh v Sundar Lal 1915 P L R 127 16 Cr L J 213, Mangal v Crown 26 P L R 267 26 Cr L J 1056

Unnecessary delay in the disposal of a petty case is a good ground for transfer—2 Weir 679 12 A L J 262 8 M L T 222

The fact that the accused is in acquaintance of the Magistrate and that it would be in the interests of justice if the trial were held by a stranger Magistrate who knew nothing about either party, is not a ground of transfer—16 A L J 490

1383 Clause (i)—From a criminal Court subordinate to its authority—The High Court has no jurisdiction to direct the transfer of a case from a Court not subordinate to its jurisdiction Sec 185 does not empower such a transfer. Thus, the High Court at Madras has no power to transfer a case from the Court of the Presidency Magistrate of Bombay to the Court of the Presidency Magistrate at Madras—40 Mad 835

The Courts of the District Magistrate and Sessions Judge of Bangalore are subordinate to the High Court of Madras, and the High Court can transfer the cases pending before those Courts—9 Mad 356 The Perim Sessions Court and the Court of the Cantonment Magistrate at Secunderabad are subject to the Bombay High Court, and that High Court can transfer any case pending before those Courts to any other Court of equal or superior jurisdiction—10 Bom 274 9 Bom 333

The village Panchayet is not subordinate to the authority of the High Court, and the High Court cannot therefore transfer a case from one village Panchayet to another—46 All 167 (168 169)

1384 To what Court case may be transferred:—The transfer must be from one Court to another Court. Therefore the High Court cannot transfer a case from the file of one Presidency Magistrate to another, both being Magistrates presiding over the same Court—13 M L J 69 In 35 Mad 739 however the High Court transferred a case from the file of the Chief Presidency Magistrate to the file of another Presidency Magistrate

The transfer must be to a Court of competent authority and of equal or superior jurisdiction. Where the High Court directed the District Magistrate to transfer a case (under Sec 107) to another Magistrate and the District Magistrate transferred the case to a Second Class Magistrate, the transfer was illegal because the Second Class Magistrate was not competent to hear the case under sec 107 and also because he was of inferior jurisdiction to the District Magistrate—37 All 20 The transfer should have been made to a First Class Magistrate as in 24 All 151

* In selecting a Court to which the case is to be transferred, regard must be had to the gravity of the offence. Where a case under Sec 211 I P C was transferred from the Court of a Joint Magistrate to that of an Honorary Magistrate with first class powers where the case remained pending for four months, it was held that the case, being of a serious nature, ought to have been transferred to the Court of Session or to the Court of a more experienced Magistrate—16 A L J 294

Power of the Court to which case is transferred—See 19 All 249 and 1917 P R 30 cited in Note 606 under sec 192

1385 Subsection (3) — A party interested —Ordinarily, the only persons who are recognised by the Code as parties to a criminal case are the persons who have the right to control the proceedings, these are the Crown, the accused and the parties engaged in conducting certain proceedings within the meaning of this Code. The Code does not recognise a private prosecutor, who is a complainant, as a party to the case, and he consequently is not competent to apply for a transfer as a party interested—Jamuna v Rudra Kumar 4 P L J 656 (per Mulla J) Jwala Prasad J held in this case that the person at whose criminal case is lodged, (i.e., the complainant) is a person inte-

the prosecution and is entitled to apply for transfer but his rights are subordinate to those of the Crown, that is, if the Public Prosecutor or the person who is conducting the case on behalf of the Crown is unwilling to have the case transferred, the private prosecutor has no right to get the case transferred. The opinion of Jwala Prasad J has been followed in a recent case of the Patna High Court in Sheodhan v Jhingur, 7 P L T 49 26 Cr L J 1249, and by the Lahore High Court in Bagh Ali v Md Din 6 Lah 541 27 P L R 80 27 Cr L J 411

A person alleging himself to be the complainant, but who in fact is not the complainant and from whose hands the prosecution has been taken away by the order of the Magistrate, is not a party interested within the meaning of this subsection—5 Bom L R 869

1386 Sub section (4) —Mode of making an application for transfer

—An application for transfer should be made by motion supported by affidavit or affirmation and not by a letter addressed by the Sessions Judge to the High Court—1 Cal 219 8 Cal 63, 1894 A W N 154 An application for transfer should not be made by a mere written statement prepared by Counsel but should be made by an application supported by affidavit or by a properly verified petition—1891 A W N 37

Affidavit—When the transfer is asked for on the ground that the appellant wishes to call the Magistrate as a witness the application must be supported by an affidavit showing that the evidence required from the Magistrate is relevant and material—1886 A W N 257

The Madras High Court holds that an application for the transfer of a criminal case by the accused is a criminal proceeding within the meaning of sec 5 of the Indian Oaths Act, and no oath can be administered to the accused. Therefore no affidavit can be put in by the accused person. If only affidavit is put in it is a nullity, and the accused cannot be convicted for any false statement contained therein—1 Weir 176 This is also the view of the Allahabad High Court see In re Barkat, 19 All 200, Emp v Bindeshri, 28 All 331 and Emp v Matan, 33 All 163 But in 3 Lah 46 it has been held that the affidavit is not a nullity, the provision in section 342 (4) that no oath can be administered to an accused has reference only to the statement made by him during his examination under that section, it does not preclude him from making an affidavit in support of his application under sec 526

Counter affidavit by District Magistrate—When an application for transfer is made on the ground of partiality of the Magistrate before whom the case is pending, it is highly improper for the District Magistrate to make an affidavit swearing as to the impartiality of that Magistrate—25 Bom 179

Sub section (5) —Costs—When the case is transferred at the instance of the accused, he will be ordered to pay all the complainant's costs incurred before the Magistrate from whose file the transfer was ordered—8 C W N 583 In 8 C W N 75, the Crown bore all the expenses of the complainant's witnesses

Sub section (6 A) —"We have found section 526 somewhat difficult to deal with. One class of opinion presses for greater safeguards against frivolous, vexatious or dilatory applications for transfer. Another class deprecates any measure which makes a transfer more difficult to obtain. We think it is unavoidable to retain in the Code some provisions for the compulsory adjournment of a case when an intention to apply for a transfer has been notified. But we recognise that the provisions of the section, as they stand, have lent themselves to gross abuse, and therefore we feel that greater safeguards are necessary. For these reasons in the first place, we maintain the principle of the new sub section (6 A) which enables the High Court to award costs in dismissing an application. We have, however, modified it to this extent, that it will enable the High Court, in cases where it is of opinion that the application was frivolous or vexatious to award such amount by way of reasonable costs in the High Court and Court below as it thinks fit—Report of the Joint Committee (1952)

1387 Sub section (8)—Under the old section an application for adjournment had to be made before the commencement of the hearing—29 Cal 211, 8 C W N 77 and therefore an application for adjournment made after the charge had been read and explained to the accused was not an application made before the commencement of the hearing and could not therefore be granted—35 Mad 701. The present section lays down that in case of an inquiry or trial the application may be made at any time during its course even when the case has been completely heard on both sides and the Magistrate has only to write his judgment.

In case of appeal the application for adjournment must be made before the commencement of the hearing in this respect the law is the same as before.

Court whether bound to adjourn—Under the old section there was a difference of opinion as to whether the Court was bound to adjourn the trial on an application for adjournment. In 15 Cal 455 8 C W N 77, 2 Weir 685 33 Cal 1183 and 1 S L R 35 it was held that the words of this section were obligatory and the Court was bound to adjourn. But in 19 Mad 375 6 C W N 717, 18 A L J 1145 and 31 Cal 715 it was held that the Court was not bound to grant an adjournment if there was sufficient time, between the date of the application for adjournment and the date fixed for the hearing of the case to have moved the High Court for transfer and to have obtained its order thereon.

The words of the present sub section have been made more imperative by omitting certain words which occurred at the end of the old sub section and which took away the force of the word 'shall'. The Joint Committee remarks. Our amendment provides for a compulsory adjournment at any stage of the case, except that a Sessions Court may refuse to adjourn (sub section 9) when it is of opinion that the application has been unreasonably delayed. See Sarla Singh v Emp 22 A L J 430 26 Cr L J 139 (decided under the amended Code).

The postponement should be for a reasonable time to allow the party to move the High Court for transfer. A postponement for too short a time is useless—19 Mad 375 An adjournment for six days is not a reasonable time within which to move the High Court—2 Weir 686

1388 Magistrate proceeding with the case after issue of rule for transfer—When an application was made under sub-section (8) and the Magistrate without passing any orders thereon proceeded with the case and even though a telegram to the effect that a rule nisi by the High Court staying proceedings had been issued was shown to the Magistrate he examined some more witnesses for the prosecution and committed the accused it was held that the action on the part of the Magistrate was enough to show a bias and consequently a transfer was necessary—11 C W N 507 5 C W N 110 2 C W N 498 16 C W N 1031 If the Court entertains any doubt about the truth of the telegram it should have satisfied itself by telegraphing to the Registrar of the High Court—5 C W N 110 2 C W N 498 Where upon the High Court having issued a rule staying further proceedings, the petitioner sent a telegram which was laid before the trying Magistrate but the petitioner having failed to appear on the date previously fixed the Magistrate issued a warrant upon the petitioner it was held that the sending of the telegram did not in any way absolve the petitioner from the obligation to appear before the Court on the date fixed and the issue of the warrant upon the petitioner was no ground for transfer of the case—17 C W N 536 But where further proceedings having been stayed by the High Court's order one of the complainants appeared before the Magistrate on the date fixed for a hearing and apprised him of that order but the Magistrate instead of staying further proceedings issued a warrant for the arrest of the complainant who had not appeared held that the Magistrate's action was unjust and hostile to the complainants and the case must be transferred—Fa al Ikhad v Ibdilla 7 Lah 1 J 571 26 P I R 701 27 Cr L J 104

Where the High Court granted a transfer on the 26th and on the 28th a telegram to that effect was shown to the Magistrate and the Magistrate adjourned proceedings till the 30th so that the order of the High Court might reach him and on the 30th the Magistrate proceeded with the case and convicted the accused and on the 31st the order of the High Court reached the Magistrate it was held that the Magistrate's though not illegal was indiscreet, in as much as he did not wait sufficient time for the order of the High Court to reach him—Ratanlal 46

Sub-section (9)—Under this sub-section the Sessions Court may refuse to adjourn when it is of opinion that the application has been reasonably delayed. The reason is that the calendars of Sessions Courts involving the convenience of jurors assessors and parties are liable to be upset by the postponement of cases.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

526-A. (1) Where any person subject to the Discipline Act or to the Army Act or the Air Force Act is accused of offence such as is referred to in (a) to section 41 of the Army Act, or

High Court to transfer for trial to itself in certain cases

Advocate General shall, if so instructed by the competent authority, apply to the High Court, for the committal or transfer of the case to that High Court, and thereupon the High Court shall order that the case be committed for trial to or be transferred to itself and shall thereafter proceed to try the case by jury

(2) The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, declare any officer to be the competent authority for the purpose of issuing instructions under subsection (1) in regard to any class of cases specified in the notification

This section has been added by sec 32 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923

527 (1) The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, direct the transfer of any particular * * case or appeal from one High Court to another High Court, or from any Criminal Court subordinate to one High Court, to any other Criminal Court of equal or superior jurisdiction subordinate to another High Court, whenever it appears to him that such transfer will promote the ends of justice, or tend to the general convenience of parties or witnesses

(2) The Court to which such case or appeal is transferred shall deal with the same as if it had been originally instituted in, or presented to, such Court

The word 'criminal' has now been omitted from this section by sec 146 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1913

528 (1) Any Sessions Judge may withdraw any case from, or recall any case which he has made over to, any Assistant Sessions Judge subordinate to him

(2) Any Chief Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or Subdivisional Magistrate may withdraw any case from, or recall any case which he has made over to, any Magistrate subordinate to him, and may inquire into or try such case himself, or refer it for inquiry or trial to any other such Magistrate competent to inquire into or try the same.

(3) The Local Government may authorize the District Magistrate to withdraw from any Magistrate subordinate to him either such classes of cases as he thinks proper, or particular classes of cases.

Power to authorize District Magistrate to withdraw classes of cases

(4) Any Magistrate may recall any case made over by him under Section 192, sub Section (2) to any other Magistrate and may inquire into or try such case himself

(5) A Magistrate making an order under this section shall record in writing his reasons for making the same.

(6) The head of a Village under the Madras Village-Police Regulation, 1816, or the Madras Village-Police Regulation 1821, is a Magistrate for the purposes of this section

Change.—Sub sections (1) and (4) have been newly added, and sub-section (6) has been slightly amended, by sec 147 of the Cr P C Amendment Act VIII of 1923

Sub section (1).—In order to facilitate arrangements for the disposal of sessions business, it is proposed to empower Sessions Judges to withdraw or recall cases from the file of Assistant Sessions Judges. This question does not arise in the case of appeals as they are heard by Sessions or Additional Sessions Judges.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921)

1389 Sub section (2).—District Magistrate and Sub-divisional Magistrate—Under this section the District Magistrate and the sub-divisional Magistrate within his sub-division have co-ordinate jurisdiction. The District Magistrate cannot set aside a transfer made by the Sub-divisional Magistrate for that would be virtually entertaining an appeal against an order of the Sub-divisional Magistrate passed under this section. He can take action under sec 435 or 438, or can withdraw the case to his file and transfer it to some other Magistrate.—22 Bom 549, 26 Mad 130. Magistrates of co-ordinate jurisdiction should not interfere with each other's jurisdiction. Where a Magistrate acts on his own initiative in transferring a criminal case, his order is not vitiated by the fact that another Magistrate of co-ordinate authority has refused it. But if he examines the reasons given by the latter and finds them to be wrong, that amounts to interfering by way of appeal and the new order passed by him is not sustainable in law.—5 L. W. 372. But in 14 Mad 399 it has been held that a Magistrate subordinate to the Sub-divisional Magistrate is also subordinate to the District Magistrate within the meaning of this section and the District Magistrate can interfere with an order of transfer made by the Sub-divisional Magistrate.

But this section cannot be so read as to imply that after a District Magistrate has transferred some cases from one file to the file of another Magistrate a Sub-divisional Magistrate who is subordinate to the District

Magistrate has jurisdiction to nullify that order by ordering a fresh transfer of the cases to his own file—Id Akbar v Emp. 47 All 288 23 A L J 133 26 Cr L J 538

Chief Presidency Magistrate—The Chief Presidency Magistrate has under this section power to withdraw any case from one of the Presidency Magistrates and refer it for inquiry or trial to any other Presidency Magistrate—In re Agesar 1 Bom L R 387 The Chief Presidency Magistrate has power to transfer to his own file a case which had been transferred to the Fourth Presidency Magistrate for disposal by the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate who took cognizance of the offence—Mohini Mohan v Punam Chand 51 Cal 820 28 C W N 903 26 Cr L J 101

1390 Transfer:—Cases which can be transferred—This section is applicable to—(1) proceedings under Chapter VIII—8 Cal 851, (2) proceedings under Chapter VII—22 Cal 898 2 C L J 614, 5 C W N 686, 2 P L T 186 and (3) proceedings under sec 488—1905 P R 5

The term 'case' includes a proceeding upon a complaint as soon as the complaint has been received by the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the offence complained of. A case can be transferred even before the Magistrate decides to issue process against the accused—7 N L R 97

Case when can be transferred—(1) A case may be transferred as soon as the complaint is filed and the Magistrate takes cognizance of the case and before he issues process. A person who apprehends that a complaint made against him will not be impartially tried by the Magistrate is entitled to have the case transferred even before issue of any process against him—7 N L R 97 But when a complaint has been dismissed by a Magistrate under sec 203 and the Sessions Judge has directed further inquiry into the case the District Magistrate cannot transfer the case from the file of that Magistrate to any other Magistrate—11 C W N 316 (2) A case cannot be transferred at a very late stage of the trial, when the prosecution evidence has been taken and all that remains to be done is to pass an order of commitment or discharge—2 Weir 691 (3) A District Magistrate ought not to transfer a case pending before a subordinate Magistrate after the whole of the prosecution evidence has been taken and the Magistrate has expressed an opinion that the evidence for the prosecution is not sufficient to support the charge—14 W R 12, 2 Pat 333 (4) A case which has been disposed of by a competent authority cannot be withdrawn by the District Magistrate to his file under this section—17 C W N 451 But where several persons were charged before the police with rioting and only one of them was sent up by the police for trial and convicted, whereupon the complainant asked the Magistrate to issue process against the other persons, but the Magistrate refused, and the District Magistrate thereupon withdrew the case to his own file, it was held that the District Magistrate had ample jurisdiction to do so the refusal of the subordinate Magistrate to issue process against the other accused did not dispose of the case finally, but the case was still pending before the subordinate Magistrate—5 C W N 488 (5) Where the records of a case have been sent to a Head Assistant Magistrate under sec 349 for enhancement, punishment, the case can be validly transferred at that stage by the District to a Joint Magistrate—2 Weir 690

To whom cases may be transferred—The District Magistrate, after withdrawing a case, can refer it to any subordinate Magistrate. An Additional District Magistrate is now subordinate to the District Magistrate under the express provision of Section 10 (3) and the latter can transfer cases to the former. The contrary ruling in 34 Cal 918 is no longer good law. When a Magistrate is gazetted to the office of the Chairman of the Municipal Board and takes charge of that office, he is thereby divested of his office as Magistrate. He ceases to be subordinate to the District Magistrate and the latter cannot transfer any criminal case to him for trial—36 All 513. Moreover, the case must be transferred to a Magistrate competent to try the case. A District Magistrate cannot transfer a case under Sec 107 to a Second class Magistrate—37 All 20, or to a Magistrate who has no local jurisdiction over the matter—Honda Reddy v K E 41 Mad 246

1391 Grounds of transfer:—The District Magistrate's powers under this section are very wide and undefined, and he should exercise the powers with due discretion and for really good reasons—1899 P R 13, 20 Cr L J 402

When personal allegations are made against a Magistrate as grounds of transfer, the District Magistrate must require strict proof of the allegations—Ratanlal 590. To move a case from one Magistrate to another on grounds personal to such Magistrate is tantamount to a severe censure on such officer, and the very clearest grounds must exist before a transfer can be allowed—6 B H C R 69, and moreover the Magistrate must be given an opportunity of answering the allegations made against him by the applicant—5 Bom L R 28

Where a Magistrate, in the course of an investigation held a prolonged inquiry during which he made a number of notes, and collected a large amount of information which by reason of the way in which it was acquired he could not properly or legally consider in arriving at a judicial determination, and the notes made by the Magistrate were of such a nature that he ought to be examined as a witness in respect thereto, it was held that in such a case, the Magistrate ought not to try the case, but that it must be transferred to some other Magistrate—21 Cal 920, 20 W R 76. The fact that a Magistrate before whom a case is pending is also the Treasury Officer and has very little time at his disposal by virtue of his duties as a Treasury Officer is not a sufficient ground for directing a transfer of a case from his Court—20 Cr L J 402 (Pat). Where a Magistrate tried and convicted an accused in a case and expressed an opinion that the evidence of the accused was not believable, it was held that the expressed opinion in itself was no ground for a transfer of another case against the same accused by a different complainant under a different set of facts—4 P L W 21. The fact that the trial of a case before a Magistrate extended for a long time (e.g. 3 months) is not a vital ground for withdrawing the case from the file of the Magistrate—19 Cr L J 172 (Pat.)

1392 Recording reasons:—See subsection (5) The reasons for transfer of a case from one Magistrate to another must be recorded—Ratanlal 590, 5 Lah L J 230, 16 Cr L J 626 (Mad), and omission to record reasons renders the order of transfer liable to be set aside—In re Lenkata Reddi, 1924 M W N 873 26 Cr L J 221 But the Calcutta High Court holds that a failure to record the reasons will not vitiate the proceedings unless it has prejudiced the accused—34 Cal 918 Where by virtue of a Government order the District Magistrate had been directed to withdraw all cases in which complaints had been made against a police officer, the omission to record reasons therefor was a mere irregularity and did not vitiate the subsequent proceedings—28 All 421

1393 Notice:—An order of transfer ought not to be made ex parte, i. e. on the allegations of the complainant or accused only, and without giving notice to the opposite party—Ratanlal 460, Ratanlal 474, Ratanlal 655, Ratanlal 877 39 M L J 714 Where a case is transferred to another Magistrate, notice of transfer should be given to the complainant as well as to the accused—Umrao v Fakir, 3 All 749, Teacotta v Ameer Vajee 8 Cal 303, 7 C W N 114, In re Nageshwar, 1 Bom L R 347, Vedu v Bhagwandas 5 Bom L R 28 Imp v Sadashiv, 22 Bom 549, Baksha v Tahlu 1902 P R 28, 14 C P L R 190, U B R (1897—1901) 392 Although the section does not provide for the giving of a notice to the opposite party, still on general principle notice should be given to the party affected before an order for transfer is made—7 C W N 114, Sardara v Emp 5 Lah L J 230 Where a transfer is made at a late stage of the trial, i. e. when all the prosecution witnesses have been examined, the Magistrate does not exercise a sound discretion in not giving notice to the accused—6 M L T 14, 1887 A W N 53 Ratanlal 590 Where at the instance of the complainant a Sub divisional Magistrate after hearing the parties has transferred a case from the file of one Sub Magistrate to that of another, it is not open to the District Magistrate to re transfer the case at the instance of the accused without notice to the complainant—39 M L J 714

But in several other cases it has been held that the issue of a notice is not mandatory, and the want of notice does not amount to illegality but to impropriety The question of propriety is one to be decided on the facts of each case—In re Hawaji 21 Bom L R 276 20 Cr L J 320, In re Iruji, 6 Bom L R 856 The question is general in its terms, and although as a rule of practice it is desirable that notice should be issued, still it cannot be said that the omission to issue notice is in itself a reason for setting aside the order of transfer—Gobinda v King Emp, 2 Pat 333 A 1 R 1923 Pat 228 Bagh Ali v Md Din, 6 Lah, 541 27 Cr L J 411 If the opposite party acquiesces in the transfer, he cannot complain on the ground of absence of notice—7 N L R 97 When the District Magistrate transferred a case suo motu on administrative grounds, no notice was held to be necessary—1910 P R 3 When the order of transfer was made at the request of the trying Magistrate no notice need be given to either party—24 Mad 317 Where there great delay in disposing of a petty case, an order of transfer.

made without notice to the accused to shew cause against the order—2 Weir 692 When by virtue of a Government order the District Magistrate was directed to withdraw all cases in which complaints had been made against a police officer, no notice to the complainant was necessary before making a transfer—In re Dukhi 28 All 421

1394 Power of District Magistrate after transfer:—The District Magistrate after he has transferred the case to a subordinate Magistrate has no jurisdiction relating to the case, so long as the transfer subsists But he can again withdraw the case to his own file if he thinks fit—12 W R 53 When a District Magistrate makes an order of transfer the case is out of his hands, and the District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make any order in the case when it is properly seized of by a subordinate Magistrate—32 Cal 783 He cannot dismiss the complaint, much less prosecute the complainant—3 C W N 490, nor can he issue process for the apprehension of the absconding accused—27 Cal 979 He can make no order in the case except such order as may be made by him by way of revision—30 Cal 449

Powers and duties of Magistrate to whom case is transferred—When a case has been transferred after process has been issued to the accused, the Magistrate to whom the case has been transferred should proceed from the stage in which the proceedings were left He cannot go back and dismiss the complaint under sec 203—19 W R 28

The Magistrate to whom a case is transferred can act upon the evidence already recorded by the Magistrate from whom the case is withdrawn See notes under subsection (3) of sec 350

The Magistrate to whom a case is transferred cannot further transfer the case to some other Magistrate subordinate to him—36 All 166, 12 A L J 277

1394A Sub sec (6)—This sub section supersedes 15 Mad 94 (decided under the 1882 Code) in which it was held that the village Headman not being a Magistrate no case from his file could be transferred to the file of another Magistrate

Prior to its present amendment, this sub-section applied only to village Headmen appointed under Madras Regulation IV of 1822, and therefore a District Magistrate was not competent to transfer a case from a village Headman appointed under any other Regulation (e.g. Reg XI of 1816)—26 Mad 394 This case is now overruled as the present sub-section expressly mentions the Regulation of 1816

1395 Revision—The High Court will not interfere in revision with an order of the District Magistrate dismissing an application under sec 528 for the transfer of a case The High Court's powers of revision are in express terms limited to those conferred by certain sections mentioned in section 439, section 526 is not one of those The Letters Patent does not confer any power of transfer over and above that conferred by section 526 The remedy of the applicant is to make an independent petition for transfer under section 526 supported by affidavit or affirmation—Aihu v Maung Po Aha, 1 Rang 632

CHAPTER XLIV-A

SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONS RELATING TO EUROPEAN AND INDIAN BRITISH SUBJECTS AND OTHERS

528-A (1) Where, in any case to which the provisions of Chapter XXXIII do not apply, a person claims to be dealt with as an European or Indian British subject, or where any person claims to be dealt with as an European (other than an European British subject) or an American, he

Procedure of claim of a person to be dealt with as European or Indian British subject, or as European or American.

shall state the grounds of such claim to the Magistrate before whom he is brought for the purpose of the inquiry or trial; and such Magistrate shall inquire into the truth of such statement and allow the person making it a reasonable time within which to prove that it is true, and shall then decide whether he is or is not an European British subject or an Indian British subject, or an European or an American, as the case may be, and shall deal with him accordingly

(2) When any such claim is rejected by the Magistrate and the person by whom it was made is committed by the Magistrate for trial before the Court of Session and such person repeats the claim before such Court such Court shall, after such further inquiry, if any, as it thinks fit, decide the claim, and shall deal with such person accordingly

(3) When any Court before which any person is tried rejects any such claim as aforesaid the decision shall form a ground of appeal from the sentence or order passed in such trial

This is the old section 453 with certain alterations

1396 Analysis of section—(a) An Indian British subject claiming to be dealt with as such must put in his claim before the Magistrate before whom he is brought for the purpose of inquiry or trial, according to the provisions of sub-section (1) This subsection applies to Presidency Magistrates as well as Magistrates in the mufassal (b) if the Magistrate rejects the claim and tries him, the decision shall form a ground of appeal from the sentence or order passed in such appeal See sub-section (3) This sub-section applies to Presidency Magistrates as well as to Magistrates in the mufassal (c) If the Magistrate rejects the claim and commits the accused to the Court of Session he may repeat the claim the latter Court See sub-section (2) It should be noted that subsection (2) such repetition may only be made before a Court of

(in the mufassal) and not before the High Court Sessions (d) If the Court of Session rejects the claim and tries the accused, the decision shall form a ground of appeal from the sentence or order passed in such trial (e) If a claim is made before a Presidency Magistrate and rejected by him, and the accused is committed to the High Court, there is no provision for repetition of the claim before the High Court, and the accused will not be entitled to put in, under sec 275 of the Code, before the High Court a further claim for being tried by a jury the majority of whom should be Indians. But the decision of the Presidency Magistrate rejecting the claim is not final, and is subject to revision by the High Court—Emp v Harendra Chandra 51 Cal 98a (989, 990) 29 C W, N 384 26 Cr L J 385

1397 Claim as to status:—Evidence—The plea that the accused is an European British subject must be substantiated by ample evidence. Where the prisoner pleaded that he was an European British subject, but the evidence as to his nationality was incomplete, it was held that the plea was not made out—6 M H C R 7. So also, a mere statement by the prisoner that he is an European British Subject cannot be acted upon—5 W R 53. The Judge may be satisfied by the appearance of the prisoner and the circumstances brought forward at the time that the plea is true, but if he is not so satisfied, and the plea is persisted in, it must be substantiated by sufficient evidence—6 M H C R 7.

Opportunity to plead must be given—The Magistrate trying the prisoner ought to give him an opportunity of pleading that he is an European British subject—5 W R 53.

Time for making claim—A claim on the ground of status may be put forward before a committing Magistrate at any time up till the time when the commitment is made—Emp v Harendra 51 Cal 98a (991).

528-B If in any such case an European or Indian British subject or an European (other than an European British subject) or an American does not claim to be dealt with as such by the Magistrate before whom he is tried or by whom he is committed, or if, when such claim has been made before and rejected by the committing Magistrate, it is not repeated before the Court to which such person is committed, he shall be held to have relinquished his right to be dealt with as an European British subject or an Indian British subject, or an European or an American as the case may be, and shall not assert it in any subsequent stage of the case.

This is the old section 454 with certain alterations

1398 Waiver:—An European British subject can relinquish his rights. The provisions of this Code give certain rights and privileges to the European British Subjects, which rights they are at liberty to give up—6 Cal 83. Failure to make a claim amounts to a relinquishment of rights—1912 P R 6 Where the Magistrate explained to the accused his rights under this Code and then asked him if he claimed to be dealt with as such, and the accused stated that he did not claim the rights, it was held that he had relinquished the rights—Barindra Kumar Ghosh, 37 Cal 467 If no claim is put forward before the committing Presidency Magistrate, the accused will not be allowed to assert before the High Court any claim to be tried by a jury the majority of whom should belong to his own nationality—Emp v Harindra 51 Cal 980 (991) 29 C W N 384 But the omission of the accused to avail himself of his right to claim the benefit of section 528A does not conclude the matter and he is not debarred from urging that the conditions mentioned in clause (a) or (b) of sec 443 exist—Martindale v Emp 52 Cal 347 29 C W N 447 26 Cr L J 401

The expression any subsequent stage of the case includes the stages of appeal and revision—Jeremiah v Johnson 45 M L J 800

Magistrate whether bound to inform accused of his rights—The Calcutta High Court holds that before an European British subject can be considered to have waived the privileges conferred upon him by this Code it must appear that his rights were distinctly made known to him to enable him to exercise his choice and judgment whether he would or would not claim those rights—6 Cal 83 Where this was not done, the conviction was set aside—18 C W N 385 and the records were returned to the Magistrate with a direction that he should explain to the accused all the privileges he was entitled to as an European British subject and definitely ascertain from him whether he waived his claims—7 N L R 93 But the Punjab Chief Court holds that it is not the duty of the Magistrate to ask categorically whether the accused claims his right as an European British subject much less his duty to explain his right to him as such subject The Legislature appears to presume that a person entitled to a privilege knows of its existence and that if he desires to assert it he will assert it—1885 P R 5

Retraction of waiver—The waiver is not irrevocable If the withdrawal of the waiver is made promptly and shortly after the waiver had been made, and if substantially nothing had been done in the interval on the waiver, the withdrawal should be allowed—1908 P R 1, 1878 P R 17

528 C Where a person, not being an European British

Trial of person as belonging to class to which he does not belong	subject, is dealt with as an European British subject or not being an Indian British subject, is dealt with as an Indian British subject or, not being an European (other than an European British subject) or American, is dealt with as an European or American, and such person does not object, the inquiry, commitment, trial or sentence, as the case may be, shall not, by reason of such dealing, be invalid

528 D (1) Unless there is something repugnant in the Application of Acts conferring jurisdiction on Magistrates or Courts of Session context, all enactments made by the Governor General in Council or the Indian Legislature which confer on Magistrates or on the Court of Session jurisdiction over offences shall be deemed to apply to European British subjects although such persons are not expressly referred to therein

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise any Court to exceed the limits prescribed by this Code as to the amount of punishment which it may inflict on an European British subject or to confer jurisdiction on any Magistrate of the second or third class for the trial of such subjects

CHAPTER XLV

OF IRREGULAR PROCEEDINGS

529 If any Magistrate not empowered by law to do any of the following things namely —

Irregularities which do not vitiate proceedings

- (a) to issue a search warrant under section 98,
- (b) to order, under section 133, the police to investigate an offence,
- (c) to hold an inquest under section 176
- (d) to issue process under section 186, for the apprehension of a person within the local limits of his jurisdiction who has committed an offence outside such limits
- (e) to take cognizance of an offence under section 190, sub section (1) clause (a) or clause (b),
- (f) to transfer a case under section 192,
- (g) to tender a pardon under section 337 or section 338,
- (h) to sell property under section 524 or section 525 or
- (i) to withdraw a case and try it himself under section 58, erroneously in good faith does that thing, his proceedings shall not be set aside merely on the ground of his not being so empowered

1399 Scope of section:—Clause (f) —A case includes cases under Chapter VIII or XII See notes under Sec 192 The irregularity of transfer under Sec 192 by a Magistrate not empowered is cured by this section—36 Cal 869 36 Cal 370

Clause (g) —See 20 All 40 cited under Sec 337

Prejudice to accused —Having regard to the provisions of this section read with Sec 531, it must be shown that the proceedings wrongly held in a case have in fact occasioned a failure of justice before they can be set aside—39 Cal 119

530 If any Magistrate, not being empowered by law in this behalf, does any of the following things, namely —

- (a) attaches and sells property under section 88,
- (b) issues a search-warrant for a letter, parcel or other thing in the Post Office, or a telegram in the Telegraph Department,
- (c) demands security to keep the peace,
- (d) demands security for good behaviour,
- (e) discharges a person lawfully bound to be of good behaviour,
- (f) cancels a bond to keep the peace,
- (g) makes an order under section 133 as to a local nuisance,
- (h) prohibits, under section 143, the repetition or continuance of a public nuisance,
- (i) issues an order under section 144
- (j) makes an order under Chapter XII,
- (k) takes cognizance, under section 190, sub section (1) clause (c), of an offence,
- (l) passes a sentence under section 349, on proceedings recorded by another Magistrate;
- (m) calls, under section 435, for proceedings,
- (n) makes an order for maintenance,
- (o) revises, under S 515, an order passed under S 514,
- (p) tries an offender,
- (q) tries an offender summarily, or
- (r) decides an appeal,

his proceedings shall be void

1400 Clause (j) —This clause refers only to a case where Magistrate is not competent, by virtue of the position he holds or powers vested in him, to try a case of the character mentioned in S

But where a Magistrate is competent to try a case under Sec 145 the fact that he has no local jurisdiction over the matter will not make the trial void—5 C W N 686

Clause (p)—If a Third Class Magistrate, not being specially empowered by the Local Government tries an offender under sec 2 of the Bombay Public Conveyances Act (IV of 1863) the trial is void—Ratanlal 921 If a Second Class Magistrate tries an accused who has actually committed an offence under sec 409 I P C as though for an offence under sec 406 I P C the trial and conviction are void—1 Bom I R 27 But where the offence consists of circumstances of aggravation which make it triable by a higher Court and a 2nd Class Magistrate tries it ignoring those aggravating circumstances the proceedings are not void ab initio under this section—Q E v Gundaya 13 Bom 502 See also 4 Bom I R 26 K F v Ayyan 24 Mad 675 and Dawson v K F 2 Rang 455 26 Cr I J 1108

Where a trial is void under this section sec 403 does not bar a retrial—8 Bom 307 1910 P R 7 29 Cal 412

Clause (q)—Where a Magistrate deliberately disregards the offence actually complained of viz an offence not triable summarily, and tries it summarily his proceedings are absolutely void—5 C W N 252 29 Cal 409 1907 P L R 21 4 Cal 18 Fmp v Ram Narain 46 All 446

Clause (r)—The word 'Magistrate' in this section includes a Sessions Judge therefore if a Sessions Judge hears an appeal which ought to have been presented to the High Court the proceedings before the Sessions Judge are absolutely void—In re Ibdulla 2 Rang 386 (387) 26 Cr I J 203 A I R 1925 Rang 39

531 No finding, sentence or order of any Criminal Court

Proceedings in wrong shall be set aside merely on the ground place—that the inquiry, trial or other proceeding in the course of which it was arrived at or passed, took place in a wrong sessions division, district, subdivision or other local area, unless it appears that such error has in fact occasioned a failure of justice

1401 Object and scope of section—The policy of this Code as shown by secs 531 538 is to uphold in most cases orders passed by a Criminal Court which was lacking in local jurisdiction or which has committed illegalities or irregularities, unless failure of justice has been occasioned or is likely to be occasioned through such want of jurisdiction or such illegalities or irregularities—42 Mad 791

This section only refers to districts subdivisions and local areas governed by this Code and not to tributary Mahals like Beonhar or Mour Dhanj to which the Code does not extend—11 Cal 667 8 Cal 985

The 'order' under this section includes an order of commitment—Bhagwati v King Fmp 3 Pat 417 (421) 26 Cr L J 49

Offence in one place trial or commitment in another—See Note 549 under section 1—See also 17 Mad 402 cited under sec 532

Commitment to wrong Sessions —See Note 549 under sec 177

Trial at a place outside jurisdiction —Where a criminal appeal was presented to a Sessions Judge at a place within his jurisdiction but was heard and disposed of at a place which was outside the local limits of his criminal jurisdiction but where he had civil jurisdiction, it was held that the procedure was an irregularity but no failure of justice being occasioned thereby the trial was not a nullity—17 All 36

Jurisdiction of Court to order forfeiture —This section applies only to proceedings in a wrong place and cures defects as to local jurisdiction. But it cannot cure a defect where a bond of appearance taken from the accused by one Magistrate is forfeited by another Magistrate for it is a defect not of local jurisdiction but of personal jurisdiction—16 Bom I R 84 (cited under sec 514)

Failure of justice —Where no objection was taken in the Lower Court, and the petitioner failed to show in the High Court that he had been prejudiced, the High Court declined to interfere—21 W R 88. Even the fact that the objection to jurisdiction was taken at a comparatively early stage of the proceedings was not a conclusive proof that the accused was prejudiced by the irregularity—34 C I J 200

532 (1) If any Magistrate or other authority purporting to exercise powers duly conferred,

When irregular commitments may be validated which were not so conferred, commits an accused person for trial before a Court of Session or High Court, the Court to which the commitment is made may, after perusal of the proceedings, accept the commitment if it considers that the accused has not been injured thereby, unless during the inquiry and before the order of commitment, objection was made on behalf either of the accused or of the prosecution to the jurisdiction of such Magistrate or other authority.

(2) If such Court considers that the accused was injured, or if objection was so made, it shall quash the commitment and direct a fresh inquiry by a competent Magistrate

1402 Scope of Section.—Sec 531 must be read as complete in itself and not as in any way cut down or limited by the proviso contained in the latter part of sec 532. Sec 531 applies only to cases in which there is no jurisdiction by reason of the inquiry, trial or other proceeding being held in a wrong local area. Sec 532 seems to refer to cases in which the Magistrate is competent to deal with the offence as having taken place within the local limits of his jurisdiction, but has no power to commit to the Sessions either because he is a Second Class Magistrate or for some reasons other than that of want of local jurisdiction—16 Bom 200

This section applies only to cases where the Magistrate or other authority who has assumed to commit has not been duly invested the powers under which he has assumed to make the commitment :—when the defect is one personal to the committing authority and there is no defect in his proceeding—1890 P R 16 This section does not deal with cases in which the defect in the committal order arises from want of territorial jurisdiction—16 Bom 200, 20 Cr L J 416 (Mrd) It does not apply where the commitment is bad owing to a disqualification of the Magistrate under sec 556—2 I B R 209 It has no application to commitments made by Magistrates acting under sec 346—12 C W N 136 But this section applies where the commitment is irregular by reason of want of sanction under sec 196 or 197—Q E v B G Tilak 22 Bom 112 Q E v Morton 9 Bom 288 It also applies where the commitment of the approver (who has broken the conditions of pardon) is irregular by reason of want of the certificate of Public Prosecutor required under sec 339—Aga Ha v Fmp 3 Ring 55 4 Bur L J 23

Objection to commitment—If a Magistrate, being empowered to commit to the Sessions but having no territorial jurisdiction over the place of offence commits a case to the Sessions, the commitment is valid under sec 531, and it cannot be set aside under section 532, although the objection to such commitment was taken before the commitment—Q E v Reddy 17 Mrd 40

Where objection to the want of jurisdiction of the Magistrate to commit is not taken before the Magistrate the High Court can accept the commitment under this section, if it considers that the accused has not been prejudiced thereby—21 Bom 112

533 (1) If any Court, before which a confession or other

Non-compliance with statement of an accused person re-provision of S 164 or 364 corded or purporting to be recorded under Section 164 or Section 364 is tendered or has been received in evidence, finds that any of the provisions of either of such sections have not been complied with by the Magistrate recording the statement, it shall take evidence that such person duly made the statement recorded, and, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, S 91, such statement shall be admitted if the error has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits

(2) The provisions of this section apply to Courts of Appeal, Reference and Revision

1403 Scope of Section:—What this section means is this that where a confession or other statement of an accused person is duly made but in recording it the provisions of the law have not been complied with oral evidence is admissible to prove that the confession or the statement was duly made The defect which this section intends to cure is one not of substance but of form only, as for instance when the Magistrate has omitted to sign the certificate or has omitted to state in the certificate that the statement was taken in his hearing—2 C W N 702, 1915 F

R 17, or where the Magistrate has omitted to record that the required warning was given to the accused under sec 164—Parlab Singh v Emp 6 Lah 415 7 Lah 1 J 482 Ramas v Emp 3 Pat 872 Ahemian v Emp 6 Lah 58 26 Cr D J 1074 Baan Singh v Emp 7 Lah 1 J 250 26 Cr L J 1458 But this section will not render a confession admissible when the provisions of the law have been totally disregarded, as for instance where a statement has been neither signed by the accused nor certified by the Magistrate—9 Mad 224 17 Cal 862 or where no warning was given at all under sec 164—Parlab v Emp 6 Lah 415 A I R 1925 Lah 605 This section has no application where no record whatsoever has been made of a confession—35 All 260 But in 23 Bom 221 and 21 Bom 495 it has been held that this section applies to omissions to comply with the law as well as to infractions of the law, i.e., to defects not only of form but of substance also

Irregularity in record of confession—See Notes 1037 1038 and 1042 under sec 364

Omission to sign the record—See Note 1040 under sec 364

Want of memorandum or certificate—See Note 519 under sec 164 and Note 1041 under sec 364

Irregularity in recording confession—See Note 516 under sec 164

534 In omission to inform under S 447 any person of his rights under Chapter XXXVIII
Omission to give information under section 447 shall not affect the validity of any proceeding

This section has been amended by section 44 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923

535 (1) No finding or sentence pronounced or passed shall be deemed invalid merely on the ground that no charge was framed, unless, in the opinion of the Court of appeal or revision, a failure of justice has in fact been occasioned thereby

(2) If the Court of appeal or revision thinks that a failure of justice has been occasioned by an omission to frame a charge it shall order that a charge be framed, and that the trial be recommenced from the point immediately after the framing of the charge

1404 Omission to frame charge—An omission to frame a charge does not invalidate an order of acquittal and render it equivalent to an order of discharge such order is a bar to a retrial for the same offence—3 All 129

Where a charge was framed under sec 147 I P C, but the accused was convicted of an offence under sec 323, I P C, it was held in conviction was illegal on account of the absence of a charge under sec 323 I P C and sec 535 of this Code did not cure the defect. The words 'merely on the ground that no charge was framed' in this section must mean a case where the offence being a petty one, and the evidence being fairly taken, the Court framed no charge at all. But where a charge has been framed (in this case a charge under sec 147 I P C was framed) this section does not apply and it cannot be said that the conviction shall not be deemed invalid merely on the ground that no charge was framed and the persons charged under sec 147 I P C, for rioting with the common object of causing hurt to the complainant cannot be convicted under sec 323 I P C, of causing hurt to another person—40 Cal 168. But in a recent case the same High Court has laid down that this section is not confined to cases where no charge at all has been framed but also applies to cases in which no charge was framed of the particular offence of which the accused has been convicted (though a charge of another offence was framed)—Ibdu Rahim v A F, 41 C I J 474 26 Cr L J 1279.

Where a Magistrate framed a charge under section 19 (e) and (f) of the Arms Act, and then submitted the record to the District Magistrate for his sanction and the District Magistrate sanctioned the institution of proceedings whereupon the trial proceeded and the accused was convicted it was held that the omission to frame a charge afresh after sanction was cured by this section—41 B R 247.

538 (1) If an offence triable with the aid of assessors is

Trial with assessors of offence triable by jury	of assessors, the trial shall not on that ground only be invalid, unless the objection is taken before the Court records its finding
---	--

1405 Sub section (1)—The difference between a trial by jury and a trial with the aid of assessors lies in the summing up of the case, and the manner in which the verdict of the jury and the opinions of the assessors are taken. It is at this latter point that there is a departure of ways, and if the accused does not put any objection at the crucial point, he cannot afterwards be heard to complain. Where no objection was taken at the trial it was too late to take objection on appeal—33 Bom 423.

Sub section (2)—Where a case was triable by jury but was tried with the aid of assessors and no objection was taken at the trial, it was held that the trial was not invalid, even though the accused was materially injured, in as much as the Judge differed from the opinions of the assessors and convicted the accused—33 Cal 132. The objection must be taken at the trial and cannot be taken on appeal—Ibid.

537 Subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, no finding, sentence or order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered under Chapter XXVII or on appeal or revision on account—

- (a) of any error, omission or irregularity in the complaint, summons, warrant, charge, proclamation, order, judgment or other proceedings before or during trial or in any inquiry or other proceeding under this Code, or
- (b) (Omitted)
- (c) of the omission to revise any list of jurors or assessors in accordance with Section 324, or
- (d) of any misdirection in any charge to a jury, unless such error, omission, irregularity or misdirection has in fact occasioned a failure of justice

Explanation—In determining whether any error, omission or irregularity in any proceedings under this Code has occasioned a failure of justice, the Court shall have regard to the fact whether the objection could and should have been raised at an earlier stage in the proceedings

Change:—Clause (b) (which referred to 'want of or irregularity in any sanction required by section 195 or any irregularity in proceeding taken under sec 476), and the illustration have been omitted by sec 148 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The Illustration ran as follows—"A Magistrate being required by law to sign a document signs in it initials only. This is purely an irregularity and does not affect the validity of the proceeding." This illustration was given to show the class of irregularity contemplated by this section, as distinguished from substantial departures from law.—4 Lah 376 (at p 380). But as this Code nowhere lays down that the Magistrate must sign his name in full and not in initials, the illustration was thought to be "inappropriate" and has been omitted by the Select Committee of 1916

1406 Scope of Section:—This section applies to mere errors of procedure arising out of mere inadvertence and not to substantive errors of law.—8 Bom 200 11 B H C R 237, 12 W R (P C) 32. It does not apply to cases of disregard or disobedience of the whole of some mandatory provisions of the Code, but applies only to cases of failure to comply with some part of such provisions in the course of a general compliance with the whole.—Gangadhar v Bhangar 25 Cr L J (Nag). When a trial is contrary to law, it is no trial at all, and a obedience to an express provision of law as to the mode of the trial is not an irregularity which can be cured by this section, but is an illegality which vitiates the whole trial. This section has not the effect of curing material irregularities and absolute illegalities. The errors which can be cured by this section are formal defects of procedure and not substantive errors of law—25 Mad 61 (P C) 5 P L J 61. This section does not apply to an infringement of statutory requirements. It only applies to errors, omissions and irregularities of a technical nature which may occur by accident or oversight in the course of proceedings conducted in the mode prescribed by statute. If in conducting a trial the Judge adopts a procedure which is a departure from the authorised procedure it would amount to a violation of the law, which cannot be cured by section 537—Illu v Crown 4 Lah 376, Lyme v Crown, 4 Lah 382 (386). Thus where two cross-cases were at first tried by the Judge separately but were afterwards tried jointly, the evidence for the prosecution in one case was treated at the request of the accused as the defence evidence in the cross-case, only one set of findings was recorded in respect of both cases, and finally one composite judgment was delivered held that the procedure adopted by the Judge was a serious departure from the usual and proper course, and was not only irregular but grossly illegal. Section 537 could not apply to the case—Illu v Crown 4 Lah 376. The test to be applied in considering whether a particular infringement of the provisions of the Code does or does not fall within the purview of section 537 appears to be this. Does the error go to the whole root of the trial? Does it in effect vitiate the proceedings? Has the Court assumed an authority which it does not possess? Has it broken the vital rules of procedure? If the error is of such a nature then the proceedings are vitiated in their very inception and section 537 has no application, but the mere fact that a certain provision of the Code is imperative does not in itself indicate that a breach of the provision vitiates the whole proceeding—Emperor v Bechu Chande 45 All 124 (127) 20 A L J 874 24 Cr I J 67. A distinction should be made between a positive enactment by the Code that a certain trial shall not take place and a prohibitive enactment that in the course of such a trial certain detailed procedure should be followed. Both are imperative provisions. But still the one is a different thing from the other. In the former case an infringement of the enactment amounts to an assumption of jurisdiction and vitiates the trial from the very beginning. In the latter case an infringement merely amounts to an error omission or irregularity in the procedure adopted in the course of the trial. This section aims at curing infringements of the latter type—Agar Illa U v A F 3 Rang 139 26 Cr I J 1336 A I R 1925 Rang 258.

Subject to provisions herebefore contained—These words do not refer to the provisions of the entire Code preceding this section but only to the provisions of this chapter (i.e. secs 529 to 536)—19 C W N 972 (per Sharfuddin and Beethcroft JJ), Contra—22 Cal 176 23 Cal 983 (19) (C W N 972 (per Fletcher J)).

* Court of competent jurisdiction—This means a Court of competent jurisdiction in respect of the particular offence charged—10 Bom 319 If a Magistrate in consequence of a personal disqualification (e.g. under section 536) is forbidden by law to try a particular case though he may be authorised generally to try cases of the same class, he cannot be said to be a Court of competent jurisdiction with respect to that particular case—23 Cal 328 Thus a Magistrate who takes cognizance of a case under sec 190 (1) (c) is not competent to try the case, if the accused objects to it and if in spite of such objection he proceeds to try the same himself, he cannot be said to be a Court of competent jurisdiction in respect of that case—13 All 345 If a District Magistrate transfers to a subordinate Magistrate a case which the latter is not competent to try a trial by the latter of that case is a defect which cannot be cured by this section as the trial is not held by a Court of competent jurisdiction—23 Cal 442

1407 Failure of justice—The test in case of errors omissions or irregularities and other matters of like nature referred to in this section is not whether the Court has acted illegally (for in one sense every error or irregularity in so far as it contravenes the provisions of the Code is illegal) but whether there had been a failure of justice—27 Cal 83. Moreover the test (viz., whether the error or irregularity has occasioned a failure of justice) is one which can be properly applied only after the final result of the case is known. Where an objection is taken on the ground of there being a material error before a case is finally disposed of and while there is time to correct the same, it would be unreasonable to hold that the section intends the error to be allowed to remain uncorrected. To hold that would be to give this section the effect not only of curing mere formal defects of procedure when discovered too late but of practically subverting all procedure—23 Cal 983. If, however, the inquiry has proceeded far enough to enable the test required by this section to be applied this section may be called in to cure the error or irregularity—12 Cr 1 J 320 (Sind)

In fact—The words in fact have been introduced into the Code of 1898 apparently in order to emphasize the duty of the Court to go into the merits before interfering, in consequence of misdirection or other error—26 Mad 1

1408 Error omission or irregularity—Error or irregularity in summons or warrant—Sec 8 All 293 in Note 143 under sec 68 38 Mad 1088 and 18 All J 1140 in Note 182 under sec 90 and Note 285 under sec 115 The error of a Magistrate in proceeding by warrant instead of by summons furnishes no ground for quashing the proceedings—1 W R 36

A search warrant issued illegally under section 96 (1) cannot, by the operation of this section be taken to have been validly issued under sec 98 This section cannot give legal effect to a defective warrant—35 Cal 1076

Issue of fresh summons—Where on an information a summons was issued to the accused and owing to its disclosing no offence a fresh summons was issued without any fresh or supplemental information, error, omission or irregularity in the fresh summons was not sufficient to upset the finding and sentence unless it had occasioned a failure of justice—31 Bom 611

Irregularity in arrest—Where certain arrests were made without the substance of the warrants being notified to the persons arrested the omission was cured by this section—18 Cr L J 666 (All)

Absence of complaint—The absence of a complaint of Court required by sec 195 of this Code goes to the root of the case and vitiates the whole trial—Girdhari Lal v Emp, 12 O L J, 194 2 O W N 174 26 Cr L J 929 Ameraj v Emp, 23 A L J 35 26 Cr L J 751

Error or omission in the charge—An omission to set out the guilty intention of the accused in a charge will be cured by this section unless it is shown that the omission has occasioned a failure of justice—22 Cal 391 Where the law and section of the law were mentioned in the charge, the omission of the words "unlawfully and maliciously" in the charge was not so material as to prejudice the accused—42 Cal 957 The omission of the word 'dishonestly' in a charge under sec 411 I P C is not a ground of reversing the conviction and sentence, where the accused person fully understood the nature of the offence with which he was charged and has not been prejudiced by the omission—10 B H C R 373 Where there is ample evidence to show the common object of an assembly, the omission to mention the common object can be cured by this section—2 P L J 541, 18 Cr L J 328 (Pat), 21 Cal 827 But where the charge is defective and the common object of the unlawful assembly is not very precisely set out therein, and moreover the charge does not specify the property the taking possession of which is supposed to be the common object of the assembly, the defect in the charge cannot be cured by this section—33 Cal 295

Errors in frame and contents of charge—See Note 730 under sec 225

Irregularity in proclamation—See 1917 P R 39 in Note 165 under sec 87

Error or omission in judgment—See Note 1051 under sec 367, under sub heading 'Defective Appellate judgments'

Misdirection to jury—See Note 916 under sec 297

538 No attachment made under this Code shall be

Attachment not illegal¹ deemed unlawful nor shall any person nor distrainer a trespasser making the same be deemed a trespasser, on account of any defect or want of form in the summons, writ of attachment or other proceedings relating thereto

The word 'attachment' has been substituted for the word 'distress' by sec 149 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, VIII of 1923 A similar amendment has been made in sections 386 and 387

MISCELLANEOUS

539 Affidavits and affirmations to be used before any

Courts and persons High Court or any officer of such Court before whom affidavits may be sworn and affirmed before such Court or the Clerk of the Crown, or any Commissioner or other person appointed by such Court for that purpose, or any Judge, or any Commissioner for taking affidavits in any Court of Record in British India, or any Commissioner to administer oaths in England or Ireland, or any Magistrate authorized to take affidavits or affirmations in Scotland

1409 Affidavits sworn before the Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta cannot be used before the Patna High Court—B A Ry Co v Sh Makhul A I R 1925 Pat 755 An affidavit made before a Magistrate who has no seisin of the case or who is not competent to try the case (but is competent only to commit it being a sessions case) is not valid and cannot be used before a High Court—Ram Chandra v A E 5 Pat 110 7 P I T 304 A Deputy Magistrate has no power to administer oath to a person making a declaration in the shape of an affidavit and such person cannot be prosecuted for perjury if he makes any false statement in such affidavit—In re Iswarchandra 14 Cal 653 But an affidavit to be used in a Civil Court may be sworn to before any Magistrate by virtue of sec 139 of the Civil Procedure Code—Dmohundhu v Hurrymully 8 C W N xl

An affidavit must contain nothing but bare facts known to the person who makes the affidavit either personally or upon information from a source which he believes to be a correct source and one on which reliance can be placed As human beings are liable to make mistakes in reciting facts, the law requires that the contents of affidavits should be carefully read over to the deponents in a language which they understand and should be vouched by them to be correct—36 All 13

539-A (1) If then any application is made to any Court

Affidavit in proof of in the course of any inquiry trial or conduct of public servant other proceeding under this Code, and allegations are made therein respecting any public servant, the applicant may give evidence of the facts alleged in the application by affidavit and the Court may if it thinks fit order that evidence relating to such facts be so given

An affidavit to be used before any Court other than a High Court under this section may be sworn or affirmed in the manner prescribed in Section 539, or before any Magistrate.

Affidavits under this section shall be confined to, and shall state separately, such facts as the deponent is able to prove from his own knowledge and such facts as he has reasonable grounds to believe to be true, and, in the latter case, the deponent shall clearly state the grounds of such belief

(2) The Court may order any scandalous and irrelevant matter in an affidavit to be struck out or amended

This section and the next have been added by section 150 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "This new section is intended to discourage the making of false and scandalous statements in petitions filed before the Courts, if such petition seeks to impugn the action of subordinate authorities"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). "We think that the provisions of this section should apply to all criminal proceedings, including appeals. We would allow the applicant to give evidence by affidavit, and would leave the Court a discretion to require this to be done in any case"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

539-B (1) Any Judge or Magistrate may, at any stage of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding, after due notice to the parties, visit and inspect any place in which an offence is alleged to have been committed, or any other place which it is in his opinion necessary to view for the purpose of properly appreciating the evidence given at such inquiry or trial, and shall without unnecessary delay record a memorandum of any relevant facts observed at such inspection

(2) Such memorandum shall form part of the record of the case. If the Public Prosecutor complainant or accused so desires, a copy of the memorandum should be furnished to him free of cost.

Provided that in the case of a trial by jury or with the aid of assessors, the Judge shall not act under this section unless such jury or assessors are also allowed a view under Section 293

"This section is inserted definitely prescribing that any Judge or Magistrate may, at any stage of any inquiry or trial, visit and inspect any place connected with the occurrence, subject to his recording a note of his inspection.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). "We are of opinion that the Judge or Magistrate shall view the locus in quo only for purpose of properly appreciating the evidence given at the trial and that in the case of trial by jury or with assessors the Judge should only view if the jury or assessors do the same under sec 293. We also think that notice should be given to the parties of the intention of the Judge or

Magistrate to visit the locus. We would also provide that the memorandum to be made by the Judge or Magistrate shall form part of the record of the case, and that a copy of it may be furnished to both sides.—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

1410 Local inspection:—A trying Magistrate may visit the scene of an alleged offence to test the evidence he has heard in Court, and act on the opinion he has formed from what he has seen in adjudicating between the parties. The Court ought, in every case in which it has made a local inspection, to acquaint the parties with the opinion it has formed. An immediate report of what is seen should be placed on the record and laid open to the scrutiny of the parties—Babbon Sheikh v King Emp, 37 Cal 340 (349 357), Parameshwar v King Emp, 3 P L T 347. A Magistrate, when making an inspection of the scene of offence, should invariably be accompanied by both the parties or their pleaders, so as to avoid drawing wrong inferences—Q E v Chianbasappa, Ratanlal 854, Q F v Manikkam, 19 Mad 263, Krishnappa v Sengoda 2 Weir 727. A Magistrate may make a local inspection not only for the purpose of understanding the evidence adduced in Court, but also for the purpose of testing it by the light of his own observations. If the Magistrate has seen a certain state of things in making a local inspection, he can use the testimony of his own senses for testing the veracity of the witnesses disposing before him as regards the features of the locality—Babbon Sheik v Emperor 37 Cal 340 (355, 356).

If the Sessions Judge thinks it necessary or desirable to visit the place of occurrence, he should give due notice to the parties and proceed thither with the assessors and the parties, before the close of the trial, and before the opinions of the assessors are recorded—In re Oudh Behari 1 C L R. 143, 9 Bur L T 133, Deja v A E 9 L B R 88. If no notice is given to the parties it is not competent to the Judge to take into account any observations of the locality made by him. And where the Judge made an inspection of the locality after the assessors had given their opinions the Appellate Court eliminated that portion of the judgment which related to the visit to the spot and the Judge's conclusion therefrom, and decided the case on the other materials—Deja v A E, 9 L B R 88.

During the trial of the accused persons, one of whom had made a confession, the Sessions Judge went himself to the scene of the crime accompanied by the assessors and the confessing accused, who showed him the ground and made certain additional statements by way of comment or illustration of his confession and the Judge made note of them. Held that the law does not recognize a procedure of this kind and that the Judge was clearly wrong in allowing the accused to make the additional statements and in recording them—Kesho Singh v King Emp, 20 O C 136.

When a Magistrate makes a local inspection he should without unnecessary delay record the result thereof. Where after the Magistrate had made a local inspection, he gave judgment convicting the accused and then after delivering judgment he made a note of the result of inspection in the order sheet, held that the procedure was irregular, but as the Magistrate's judgment in this case was mainly based on the documents on the record and on the oral evidence before him, and he used the local inspection only to confirm the evidence which he had already before him, the judgment of the Magistrate should not be set aside as the accused was not prejudiced by such irregularity—Bhola Nath v. Kedar 25 Cr L J 705 A I R 1925 Cal 353 But in another Calcutta case it has been held that the provisions of sub section (2) are mandatory, and therefore where the Magistrate made a local inspection and drew up a diagram and made an inspection—note thereon but the note did not form part of the record of the case, the procedure was illegal and not merely irregular, and the defect could not be cured even though there was no prejudice to the accused—Hriday Gobinda v. A. E., 52 Cal 148 40 C L J 149 25 Cr L J 1375 A I R 1924 Cal 1035 In a very recent case, however, where the local inquiry was made in the presence of both parties and the Magistrate made no memorandum of the inspection, but the petitioners' pleader who was present at the time did not ask the Magistrate to record a memorandum or to attach a memorandum to the record or to give him a copy, and was content to go on to judgment without seeing the memorandum or even ascertaining whether one was made, it was held that the petitioners could not be allowed to say that for this formal defect the proceedings should be set aside, unless they could show that the Magistrate's omission had caused them prejudice—Forbes v. Md. Ali Haidar, 42 C L J 131 26 Cr L J 1524 A I R 1925 Cal 1246 dissenting from Hriday Gobind v. A. E. supra

As to the circumstances under which a Magistrate making a local inspection is incompetent to try the case, see Note 1374 under section 526 and notes under see 556

540 Any Court may, at any stage of any inquiry, trial

Power to summon material witnesses or examine person present	or other proceeding under this Code, summon any person as a witness, or examine any person in attendance, though not summoned is a witness, or recall and re examine any person already examined, and the Court shall summon and examine or recall and re examine any such person if his evidence appears to it essential to the just decision of the case
---	---

1411 Examination of Court witnesses—This section confers very wide power upon a Court in the matter of summoning witnesses, but the wider the powers the greater is the exercise of discretion required of the Magistrate. It was not intended by this section that the Magistrate should exercise his powers at the bidding of any person, but the powers are given to prevent any danger or miscarriage of justice owing to some particular witness not having been called—12 A I J 15 This section is a supplementary provision enabling the Court to examine and in certain circumstances imposing on it the duty of examining a material witness who would not otherwise be brought before the Court

But a Magistrate misuses this power if he uses it to anticipate the defence of an accused to his prejudice, or if he uses it, after satisfying himself that the accused has a good defence, to discharge the accused instead of acquitting him. A Magistrate cannot resort to this section in order to avoid the responsibility of making up his mind as to the value of the prosecution evidence—1886 P R 11

The first part of this section is an enabling provision whereby a Court in the exercise of its discretion is empowered at any time before it actually pronounces judgment, to take further evidence either for the prosecution or for the defence and for that purpose it may adjourn the hearing of a case in order to procure the attendance of the proper persons. In many instances it happens that a new light is thrown on the case by witnesses for the defence and it then becomes desirable, sometimes in the interests of the accused himself that fresh evidence should be called for. The second part of this section is imperative. If the new evidence appears to the Court essential to the just decision of the case, the Court has no choice but to take such evidence. The new witnesses should be examined cross examined and re-examined. Where the defence case could not have been anticipated by the prosecution and it is said that witnesses are available to prove the falsity of the defence case, the Court should allow such witnesses to be examined. The accused should be given liberty to examine any further witnesses whom he wishes to examine to meet the evidence of the fresh witnesses for the prosecution—Maug Po Hmyin v A E 1 Rang 308 25 Cr I J 217

Who can summon witnesses—No Magistrate other than the one who is seized of the case can summon witnesses under this section—36 All 13

May summon—It is entirely in the discretion of the Court to call and examine witnesses and the Public Prosecutor cannot demand as a matter of right to call and examine any witness not examined before the committing Magistrate—14 All 212

At any stage—Although it is true that proper discretion has to be exercised under sec 540 still the terms of this section are extremely wide and any Court may at any stage of any inquiry trial or other proceeding summon any person as a witness if his evidence appears to it essential to the just decision of the case. This power can be exercised even after the close of the case for the prosecution and the defence—In re Chellaperumal 46 M I J 325 25 Cr I J 354. A Magistrate can, under this section receive fresh evidence after the evidence on both sides has been taken and the case adjourned for judgment in as much as the case is still pending when such evidence is being taken—24 Cal 167. Where in a criminal trial, after the evidence for the defence was closed, the Magistrate examined certain witnesses for the prosecution giving at the same time full liberty to the accused to cross-examine them the High Court declined to interfere in revision—21 O C 95. But although a Magistrate has discretion to admit evidence on behalf of either side at any stage of the inquiry or trial, still he ought not to admit if evidence for the prosecution after the prosecution has closed its case and the accused has entered upon his defence, unless there be valid reasons which must be recorded—Ganga v K E 10 A L J 383 Magistrates should exercise their discretion under this section very cautiously. Where arguments were heard and the case posted for judgment for a certain day, the examination of any further prosecution witnesses under this section cannot be justified—Notabar v Adjanath, 27 C W N 675. When the trial has been concluded so far that no witnesses remain to be examined on either side and the assessors have given their opinions, it is not open to the Sessions Judge to fish for witnesses under this section or to order for further inquiry to be made by the committing Magistrate—1892 P R 4.

1412 Who may be examined:—Under this section the Court is bound to summon and examine any witnesses whose evidence seems to be essential to the just decision of the case—6 C W N 98. The Court would not be bound to issue summonses to witnesses, under this section unless it is satisfied that their evidence will be very material—19 All 507. When the committing Magistrate refuses to examine any witnesses mentioned in the list submitted to him under Sec 211, the Sessions Judge can under this section direct those witnesses to be summoned and examined—8 All 668 14 All 212.

Magistrates are at liberty to summon witnesses who are resident outside the limits of their own districts—3 M H C R App 5.

The Magistrate may summon and examine any person as a witness. The power to summon a witness is not limited to the witnesses cited for the prosecution or the defence—1886 P R 11. A person who had been suspected and charged with an offence but was afterwards discharged by the Magistrate for want of evidence, may be examined afterwards as a witness for the prosecution—7 W R 44. Where the prosecution declines to examine any witnesses the Court may on its own initiative cause them to be produced and examine them under this section—Emp v Satyendra 37 C I J 173. Where the defence is based on Section 84 I P C, the Sessions Judge may under this section ascertain the behaviour of the prisoner during the years previous to the homicide, and if he has been kept in a lunatic asylum, record medical evidence of the facts observed there—Ratanlal 279.

But this section does not enable the Court to examine the accused as a witness, even in appeal, for an appeal is but the continuation of the original case—12 Mad 451.

1413 Right of parties to cross examine:—When a Judge thinks it necessary to examine a witness under this section, and does so the accused as well as the complainant ought to be allowed an opportunity of cross-examining the witness—5 Cal 614 24 Cal 288, Pita v A F, 47 All 147. When a witness is called by the Court under this section, both the prosecution and the accused are entitled to cross-examine him on matters relevant to the inquiry and they are not restricted to the points on which the witness has been examined by the Court—35 Cal 243 Where a witness was at first called for the defence, but afterwards the accused declined to examine him whereupon he was examined as a witness by the Court it was held that the accused would not be deprived of his right to cross-examine the witness—29 Cal 387 It is not a proper cross-examination if the defence counsel is merely allowed to suggest certain questions to the Magistrate and the Magistrate puts those questions to the witness.—Pila v. A. F. 47 All 147 26 Cr. 1 J 575

(2) If the accused in any such case is not represented by a pleader or if the Judge or Magistrate considers his personal attendance necessary, he may, if he thinks fit, and for reasons to be recorded by him, either adjourn such inquiry or trial or order that the case of such accused be taken up for trial separately

This section has been added by section 130 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. This section is designed to meet a practical difficulty which is occasionally experienced in trials involving a large number of accused persons when one or more of them is incapable of remaining at the bar.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) Subsection (1) provides for the case of an accused who is represented by a pleader, and whose personal attendance can be dispensed with. Subsection (2) provides for the case of an accused who is not so represented or whose continued personal attendance may be necessary and allows the Court in such a case either to adjourn the trial of all the accused or to order the particular accused to be tried separately.—Report of the Select Committee of 1916

1414 Jail —The term 'prison' and 'jail' do not include a police lock up. A Magistrate has no power to sentence an accused to suffer imprisonment in a police lock up.—7 L. B. R. 62

Duration of imprisonment in different jails —A Criminal Court passing a sentence of imprisonment cannot divide the imprisonment in different jails. From this section and sec 63 (1) of Act IX of 1894, and the Prisoners Act of 1871, it is clear that the power of directing imprisonment to be undergone in different jails belongs to the Local Government and the Inspector General of Prisons and not to the Court passing the sentence.—Rajmal 827

Power of Presidency Magistrate to order prisoner in jail to be brought up for examination.

jurisdiction, may issue an order to the officer in charge of the said jail requiring him to bring such prisoner in proper custody, at a time to be therein named, to the Magistrate for examination

(2) The officer so in charge, on receipt of such order, shall act in accordance therewith and shall provide for the safe custody of the prisoner during his absence from the jail for the purpose aforesaid

543 When the services of an interpreter are required by

Interpreter to be bound any Criminal Court for the interpretation of any evidence or statement, he shall be bound to state the true interpretation of such evidence or statement

1415 It is not necessary to administer oath to an interpreter—16 W R 61 The omission to administer oath to an interpreter under section 5 (b) of the Oaths Act (X of 1873) renders it necessary for the prosecution to prove that the interpretation of the deposition was made accurately, but omission to do so does not make the deposition inadmissible in evidence—36 Cal 808

544 Subject to any rules made by the Local Govern-

Expenses of complain- ment * * * any Criminal Court ants and witnesses. may, if it thinks fit, order payment, on the part of Government, of the reasonable expenses of any complainant or witness attending for the purposes of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding before such Court under this Code

Sec 544, and the Rules framed by the Local Government under this section, give a discretion to the Magistrate in the matter of expenses of complainants and witnesses, but such discretion should be exercised not arbitrarily but on sound judicial principles—9 Bom I R 353

This section empowers the Court to order that the expenses of the complainant and his witness should be paid by the Government under proper circumstances. But it does not empower the Court trying a complaint to order that the diet money of a witness produced before it should be paid by the complainant. That power is vested in the Court under the general rules of the High Court. If the Court orders such payment, in accordance with such rules, the amount cannot be recovered under the provisions of sec 547 as if it were a fine, but can be recovered by a suit in the Civil Court—Kamal v Paramasukh 29 C W N 1033

Bengal Rules —1 The Criminal Courts are authorized to pay by these rates the expenses (a) of complainants or witnesses whether for the prosecution or for the defence (i) in cases in which the prosecution is instituted or carried on by or under the orders or with the sanction of the Government, or of any Judge, Magistrate or other public officer, or in which it shall appear to the presiding officer to be directly in furtherance of the interests of the public service and (ii) in all cases entered in column 5 of the Schedule II appended to the Criminal Procedure Code as not bailable, and (b) of witnesses in all cases in which they are compelled by the Magistrate of his own motion to attend under the provisions of Section 540 of the Code

2 If a witness is summoned at the instance of the complainant or accused under section 244 of the Code, his expenses shall not be withheld from him except on the ground of failure to do his duty as a witness when summoned

3 (1) For the purpose of computing the expenses which the Criminal Courts are authorised to pay under these rules, complainants and witnesses shall be divided into two classes, namely —

(a) labourers and ordinary cultivators and other persons of similar class, and

(b) persons of better position, and the allowances shall ordinarily be a diet allowance, which may be paid to persons coming under class (b) on demand by them, and to persons in class (a) as a general rule

(2) Such allowance shall be calculated for each class at daily rates within, and never exceeding, the maximum limit specified below opposite the territorial description of the Court in which the complainant or witness appears —

	Class (a) per diem	Class (b) per diem
1 Courts in the districts of Nadia, Murshidabad, Jessore, Khulna and Midnapore	7 annas	Rs 5
II Courts in the rest of the districts in the Presidency	8 annas	Rs 5

Explanation —The rates fixed in this rule are maxima, and are intended to meet the cost of meals for one day. In every case, therefore, the Court should consider the circumstances of the individual and local conditions and grant a reduced allowance in circumstances and localities where the actual expenses fall short of the maximum rate. In cases where no meal is taken away from home, or where only one meal is taken, no allowance or a reduced allowance, as the case may be, should be granted

4 (1) Complainants and witnesses performing the journey or part of the journey by rail, steamer or train may be allowed their actual fares each way according to the class by which persons of their rank and station in life would ordinarily travel. In determining the class by which a person would ordinarily travel, regard should be had to the standard laid down in Section V of the Travelling Allowance Rules published in the Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary, December 23, 1921

(2) Charges for toll at ferries shall be allowed at the authorized rates to the extent to which they have been actually incurred

(3) Other travelling expenses will be given only when the journey could not have been performed on foot or in the case of persons whose age position and habits of life render it impossible for them to walk. In such cases in addition to the allowances permitted by the preceding rules travelling allowance shall be given at the following rates —

(a) When the journey is by any kind of conveyance by road, the actual reasonable conveyance charge up to a maximum limit of 4 annas a mile

(b) In the Districts where the usual mode of travelling is by water the actual expenses incurred for boat hire up to a maximum of Rs 2 per diem

(c) In hill districts where it is customary for respectable persons to be accompanied by a man carrying their baggage when such a person is summoned from a distance of more than five miles he may be allowed the actual cost incurred for the hire of one coolie

5 If the Court is of opinion that any person following any trade or profession or engaged in any commercial undertaking has suffered substantial loss by reason of his attendance as a witness or complainant, he may be allowed in addition to the diet money and travelling expenses permissible under the preceding rules compensation according to circumstances

6 Notwithstanding anything contained in these rules, Government servants when summoned to give evidence in their public capacity shall receive no payment from the Court on account of travelling or halting allowance but shall be entitled to draw such allowance under the Civil Service Regulations, on producing a certificate of attendance granted by the Court. Provided that—

(i) when a Government servant is required to give evidence in his private capacity at a Court situated not more than five miles from his headquarters the Court shall be authorised, where it considers it necessary, and notwithstanding anything contained in this rule to pay the actual travelling expenses incurred

(ii) when the salary of the Government servant as summoned does not exceed Rs 10 per mensem he shall be paid his expenses by the Court

7 Notwithstanding anything contained in rules 3 and 4 whenever the Court requires the expenses of a Government officer summoned as witness in his official capacity, to be deposited in advance the term expenses shall be interpreted to mean the travelling and halting allowance admissible under the Civil Service Regulations

8 Government servants when summoned to give evidence in their private capacity shall be paid by the Court such travelling allowance as is paid to persons of similar status under rules 3 and 4 but they shall not be entitled to any diet allowance nor shall they receive any travelling allowance under the Civil Service Regulations

9 Officers will be held responsible that parties of witnesses are brought to Court together as far as possible so as to save expense. The hire of more than one boat shall not be allowed in any case unless the presiding officer is satisfied that the witnesses could not be brought together

10 The number of days for which det allowance should be granted will be determined by the officer ordering payment in each case

11 For this purpose and for regulating the reimbursement of tolls paid a table shall be prepared and kept in each Court showing the distance of each thana from the sutler station and subordinate stations the number of intermediate ferries to be crossed and authorised rates of charges for tolls at each of these ferries the existence or absence of roads or waterways being also noted in the table—Calcutta Gazette 1902 Part I August 9 pp 1522 1524

545 (1) Whenever under any law in force for the time being a Criminal Court imposes a fine

Power of Court to pay or confirms in appeal revision or other expenses or compensation out of fine. or confirms in appeal revision or otherwise a sentence of fine, or a sentence of which fine forms a part the Court may, when passing judgment, order the whole or any part of the fine recovered to be applied—

(a) in defraying expenses properly incurred in the prosecution

(b) in the payment to any person of compensation for any loss or injury caused by the offence, when substantial compensation is in the opinion of the Court recoverable by such person in a Civil Court and

(c) when any person is convicted of any offence which includes theft criminal misappropriation criminal breach of trust or cheating or of having dishonestly received or retained or of having voluntarily assisted in disposing of stolen property knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen in compensating any bona fide purchaser of such property for the loss of the same if such property is restored to the possession of the person entitled thereto

(2) If the fine is imposed in a case which is subject to appeal no such payment shall be made before the period allowed for presenting the appeal has elapsed or, if an appeal be presented, before the decision of the appeal

Change—Clause (b) has been slightly amended and clause (c) newly added by section 152 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923

Clause (b) makes it clear that compensation under section 545 may be paid to any person to whom it would be recoverable in a Civil Court the payment of compensation to an innocent purchaser of stolen property is provided for in clause (c) when the property is restored to the possession of the person entitled thereto.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Criminal Court:—A Police Patel's Court is not a criminal Court and he cannot make an order under this section—Ratanlal 317

1416 Order when can be made:—An order of compensation can be made under this section when the Court imposes a fine. If the accused is discharged or acquitted and no fine is imposed no order under this section can be passed—22 Bom 717, Ratanlal 407. If the accused is convicted of theft and sentenced to imprisonment but no fine is imposed on him, the Court cannot order payment of compensation to the person whose property was stolen—Bhura v Esip 26 Cr L J 1495 (Nag). Where a person is dealt with under sec 562 and no fine is imposed on him, the Court has no power to direct him to pay compensation to the other party—Munney Vir v A E 25 Cr L J 1116 (Oudh). In a proceeding under sec 107 an order directing the accused to pay the costs of the complainant is ultra vires—Sheo Prasad v Mahangoo 23 Cr L J 76 A I R 1924 (All) 694. Where the Magistrate does not impose any fine but orders the sale of the boat of the accused and directs the compensation to be paid out of the sale proceeds the order is illegal—Ratanlal 688. Similarly, a compensation cannot be ordered to be paid out of amounts realised by forfeiture of property—Ratanlal 146. A Magistrate cannot, without imposing a substantive sentence of fine order payment of compensation to the complainant—2 Weir 715. The proper course is to impose a fine and out of the fine realised direct payment to the complainant of such amount as the Court thinks fit having regard to the provisions of this section—3 C I R 404.

Order cannot be made after judgment:—The award of compensation should be a part of the sentence and order made upon a conviction of an offence and should be founded upon a statement of the loss, damage or expenses ascertained at the trial—11 W R 53. The order should be made when passing judgment after the judgment is passed the Court becomes functus officio and has no further power to make any order under this section—U B R (1892-96) 80.

1417 Clause (a)—Expenses of the prosecution:—The award of costs should not exceed the actual costs of the complainant out of pocket—3 C L R 402.

Expenses under this section do not include such expenses as are incurred in bringing the person of the offender before the Magistrate—Ratanlal 608. Where fine is imposed on a person for destroying land marks a portion of the fine so imposed cannot be ordered to be paid to the Amin for the purpose of paying the expenses of his deputation to restore the land marks destroyed—C W R 93. Such expenses are not expenses incurred in the prosecution. Subsistence allowances and cart hire for prosecution witness cannot be ordered to be paid by the accused—U B R (1892-96) 7. Court fees and process fees are now provided for in Sec 546A.

Expenses under this section should be directed to be paid out of the amount of the fine imposed, and a separate order for such expenses improper—Ratanlal 141, 4 Bom I R 877. An order for expenses be paid in addition to the fine is illegal—24 Mad 305, 5 Bom L R 126, Ratanlal 196 But the expenses mentioned in sec 546A may be awarded in addition to fine

1418 Clause (b)—Compensation:—Amount of compensation—When compensation is awarded under this section the distinction between clauses (a) and (b) of the section should be borne in mind and the order should show whether it is made to defray the expenses of the prosecution or is compensation for injury caused by the offence committed—U B R (1892-96) 200 In awarding compensation, no sum in excess of the loss actually suffered by the complainant should be ordered to be paid Where the accused was convicted of illegally demanding money, and was fined three times the amount of the illegal receipt, and the whole of the fine was ordered to be paid to the complainant, the order was held to be improper—5 I B R 50 In a theft case, it is illegal to award compensation to the complainant in excess of the price of the property stolen from him—1913 P W R 40

Where a complainant cannot recover substantial compensation in a Civil Court compensation cannot be awarded to him under clause (b) but a sum may be awarded to him under clause (a) to defray the expenses of the prosecution—13 (r I J) 535 (Bur) Therefore a Magistrate convicting a person under sec 193 I P C can only order the expenses properly incurred in the prosecution to be defrayed out of the fine, but has no power to award compensation, because substantial compensation is not recoverable by a civil suit for perjury—14 N L R 131

Compensations which are improper—(1) Where in a petty case no pecuniary loss has been sustained by the complainant it is improper for the Court to award compensation—1 Bur S R 538 but see 2 Weir 71 where it has been held that compensation should be awarded where there is substantial cause for it even though the case be frivolous

(2) Where the accused was convicted and fined for being drunk on a public road no compensation could be awarded to the constable who in arresting the accused had to struggle with him and in so doing lost his whistle and Rs 5 because such compensation is not for injury caused by the offence committed—1 B R (1842-96) 70 A Court cannot award compensation for alleged offences other than those which form the subject of the inquiry in the case in which the order is made—Ratanlal 407

(3) Where the accused took his sister who was suffering from plague into a town without informing the authorities and was thereupon convicted for an offence under sec 280 I P C no compensation could be awarded to the Municipality on account of the expenses incurred by it in disinfecting the house into which the accused brought the case of plague—Ratanlal 958

(4) Where the offence is under the I P C no compensation can be awarded under any other special law Thus, where the accused was fined under sec 370 I P C for cutting trees in a field and out of the fine recovered a reward of Rs 5 was ordered to be paid to the complainant (under the Forest Act) for detecting the offence, it was held that the order of reward was illegal since the offence was under the I P C, and not under the Forest Act—Ratanid 873 See also Ratanid 241

1419 Who is entitled to Compensation.—Heirs of the deceased—Under the Code of 1861 compensation could be awarded to the 'person injured, and therefore it could not be paid to the heirs of the person who had been killed—10 W R 30 Under the Code of 1872 also the law was practically the same but in the 1882 Code the language of the section has been changed and no mention is specifically made of the person who is entitled to compensation Still in 12 Mad 352 and 21 Mad 74 the Judges clung to the old view and held that compensation awarded to the widow of the deceased was illegal In 36 Cal 302 and 1898 P R 17 it has been held that the heirs of the deceased are entitled to compensation The present amendment now makes it clear that compensation can be awarded to any person by whom it can be recovered in a Civil Court

In awarding compensation to the heirs of the person killed, the names of the heirs should be mentioned An order of compensation to the 'nearest heirs, without specifying who those heirs may be is bad in law—1913 P R 18

Husband of woman enticed away—Where a person is convicted of enticing away a married woman compensation may be awarded to the husband for injury done to his honour—1878 P R 14

Compensation for injury caused to another—Where the accused was charged with causing hurt to two persons but was fined for causing injuries to one of them only compensation out of the fine cannot be awarded to the other person—2 Weir 718

Refund of compensation—Where a conviction is set aside on appeal and a refund of the fine levied is ordered, and the party who has received a portion of the money as compensation refuses to refund it, the only remedy lies in a Civil Court—2 Weir 717 But in 19 All 112 and other cases it has been held that the amount may be recovered by a process under sec 547 and not necessarily by a suit in a Civil Court See Note 1422 under Sec 547

1420 Clause (C)—Bona fide purchaser of stolen property—This clause has been newly added Under the old law it was held that when a person was convicted of theft in order awarding compensation out of the fine imposed to the innocent purchaser of the stolen property was not authorised by this section—6 Mad 286 because the injury to the purchaser was not the consequence of the theft but of the invalid sale—2 Weir 716 On a conviction of theft the stolen property should be returned to the owner but it was illegal to impose a condition that a portion of the fine imposed on the accused should be paid to the innocent purchaser No such condition could be imposed on the return of property to the owner—3 Bom L R 449 When theft was proved the stolen property was ordered to be restored to the rightful owner and not to the bona fide purchaser The rule of English law protecting bona fide purchasers for value in market overt does not apply in India and on conviction of the accused the property with respect to which the theft was committed should be delivered to the original owner—20 W R 38, 1908, P R 2 See also 1893 A W N 61 In 1878 P R 21, it was held however that when stolen property was in the hands of a bona fide purchaser, the proper order to be made was to leave it in his hands and the remedy of the complainant was to secure possession of the property in a Civil Court

Under the present law, as provided by this clause, compensation will be awarded to the innocent purchaser

The clause applies only to a purchaser and not to a mortgagee or pledgee an innocent mortgagee or pledgee who has advanced money on the security of the stolen property will not be entitled to any compensation—Rationalist 631 46 Bom 833

546 At the time of awarding compensation in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter, the Court shall take into account any sum paid or recovered as compensation under Section 545

Take into account—This expression does not mean that in a subsequent civil suit, at the time of awarding damages, the amount of compensation recovered under sec 545 is to be deducted from the damages awarded in the suit—22 W R 336 (Civil)

546-A (1) If whenever any complaint of a non-cognizable offence is made to a Court, the Court, if it contacts the accused, may, in addition to the penalty imposed upon him order him to pay to the complainant—

(a) the fee (if any) paid on the petition of complaint or for the examination of the complainant, and
(b) any fees paid by the complainant for serving process on his witnesses or on the accused, and may further order that, in default of payment, the accused shall suffer simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days

(2) In order under this section may also be made by an Appellate Court, or by the High Court when exercising its powers of revision

This section has been added by section 153 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923 "It embodies the provisions of section 31 of the Court Fees Act in order that greater prominence may be given to them"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1924) The provision as to imprisonment in default of payment in sub-section (2) did not occur in the Court Fees Act Section 31 of the Court Fees Act has now been repealed by section 163 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

1421 Scope of section.—This section does not apply, and the costs of the complainant cannot be awarded, where the offence is not a non cognizable one—Murkhu v Emp., 25 Cr L J 1161 (Oudh)

If the complaint is not required by law to be stamped, the fact that the Court fee has been illegally levied by the Court will not be a ground for ordering the accused to pay the fee on conviction—8 B H C R 22. Thus, no fee is leviable on a complaint by Municipal Officers, and the accused on conviction should not be ordered to pay the same—16 Mad 423.

A proceeding under the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act is not a proceeding for an offence and if in such a proceeding the workman admits the advance and repays the same, it is not open to the Magistrate to make him pay the complainant the Court fee paid on the complaint—6 Bom L R 255.

If there are several persons convicted, the order of payment of the value of the Court fee and process fee should be joint and not several—Reg v Sankara, Bom H C Cr Ruk, 1872.

The provisions of this section are not to be controlled by section 545, unlike section 545 the expenses awarded under this section are directed to be paid in addition to fine and not out of the fine imposed—24 Mad 303.

According to the Calcutta High Court, the order of payment of Court fee is no part of the principal sentence in the case and is not to be treated as a fine added to a sentence of imprisonment so as to make the sentence appealable—20 Cal 687. But the Madras High Court holds that it is an integral part of the sentence—22 Mad 153. 5 M H C R App 28. See these cases cited in Note 1113 under section 413.

'May' — We think the Court should not be bound to exercise the power conferred by this section in trivial cases and we have accordingly used the word may — Report of the Joint Committee (1922)

547 Any money (other than a fine) payable by virtue of any order made under this Code and the method of recovery of which is not otherwise expressly provided for shall be recoverable as if it were a fine

The italicised words have been added by section 134 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. These words provide for the recovery of compensation under sec 250, of costs under sec 148 (3) and of the Court fees and process fees mentioned in sec 546A.

1422 This section only provides a summary method of realising money payable and these words cannot be stretched so as to include live stock or other goods—23 Cr L J 157 (Lah)

An order of refund of compensation paid to the complainant under sec 543 may be enforced by process under this section. It is not necessary that the accused should bring a civil suit for recovery of the money—19 All 112, 6 All 96. 7 Mad 563. 1884 P R 14. Ratnial 213. 2 Weir 717.

An order by the High Court setting aside an award of compensation (sec. 250) to the accused must be deemed to be an order directing refund of the money and such order is enforceable under this section—188, P. R. 12. See also 1903 P. R. 29.

An order directing the complainant to pay the diet money of his witness cannot be enforced under this section: the remedy of the witness to recover the money is by a civil suit—Kamal v. Paramsukh 29 C. W. N. 1033 (see this case cited under sec. 544).

548 If any person affected by a judgment or order passed by a Criminal Court desires to have a copy of the Judge's charge to the jury or of any order or deposition or other part of the record, he shall, on applying for such copy, be furnished therewith.

Provided that he pays for the same, unless the Court, for some special reason, thinks fit to furnish it free of cost.

1423 Affected by judgment order etc.—A complainant whose complaint is dismissed is a person affected by the order of dismissal and therefore he is entitled to ask for a copy of the Magistrate's order of discharge—Ratanlal 305 8 Cal. 166. But a 'charge' is not an order of a Criminal Court by which an accused person can be said to be affected within the meaning of this section so as to entitle him to copies of deposition where the trial has not proceeded beyond the frame of charge and the examination of the prosecution witnesses—1892 A. W. N. 140.

Accused entitled to copies.—A prisoner is entitled to copies of all documents for which he applies and which he thinks necessary for his defence and a Magistrate will be acting contrary to law in determining whether such copies are necessary or not—14 W. R. 77.

549 (1) The Governor General in Council may make rules, consistent with this Code and the Army Act or any similar law for the time being in force, as to the cases in which persons subject to military law shall be tried by a Court to which this Code applies, or by Court martial, and when any person is brought before a Magistrate and charged with an offence for which he is liable under the Army Act S. 41, to be tried by a Court martial, such Magistrate shall have regard to such rules, and shall in proper cases deliver him together with a statement of the offence of which he is accused, to the commanding officer of the regiment, corps or detachment to which he belongs or to the commanding officer of the nearest military station, for the purpose of being tried by Court martial.

(2) Every Magistrate shall, on receiving a written application for that purpose by the commanding officer of any body of troops stationed or employed at any such place, use his utmost endeavours to apprehend and secure any person accused of such offence

550 Any police officer may seize any property which may be alleged or suspected to have been stolen, or which may be found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence. Such police-officer, if subordinate to the officer in charge of a police-station, shall forthwith report the seizure to that officer

Powers to Police to seize property suspected to be stolen.

1424 If a Police officer has reason to suspect certain property to be stolen he must himself seize the property. He cannot order any other person to detain the same—16 O. C. 371

This section gives the Police officer power to seize only the property suspected to be stolen but it does not empower him to seize any other property which is mixed with the stolen one—1909 P. W. R. 14

551 Police-officers superior in rank to an officer in charge of a police station may exercise the same powers, throughout the local area to which they are appointed, as may be exercised by such officer within the limits of his station

Powers of superior officers of Police

552 Upon complaint made to a Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate on oath of the abduction or unlawful detention of a woman, or of a female child under the age of sixteen years, for any unlawful purpose, he may make an order for the immediate restoration of such woman to her liberty, or of such female child to her husband, parent, guardian or other person having the lawful charge of such child, and may compel compliance with such order using such force as may be necessary

Power to compel restoration of abducted females.

Change:—The word sixteen has been substituted for "fourteen" by the Criminal Law Amendment Act VIII of 1924, for the purpose of affording greater protection to girls. By the same Act, the age limit has been raised from sixteen to eighteen in sections 372 and 373 of the Criminal Code.

1425 Unlawful detention:—The detention of a child in a missionary school against the will of her parent or guardian with a view that she should be brought up in a religion which such parent or child disapproved of and the adoption of which would not only involve a total change in the child's mode of life, but would also deprive the parent or guardian of any control in the education or bringing up of the child, would amount to unlawful detention—16 Cal 487

The detention of a girl by the father in his house against the will of her husband does not amount to unlawful detention, unless it is shown that the detention was contrary to the wish of the girl—15 Cr I J 712 (Cal) If a woman is residing with her relatives who are aiding her in endeavouring to procure a divorce, such detention is not unlawful—2 Weir 724

Unlawful purpose—A Magistrate can act under this section when both the detention and the purpose are unlawful In 16 Cal 487 cited above the detention was held to be unlawful, but the purpose was not Unlawful purpose means immoral purpose This section applies to female children only and not to children generally this shows that the purpose has some special reference to the sex of the person against whom it is entertained In other words the section has reference to adultery, concubinage, prostitution, deflowering or other similar purposes But it certainly does not include the detention of a Hindu girl in a Christian Institution in order that she may be a Christian or the detention of a Christian child in a Muhammadan Institution in order that she may be a Mahomedan—16 Cal 487, see also 4 Bom L R 609

1426 Procedure—It is the District Magistrate who alone has jurisdiction to entertain a complaint and make an order under this section He has no power to transfer such a case to a Sub-Magistrate and that Magistrate would have no jurisdiction therein—Ratanlal 963

An application under this section does not necessarily allege the commission of an offence and is not a complaint consequently the provisions of Secs 200 and 203 do not apply to proceedings under this section—4 Bom L R 609

Where a Magistrate has reason to believe that a woman is unlawfully detained but cannot find who so detains her, the proper course is for the Magistrate to issue an order to have the woman brought before him and to examine her it would be illegal for the Magistrate in such a case to order the restoration of the woman to liberty without any finding that she was unlawfully detained by any one and without ordering any one to restore her to liberty—2 Weir 724

An application to get back a girl from her father's custody on the allegation that she is the wife of the applicant must be made to a Civil Court and not to the Magistrate under this section—10 C W N 1225

553 (1) Whenever any person causes a police-officer to arrest another person in a presidency-town, if it appears to the Magistrate by whom the case is heard that there was compensation to persons groundlessly given in charge in Presidency-town

no sufficient ground for causing such arrest, the Magistrate may award such compensation, not exceeding fifty rupees to be paid by the person so causing the arrest to the person so arrested, for his loss of time and expenses in the matter, as the Magistrate thinks fit

(2) In such cases, if more persons than one are arrested, the Magistrate may, in like manner, award to each of them such compensation, not exceeding fifty rupees, as such Magistrate thinks fit

(3) All compensation awarded under this section may be recovered as if it were a fine, and if it cannot be so recovered, the person by whom it is payable shall be sentenced to simple imprisonment for such term not exceeding thirty days as the Magistrate directs, unless such sum is sooner paid

554 (1) With the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, the High Court at Fort William and with the previous sanction of the Local Government, any other High Court established by Royal Charter may, from time to time, make rules for the inspection of the records of subordinate Courts

(2) Every High Court not established by Royal Charter may from time to time, and with the previous sanction of the Local Government,—

Power of other High Courts to make rules for other purposes

(a) make rules for keeping all books, entries and accounts to be kept in all Criminal Courts subordinate to it and for the preparation and transmission of any returns or statements to be prepared and submitted by such Courts

(b) frame forms for every proceeding in the said Courts for which it thinks that a form should be provided,

(c) makes rules for regulating its own practice and proceedings and the practice and proceedings of all Criminal Courts subordinate to it, and

(d) make rules for regulating the execution of warrants issued under this Code for the levy of fines,

Provided that the rules and forms made and framed under this section shall not be inconsistent with this Code or any other law in force for the time being

(2) All rules made under this section shall be published in the local official Gazette

555 Subject to the power conferred by S 554 and by S 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 the forms set forth in the fifth schedule, with such variation as the circumstances of each case require may be used for the respective purposes therein mentioned and if used shall be sufficient

1427 With such variation --There being no prescribed form of warrant under section 100 a Magistrate who had to issue one under that section adapted a form under sec 96 to the provision of sec 100 by altering the figures and by drawing up the warrant in terms required by sec 100. It was held that the warrant was perfectly legal—45 Cal 203. See also Note 203 under sec 100

556 No Judge or Magistrate shall, except with the permission of the Court to which an appeal lies from his Court try or commit for trial any case to or in which he is a party or personally interested, and no Judge or Magistrate shall hear in appeal from any judgment or order passed or made by himself

Case in which Judge or Magistrate is personally interested.

Explanation—A Judge or Magistrate shall not be deemed a party, or personally interested, within the meaning of this section, to or in any case by reason only that he is a Municipal Commissioner or otherwise concerned therein a public servant or by reason only that he has viewed the place in which an offence is alleged to have been committed or any other place in which any other transaction material to the case is alleged to have occurred and made an inquiry in connection with the case

A, as Collector upon consideration of information furnished to him, directs the prosecution of B for a breach of the Excise Laws. A is disqualified from trying this case as a Magistrate

1428 Principle and scope of section —It is one of the oldest and plainest rules of justice and common sense that no man shall sit as a Judge in a case in which he has a distinct and substantial interest—2 Cal 23 The law in laying down the strict rule that if a Judge has any legal interest in the decision of the case he is disqualified from trying it, however small that interest may be had regard not so much to the motives which might be supposed to bias the Judge as to the susceptibilities of the litigant parties. One important object at all events, is to clear away every thing which might engender suspicion and distrust in the tribunal and to promote the feelings of confidence in the administration of justice which is so essential to social order and security.—Sergeant v Dale 2 Q B D 558 20 Cal 857

A Magistrate who is disqualified under this section to try a case is not a Court of competent jurisdiction in respect to that case, and if he tries that case the defect is not cured by sec 537—23 Cal 328 Nor will the defect be cured by any consent or waiver on the part of the accused—2 Cal 23 32 All 635 9 A I R 81 7 A I J 740 1 S I R 98 4 Lah I J 452

Try or commit any case—The expression try any case is wide enough to include any stage of a judicial proceeding in which the guilt or innocence of the accused is finally adjudicated upon—5 S I R 137 Thus he cannot hear in appeal in the case. The word try is comprehensive enough to include the hearing of an appeal—23 Cal 44 17 C W N 111, 1899 A W N 4 4 Ilt I J 452 9 N I R 81 1 S I R 98 He is also debarred from interfering in revision in the case—1905 L B R (Cr P C) 57 He cannot direct further inquiry under sec 436—5 S I R 137 (Contra—27 All 25)

But a Magistrate can initiate proceedings even though he is personally interested in the case—2 Cal 23 Though a Magistrate is disqualified under this section from trying a case on account of personal interest, he is not, on that account debarred from granting a permission to another Magistrate to proceed with the case—20 All 181 The Magistrate is not debarred from taking cognizance of the case even though he has taken some part in the institution of the proceedings—Oullah v Beni Madhab 50 Cal 135

If a Magistrate considers that he is disqualified from trying a case, and the case is of a petty nature he ought not to commit it to the Sessions, but should move the District Magistrate to transfer it to some other Magistrate—Fimp v Ram Jatau 21 A I J 420 23 Cr I J 665 A I R 1924 All 185

In which he is a party—Where a Magistrate while travelling in a railway carriage requested the accused who were his fellow passengers to desist from smoking and on their contemptuously refusing to do so, arrested and subsequently tried and convicted them it was held that the Magistrate was legally and morally disqualified from exercising his judicial functions in relation to the offences imputed—Ratanlal 339 So also, a Magistrate, who was one of the persons obstructed by the accused driving on the wrong side of the road, could not himself try the accused for offences under secs 28 and 29 of the Bombay Act VII of 1867—Ratanlal 3

1429 Personally interested:—The words 'personally interested' do not imply mere intellectual interest but something of the nature of an expectation of advantage to be gained, or of a loss or some disadvantage to be avoided by the person who is said to be interested in the case—8 Bom 1 R 947 Thus a public officer whose duty it is to see that the law is obeyed cannot merely by reason of that duty, be said to be personally interested in the prosecution and trial of an offender—15 All 192 The words personally interested cannot refer to any remote interest in the matter but must refer to some particular and immediate personal interest in the case and its result—15 All 192 The law does not measure the amount of interest which a Judge possesses. If he has any legal interest in the decision of the question one way, he is disqualified no matter how small the interest may be—Sergeant v Dale 2 Q B D 558 14 N I R 14

Instances —(1) Taking part in arrest of accused and Police proceedings —Where the Magistrate took an active part in dispersing the unlawful assembly and pursuing the members and arresting them and subsequently he initiated proceedings against the accused and himself tried and convicted them it was held that the Magistrate should not have tried the case himself as he had initiated and directed the whole proceedings and could be said to have been personally interested in them—20 Cal 857 Where the investigation of the Police at the preliminary inquiry was directed by a Magistrate to a considerable degree and where the Magistrate himself traced some of the accused and ordered their arrest, he was disqualified from trying the case—23 Cal 328 A Magistrate who takes more than a formal part in a police investigation should not try the case—424 Po v Fmp 4 Bur 1 J 65 26 Cr I J 1317, 2 L B R 209

(2) Magistrate being a witness —A Magistrate cannot in a case in which he is the sole Judge of law and fact, be a competent witness. The trial and conviction by a Magistrate of an accused in a case wherein he (the Magistrate) is himself a witness is illegal—2 Cal 405, 20 Cr I J 45 (Pat) 1904 P I R 21 A Magistrate cannot import matters (of personal knowledge) into his judgment not stated on oath before the Court in the presence of the accused. If he does so, he makes himself a witness in the case and renders himself incompetent to try it—20 Cr I J 45 (Pat) 20 Cal 85—A Magistrate who becomes aware of some of the facts in connection with a case by his taking some part, or at any rate by being present at a search made by the police during the investigation, should not try the case but transfer it to some other Magistrate—5 C W N 804 An officer should not try an offence under sec 174 I P C, in his capacity as a Magistrate, when the offence has been committed before him in his capacity as a Settlement Officer—2 All 405 But if during the course of the trial the Magistrate himself made a statement on oath which he recorded and permitted himself to be cross-examined and re-examined it was held that he was not incompetent to try the case—27 All 13

(3) Pecuniary interest —A Magistrate who is a shareholder of the company which is the complainant in the case is disqualified from trying the case. In such cases it is not necessary to inquire whether there was any real or substantial ground for suspecting bias on his part—20 Bom 502 See also 2 Cal 23 A Magistrate should not entertain a criminal case in which persons indebted to him are concerned either as complainant or as accused—C P Cr Cr Part II, No 54

(4) Magistrate being servant of complainant—A Magistrate who is a servant of the corporation is deemed to have such an interest in the result of a prosecution by the corporation as to disqualify him from trying the case—7 Cal 322 10 Cal 194

(5) Magistrate being master of complainant—The mere fact that the Magistrate is the master of the complainant who is complaining on his own account merely does not deprive the Magistrate of his jurisdiction, though in such a case it should generally be expedient for him to refer the complainant to some other Magistrate—9 Bom 172 But where the complainant was the servant of the Magistrate and it appeared that the Magistrate's wife was driving in the dog cart for passing which the accused was charged with rash and negligent driving the Magistrate was held to be personally interested and he ought not to try the case—14 Bom 572

(6) Magistrate being Agent of Court of Wards—The mere fact that the District Magistrate is, in his capacity as Collector concerned in the management of an estate under the Court of Wards does not disqualify him from trying a case of theft arising out of a dispute between the landlord and tenant in an estate under the management of the Court of Wards—46 Cal 834, 28 Cal 297 But where the manager of an estate under the Court of Wards, who was also appointed the Sub divisional Officer, drew up proceedings under sec 145 against one who disputed the possession of a piece of land, in which the estate claimed an interest and the Magistrate refused an application for transfer of the case it was held that the Magistrate showed a lack of appreciation of ordinary principles which should guide judicial officers in matters of this kind—9 C W N cxxxvi

1430 Sanctioning or directing prosecution:—See notes under sec 487 A Magistrate who takes a mere formal part in the prosecution cannot be said to direct the prosecution and is not therefore deprived of his jurisdiction in the case Thus a Magistrate who simply issued process as officer-in-charge of the Sudder sub division is not precluded from hearing an appeal in the case—36 Cal 869 in Bur I 1 150 Where a Magistrate under the Excise Act lays before the Inspector of Police certain information regarding the conduct of the accused in his dealings in opium and directs the said Inspector to make an inquiry on the basis of that information, and a prosecution is subsequently instituted in the ordinary course by the investigating Police Officer, held that the Magistrate cannot be said to have such connection with the proceedings antecedent to the prosecution as would debar him from trying the accused—11 A L J 652 Where a Deputy Tahsildar made a report to the Tahsildar about certain offences and the Tahsildar in his turn reported the matter to the Deputy Magistrate, who authorised the Tahsildar to prosecute the accused, and the Tahsildar then lodged a complaint before the Deputy Magistrate who tried the case, held that the Deputy Magistrate was not disqualified, he merely authorised the prosecution and not directed it. A distinction should be drawn between authorisation and direction of prosecution—24 Mad 238. Where a prosecution is by a Town Committee, the mere fact that the Magistrate had as the President of the Town Committee sanctioned the prosecution cannot be said to give the Magistrate any personal interest in the proceedings, and the Magistrate is competent to try the case himself. But nevertheless it is not desirable that he should try the case when other Magistrates are available—Gopi Chand v. K. F., 1 Rang, 517. A Sessions Judge is not prohibited in law from hearing an appeal from a conviction in a case in which as an Insolvency Judge, on the application of a creditor, he had allowed the prosecution to proceed—Srikrishna v. Emp., 21 A. L. J. 90. But where a District Magistrate who as Inspector of factories ordered an inquiry to be made and in the same capacity directed the prosecution of the accused for an offence under the Factories Act, he was disqualified from trying the case—1 Lah 35. Where a Cantonment Magistrate in his capacity as secretary of the Cantonment Committee ordered the prosecution of the accused in respect of an alleged building in contravention of the cantonment rules and proceeded to try the case, held that the case ought to be transferred to another Magistrate—Hira Lal v. Emp. 20 A. L. J. 911. A Magistrate, who upon information furnished to him directs the issue of a warrant under sec. 6 of the Gambling Act, is disqualified from trying the case—13 Bur 1 T 154. Where after the close of a trial, the trying Magistrate orders the Police to send up a charge sheet in respect of a witness for the prosecution and upon the Police doing so, tries that person and convicts him, held that the Magistrate having directed the prosecution of the accused is not competent to hold the trial—23 Bom L. R. 842.

1431 Explanation.—Under the Explanation, a Magistrate is not deemed to be a party or personally interested in any case by reason of the fact that he is a Municipal Commissioner or otherwise concerned therein in a public capacity. But if in addition to a connection of that sort, he directs the prosecution of a person for an offence, he is disqualified from trying the case, not by reason of the fact that he is Municipal Commissioner or publicly connected with the case, but by reason of the further fact that he has constituted himself the prosecutor—5 S. F. R. 137, 1899. A. W. N. 74, 23 Bom L. R. 842. Thus, the mere fact that the Magistrate might happen to be a Municipal Commissioner does not necessarily disqualify him from holding a trial in which some Municipal matter was involved. But it is a very different matter when it is found that the Magistrate is practically one of the prosecutors and the Judge—10 Cal 1030. A Municipal Commissioner in his capacity as such Commissioner had invited the attention of the Executive Officer of the Municipality to the manner in which a certain By-law of the Municipality was being disregarded by the accused. The Executive Officer called the attention of the Health officer to the matter and the Health officer instituted the prosecution after satisfying himself that there were good prima facie grounds for believing that the By-law was being broken and that the interests of the public health required its enforcement. The case was tried by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates of which the Municipal Commissioner was a member, and ended in a conviction.

vicium Held that the trial and conviction were not illegal, because the Municipal Commissioner was not a party to the prosecution nor did he cause it to be instituted—Nanoo v Emp 24 Cr L J 135 (All) The mere fact that the Magistrate is the Vice President of the Municipality and Chairman of the Managing Committee does not disqualify him from trying an offence against the Municipality But if he has taken any part in promoting the prosecution as for instance, by concurring in sanctioning it at a meeting of the Managing Committee or otherwise he would be disqualified—18 Bom 422 1896 P R 5 So also, if the Magistrate is the Vice-President of a Municipal Committee and was present at the meeting in which the resolution was passed for the disobedience of which the accused is prosecuted the Magistrate is debarred from trying the case—23 Cr L J 704 (Lah) A Magistrate does not, by reason of his being a member of a sub-committee of a Municipal Board, become personally interested so as to be disentitled to try the accused for an offence against the Municipal Board—27 All 25 But if he presides at a meeting of the Municipal Board which directs the prosecution of the accused, he becomes disqualified—14 N L R 14 5 S L R 137 20 Cr L J 244 (Nag) It may be that he did not speak or vote at the meeting but the fact remains that he attended the meeting where the question was debated and the prosecution ordered, and he has therefore placed himself personally to some extent in the position of a prosecutor—5 S L R 137 Where the Municipal Committee resolved to institute criminal proceedings against the accused and directed the Secretary to take necessary steps, and the Secretary forwarded a copy of the resolution to the Joint Magistrate (who was no other than the Secretary himself) who took proceedings and tried the accused it was held that the trial was not only illegal but a mere show—1883 A W N 181 The District Magistrate is not disqualified from hearing the appeal merely because he happens to be the Chairman of the Municipal Board—1899 A W N 74 Contra—23 Cal 44 and 15 Mad 83 where it was held that the very fact that the Chairman of the Municipality was the Magistrate, disqualified him from trying the offence, and the Explanation did not apply to his case

In 10 Cal 194 a distinction has been drawn between a salaried officer of a Corporation and an Honorary Officer, and it has been held that the Explanation does not apply to a salaried officer A salaried officer of the Corporation is by reason of the very fact that he is a servant of the Corporation, precluded from trying any Municipal case as a Magistrate But a gentleman who without remuneration is merely discharging a public and honorary office, and who has no personal interest in the proceedings of the Municipality, may well be supposed to be free from that bias which the jealousy of the law presumes in other persons more immediately interested

Concerned therein in a public capacity—A Magistrate in charge of opium and excise administration of a district is not personally interested in the observation of the provisions of the Opium Act, merely because it is his duty to see the law relating to sale of opium enforced and maintained in his district he is therefore not precluded from exercising jurisdiction in respect of offences against the said Act—15 All 192, 5 A L J

he merely authorised the prosecution and not directed it. A distinction should be drawn between authorisation and direction of prosecution—24 Mad 238. Where a prosecution is by a Town Committee, the mere fact that the Magistrate had as the President of the Town Committee sanctioned the prosecution cannot be said to give the Magistrate any personal interest in the proceedings, and the Magistrate is competent to try the case himself. But nevertheless it is not desirable that he should try the case when other Magistrates are available—Gopi Chand v K F, 1 Rang, 517. A Sessions Judge is not prohibited in law from hearing an appeal from a conviction in a case in which he is an Insolvency Judge, on the application of a creditor, he had allowed the prosecution to proceed—Srikrishna v Emp, 21 A L J 90. But where a District Magistrate who is Inspector of factories ordered an inquiry to be made and in the same capacity directed the prosecution of the accused for an offence under the Factories Act, he was disqualified from trying the case—1 Lah 35. Where a Cantonment Magistrate in his capacity as secretary of the Cantonment Committee ordered the prosecution of the accused in respect of an alleged building in contravention of the cantonment rules, and proceeded to try the case, held that the case ought to be transferred to another Magistrate—Hira Lal v Emp, 20 A L J 911. A Magistrate, who upon information furnished to him directs the issue of a warrant under sec 6 of the Gambling Act, is disqualified from trying the case—13 Bur 1 T 154. Where after the close of a trial, the trying Magistrate orders the Police to send up a charge sheet in respect of a witness for the prosecution and upon the Police doing so, tries that person and convicts him held that the Magistrate having directed the prosecution of the accused is not competent to hold the trial—23 Bom L R 842.

1431 Explanation:—Under the Explanation, a Magistrate is not deemed to be a party or personally interested in any case by reason of the fact that he is a Municipal Commissioner or otherwise concerned therein in a public capacity. But if in addition to a connection of that sort, he directs the prosecution of a person for an offence, he is disqualified from trying the case, not by reason of the fact that he is Municipal Commissioner or publicly connected with the case, but by reason of the further fact that he has constituted himself the prosecutor—5 S L R 137, 1899 A W N 74, 23 Bom L R 842. Thus, the mere fact that the Magistrate might happen to be a Municipal Commissioner does not necessarily disqualify him from holding a trial in which some Municipal matter was involved. But it is a very different matter when it is found that the Magistrate is practically one of the prosecutors and the Judge—to Cr 1030. A Municipal Commissioner in his capacity as such Commissioner had invited the attention of the Executive Officer of the Municipality to the manner in which a certain Byelaw of the Municipality was being disregarded by the accused. The case was tried by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates of which the Municipal Commissioner was a member, and ended in a conv

Viction Held that the trial and conviction were not illegal, because the Municipal Commissioner was not a party to the prosecution nor did he cause it to be instituted—Vanoo v Fmp 24 Cr L J 135 (All) The mere fact that the Magistrate is the Vice President of the Municipality and Chairman of the Managing Committee does not disqualify him from trying an offence against the Municipality But if he has taken any part in promoting the prosecution as for instance by concurring in sanctioning it at a meeting of the Managing Committee or otherwise, he would be disqualified—18 Bom 422 1896 P R 5 So also if the Magistrate is the Vice President of a Municipal Committee and was present at the meeting in which the resolution was passed for the disobedience of which the accused is prosecuted the Magistrate is debarred from trying the case—23 Cr L J 704 (Lah) A Magistrate does not, by reason of his being a member of a sub-committee of a Municipal Board become personally interested so as to be disentitled to try the accused for an offence against the Municipal Board—27 All 25 But if he presides at a meeting of the Municipal Board which directs the prosecution of the accused, he becomes disqualified—14 N L R 14 5 S L R 13—20 Cr L J 244 (Nag) It may be that he did not speak or vote at the meeting but the fact remains that he attended the meeting where the question was debated and the prosecution ordered and he has therefore placed himself personally to some extent in the position of a prosecutor—5 S L R 137 Where the Municipal Committee resolved to institute criminal proceedings against the accused and directed the Secretary to take necessary steps, and the Secretary forwarded a copy of the resolution to the Joint Magistrate (who was no other than the Secretary himself) who took proceedings and tried the accused, it was held that the trial was not only illegal but a mere show—1883 A W N 181 The District Magistrate is not disqualified from hearing the appeal merely because he happens to be the Chairman of the Municipal Board—1899 A W N 74 Contra—23 Cal 44 and 15 Mad 83 where it was held that the very fact that the Chairman of the Municipality was the Magistrate, disqualified him from trying the offence, and the Explanation did not apply to his case

In 10 Cal 194 a distinction has been drawn between a salaried officer of a Corporation and an Honorary Officer, and it has been held that the Explanation does not apply to a salaried officer A salaried officer of the Corporation is, by reason of the very fact that he is a servant of the Corporation, precluded from trying any Municipal case as a Magistrate But a gentleman who without remuneration is merely discharging a public and honorary office, and who has no personal interest in the proceedings of the Municipality, may well be supposed to be free from that bias which the jealousy of the law presumes in other persons more immediately interested

Concerned therein in a public capacity—A Magistrate in charge of opium and excise administration of a district is not personally interested in the observation of the provisions of the Opium Act, merely because it is his duty to see the law relating to sale of opium enforced and maintained in his district, he is therefore not precluded from exercising jurisdiction in respect of offences against the said Act—15 All 192, 5

357 A District Magistrate is not precluded under this section from trying an offence under the Police Act, merely because he is the head of the Police—22 All 140 The fact that a District Magistrate is also the District Superintendent of Police does not of itself disqualify him from trying or inquiring into cases investigated by the Police of his district—2 I B R 209 But if the Magistrate in his public capacity directs the prosecution he is disqualified Thus, where the Magistrate as president of the octroi sub-committee directed the prosecution of an accused for evading the payment of octroi, the Magistrate was debarred from trying the case even though the accused had consented to be so tried—32 All 635

1432 Local inspection:—Under the Code of 1882, it was held that a Magistrate making a personal inspection of the locus in quo where the offence was committed, made himself a witness in the case and thereby rendered himself incompetent to try the case—Q E v Muckam, 19 Mad 263, Grish Chander v Q F, 20 Cal 857, Hari Kishore v Abdul 21 Cal 920 But now the law has been changed by the addition of the latter part of the Explanation

A Magistrate is competent to inspect personally a locality in order to test the connection of the evidence and the plans of the locality submitted in the case Such an inspection would not disqualify him from trying the case—1901 P R 13 Babbon v A F 37 Cal 340 (355) Where the Magistrate inspected the locus in quo and stated in his judgment what he saw when he inspected, he was not disqualified—2 Weir 728 Where a Magistrate made a local inspection in the presence of both the parties and the pleaders, and stated in his judgment some facts which he then observed, it was held that the Magistrate was competent to convict the accused persons—2 Weir 727 Where the Judge personally visited the scene of offence with the prosecution witnesses and the vakil for the accused, and acting under the powers vested in him under section 540 recalled some of the prosecution witnesses and examined them in such a way as to put on record the most important points observed at the inspection, and the accused were given full opportunity of cross-examining those witnesses with reference to the facts relating to the personal inspection held that it was open to the Judge to make the inspection, and that he did not act illegally or with material irregularity in using the results of his inspection in his disposal of the case—In re Thachroth Hydross 45 M L J 279 It is not only not objectionable but in many cases highly advisable that a Magistrate trying a criminal case should view the place in order to understand fully the bearing of the evidence given in Court But if he does so, he should be careful not to allow any one on either side to say anything to him which might prejudice his mind one way or the other—Hari Rai v Emperor 39 Cal 476 A local inspection should only be made for the purpose of enabling the Magistrate to understand better the evidence adduced before him (see sec 539B) and it must be strictly confined to that—Q F v Manickam 19 Mad 263 (266), Krishnappa v Sengoda 2 Weir 727 When the law allows a view of the locality, every possible precaution should be taken that such a view should be nothing but a view of the local features Where the Magistrate did much more than viewing the plate for the purpose of understanding and testing the evidence, and imported into his judgment matters of opinion and inference based upon circumstances not on the record, held that there was an error of procedure necessitating a retrial before another Magistrate—Babbon Sheik v Emperor 37 Cal 340 (357) Where a Magistrate in visiting the scene of occurrence not merely noted the various features of importance but imported into his judgment what he could not have possibly noted from the locality or from anything connected therewith (e g the position of the accused and of other men at the time of the alleged occurrence) he exceeded the proper limits of his discretion in making the inspection and thus disqualified himself from trying the case—3 C W N 607 See also Note 1374 under sec 526

As to whether the holding of an inquiry under sec 202 disqualifies the Magistrate from trying the case, see Note 670 under sec 202

(3) When there is any doubt as to who is the successor in office of any Additional or Assistant Sessions Judge, the Sessions Judge shall determine by order in writing the Judge who shall for the purposes of this Code or of any proceedings or order thereunder be deemed to be the successor in office of such Additional or Assistant Sessions Judge

This section has been redrafted by section 155 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The old section stood as follows —

559 All powers conferred by this Code on the Governor General in Council or on the Local Government may be exercised from time to time as occasion requires

But this section was unnecessary, because its provisions are covered by section 14 of the General Clauses Act. The old section has therefore been omitted and an entirely different section has been framed in its place.

A new section is intended to be inserted providing for the powers of Judges and Magistrates being exercised by their successors-in-office and the determination by the Chief Presidency or District Magistrate of the person to be deemed the successor-in-office of a Subordinate Magistrate in cases of doubt. —Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

560 A public servant having any duty to perform in connection with the sale of any property under this Code shall not purchase or bid for the property

Officers concerned in sales not to purchase or bid for property

561 (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Code, no Magistrate except a Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate shall—

Special provisions with respect to offence of rape by a husband

(a) take cognizance of the offence of rape where the sexual intercourse was by a man with his wife, or

(b) commit the man for trial for the offence

(2) And, notwithstanding anything in this Code, if a Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate deems it necessary to direct an investigation by a police officer, with respect to such an offence as is referred to in sub section (1), no police-officer of a rank below that of police inspector shall be employed either to make, or to take part in, the investigation

Clause (a)—Where the offence referred to in this clause was taken cognizance of by the District Magistrate, the fact that the investigation into the offence had been conducted by a subordinate Police officer was not a material irregularity which would vitiate the proceedings—1895 A W N 9

561A Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under this Code, or to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice

1433A This section has been added by section 156 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923 'By this section it is proposed to give statutory recognition to the inherent powers of the High Court—a principle which is already well recognized—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

Or otherwise to secure the ends of justice—We have slightly elaborated the provisions of this clause. We understand that a High Court has recently held [44 All 401] that it had no power to direct the expunging of objectionable matter from a record. We think it desirable that it should be made clear that this clause is intended to meet such a case—Report of the Joint Committee (1922) See Note 1214 under sec 439

In the exercise of its inherent powers under this section, the High Court cannot pass any order which would conflict with the provisions of the Code. Thus the High Court has no jurisdiction to make an order for the restoration of attached property, where the application is made beyond the period prescribed in sec 89—In re Gurunath 26 Bom L R 719 25 Cr L J 1293

The powers conferred on the High Court under this section are powers which must be found within the Crim Pro Code. This section confers no new powers on the High Court, because the Court cannot, by invoking its inherent powers, extend the powers given to it by statute. Thus, the High Court has no power to appoint a receiver pending the disposal of a revision petition against an order passed under section 143—Varudayya v Shanmuga Sundara 49 M L J 593 See this case cited in Note 421 under sec 145

This section does not confer on a High Court the power to review its own judgment—Va ar Mohd v Hara Singh 26 P L R 616 27 Cr L J 23 Id Sadiq v Emp 7 Lah L J 108 26 Cr L J 1169

But the inherent power of the High Court under this section can be exercised to stay a criminal proceeding till the disposal of a civil pending in a Civil Court relating to the same dispute—Kanhayalal Bhagwan Das, 23 A L J 956 26 Cr L J 1483

562 In any case in which a person is convicted of theft, theft in a building, dishonest misappropriation, cheating or any other offence under the Indian Penal Code punishable with not more than two years' imprisonment before any Court, and, no previous conviction is proved against him, if it appears to the Court before whom he is so convicted, that regard being had to the youth, character and antecedents of the offender, to the trivial nature of the offence and to any extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed, it is expedient that the offender should be released on probation of good conduct, the Court may, instead of sentencing him at once to any punishment, direct that he be released on his entering into a bond, with or without sureties, and during such period (not exceeding one year) as the Court may direct, to appear and receive sentence when called upon, and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour

562 (1) When any person not under twenty-one years of age is convicted of an offence punishable with imprisonment for not more than seven years, or when any person under twenty-one years of age or any woman is convicted of an offence not punishable with death or transportation for life and no previous conviction is proved against the offender, if it appears to the Court before which he is convicted, regard being had to the age, character or antecedents of the offender, * * * and to the circumstances in which the offence was committed, that it is expedient that the offender should be released on probation of good conduct, the Court may, instead of sentencing him at once to any punishment direct that he be released on his entering into a bond, with or without sureties, to appear and receive sentence when called upon during such period (not exceeding three years) as the Court may direct, and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour

Provided that, where any first offender is convicted by a Magistrate of the third class, or a Magistrate of the second class not specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf, and the Magistrate is of opinion that the power conferred by this section should be exercised, he shall record his opinion to that effect, and submit the proceedings to a Magistrate of the first class or Subdivisional Magistrate, forwarding the accused to, or taking bail for his appearance before, such Magistrate, who shall dispose of the case in manner provided by section 380

(1) In any case in which a person is convicted of theft, theft in a building dishonest misappropriation cheating, or any other offence under the Indian Penal Code, punishable with not more than two years imprisonment, and no previous conviction is proved against him the Court before whom he is so convicted may, if it thinks fit having regard to the age, character, antecedents or physical or mental condition of the offender and to the trivial nature of the offence or to any extenuating circumstances under which the offence was committed instead of sentencing him to any punishment release him after due admonition

(2) An order under this section may be made by any Appellate Court or by the High Court when exercising its power of revision

(3) When an order has been made under this section in respect of any offender, the High Court may on appeal when there is a right of appeal to such Court or when exercising its powers of revision, set aside such order and in lieu thereof pass sentence on such offender according to law

Provided that the High Court shall not under this subsection inflict a greater punishment than might have been inflicted by the Court by which the offender was convicted

(4) The provisions of Sections 122 126A and 4061 shall, so far as may be, apply in the case of sureties offered in pursuance of the provisions of this section

Change—Subsection (1) has been substantially amended and Subsections (2) to (4) have been newly added, by section 15 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, VIII of 1923. The main changes are the following—

First this section extends the list of offences on conviction for which a person may be released upon probation secondly it is made clear that section 562 does not apply merely to the case of youthful offenders but applies to a wider class of persons, thirdly the word 'trivial' has been omitted, fourthly, the period for which an offender may be released under this section has been extended from one to three years, fifthly power has been conferred on an Appellate Court or upon a High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction to make an order under section 562, and finally the High Court has been empowered, either on appeal or in revision, to inflict sentence of imprisonment in lieu of an order under this section.—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914) Subsection (1A) has been added by the Cr P C Second Amendment Act XXVII of 1923. This amendment has been made on the recommendation of the Jail Committee.

1434 Scope and application of section:—Under this section the first offender need not necessarily be a youth, its operations are not limited to juvenile offenders. It applies to persons of advanced age—2 Bom L R 817, 1916 P R 11, 18 Cr L J 469 (Mad), 2 L B R 314. The intention of the law is not to make it essential that the offender must be young or that the offence must be trivial in its nature etc., but merely to indicate the lines on which the discretion of the Court should be exercised—2 L B R 65, 6 C W N cch.

To enable a Magistrate to apply this section the first essential is that the accused is a first offender, and if he is one, the extenuating circumstances which entitle him to the indulgence of the Court are his age, character and antecedents—2 Bom L R 817. In order to give a Court jurisdiction to release an offender under this section there must co-exist two conditions, viz there should be no previous convictions proved and the offence must be one of those specified in the section. If the two conditions are fulfilled, the Court has jurisdiction in the exercise of its discretion to act under the section. But in exercising the discretion the Court may have regard to the points specified in the section, namely the age, character and antecedents of the offender, and to the circumstances under which the offence was committed—2 L B R 65. This section is intended to apply to offenders (especially youthful offenders) who without being persons of depraved character may on occasions succumb to sudden temptation and the legislature very humanely and very properly allows the Magistrate in such cases to give the young man a chance and to deal with him leniently under this section. But where an offence implies a good deal of preparation (e.g. the offence of illicit manufacture of liquor) it cannot be said that it is done in consequence of succumbing to a sudden temptation, and the section should not be applied to such a case—Crown v Suran Singh 1916 P R 19, Emp v Piara Singh 7 Lah 32 27 P L R 211.

This section may be a very valuable section if properly applied, and it may very often happen that a juvenile offender who is sentenced to jail for a short period of imprisonment for a trivial offence may be practically ruined for life, whereas he would be saved by the due application of sec 562. But in passing a sentence at least two things are necessary to guard against viz danger to the public, and danger to the accused himself. The public must not be led to suppose that all juvenile offenders may commit any crimes that they like without any fear of punishment because that would be an incentive to criminal parents to initiate their children into a life of crime. And even children themselves being immune from the fear of punishment might be tempted to go astray from the unpleasant paths of virtue into paths of crime. It is obvious therefore that before applying this section one must consider whether there is a good cause for its application or not. If the offence is by no means a simple crime such as is committed by children out of mere thoughtlessness rather than of criminality, but it shows a singular combination of design and ingratitude and a general character of craft and deceit, it would call for a severe punishment indeed, and resort should not be had to the provisions of this section—Daryalal v Emp 18 S 1 R 61 25 Cr L J 1224. Magistrates should be very careful in applying this section and should not allow themselves to be misled into the use of this section by misplaced leniency and sympathy—Emp v Matho 27 Cr L J 309 (Sind).

Petty squabbles of young persons should be dealt with under this section—12 Cr L J 242 (Bur). Where the offender is a person of good position in life, he should rather be dealt with under this section than sentenced to whipping—1907 P W R 9. Where the accused was a widow of over 45, and it appeared that in committing the offence (forgery false personation) she was a puppet in the hands of the other accused held that this was a case in which the Court instead of sentencing her to imprisonment should release her on her entering into a bond—K E v Kiran Bala 43 C L J 79 30 C W N 373 27 Cr L J 409.

This section applies when no previous conviction is proved against the offender. A previous conviction is a technical bar to an order under this section but if no such conviction is proved at the trial and an order under this section is passed a subsequent discovery of a previous conviction is no ground for interference in revision—Esip v Partab Narain, 2 O W N 593 26 Cr L J 1248.

Section does not apply when sentence has been passed—This section cannot be applied to a case in which the Magistrate has not only convicted the accused person but sentenced him as well to imprisonment and fine—17 A L J 426. The words in the section are instead of sentencing him.

1435 Subsection(1)—Under the old law this sub-section applied only where the offender was convicted of one of certain offences under the Penal Code and not of an offence under any other law e.g. an offence under the Indian Railways Act—1 N L R 139 or an offence under the Excise Act—1916 P R 19. This restriction has now been removed.

The old sub-sec (1) could not apply where the offender was punishable with more than 2 years imprisonment. Thus it could not apply where the accused was convicted of criminal breach of trust—7 Bur L R 14 or of receiving stolen property—2 Bom L R 343 or of lurking house trespass—15 C P L R 11 or of using a genuine or a forged document—17 Bom L R 921 or of house breaking—18 Cr L J 469 (Mad) or of voluntarily causing grievous hurt—4 L B R 150 or of aggravated form of cheating under sec 420 I P C—3 L B R 95 1 Lah 612 41 Mad 533 or to an offence under sec 381 I P C—4 N L R 18. All these cases will now fall under the present subsection (1).

No order can be made under this section where the accused has, convicted in the trial of an offence not falling under this section as well as of an offence falling under this section—2 Weir 731

Who can pass order—An order under this section can be passed not only by the Court which convicted the accused but also by the Appellate Court, as well as by the High Court in revision—24 All 306, 29 Mad 567, 25 C W N 720 This is now expressly provided in the new sub-section (2)

1436 Bond:—The bond to be taken should be not only to keep the peace and to be of good behaviour, but to appear and receive sentence when called upon and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour—2 Bom L R 112 But it is not competent to a Magistrate to direct the accused to appear in Court on a fixed day to receive sentence all he can do is to release the accused on probation of good conduct for a certain period and to direct him to appear and receive sentence when called upon during such period, if he does not observe the conditions of the bond—2 Bom L R 702

Bond by minor—It was held that the third proviso to section 118, providing for bond of minors to be executed by their sureties, applied only to bonds under that section and did not apply to bonds of first offenders released under this section. A bond under this section had to be executed by the minor himself and not by his sureties (Cf the words 'on his entering into a bond')—4 L B R 12 (overruling 2 L B R 137) But this is no longer good law in view of the new section 514B

Inability to furnish security—If an accused person is ordered to give security under this section and he fails to do so, he should not be detained in prison till the expiration of the period for which security is to be furnished but the proper course is for the Magistrate, before passing an order under this section, to ascertain whether the accused is likely to be able to give security immediately or within a reasonable time. If he fails to give security within a reasonable time, the Magistrate should pass a sentence which should be only nominal—3 L B R 2, Nasu Mea v A E 2 Rang 360 (361) 26 Cr L J 285 The Magistrate should not imprison the accused under sec 123 on failure to give security under sec 562. Sec 123 specifically applies only to sections 106 and 118 and not to sec 562—Nasu Mea v A E 2 Rang 360 (361)

1437 Proviso:—Power of 2nd or 3rd Class Magistrate—It is not open to a Second Class Magistrate, who has not been specially empowered to exercise jurisdiction under sub-section (1) of the section, to take proceedings under that sub-section, although he was invested by a notification issued under the 1882 Code with all the powers specified in the fourth schedule of that Code—2 Weir 731 If a Second Class Magistrate not empowered under this section is of opinion that the case is a fit one for the exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) of section 562, he should record his opinion to that effect and submit the case to a First Class Magistrate or Subdivisional Magistrate for orders—Crown v Jawah 5 Lah 36 (37) 25 Cr L J 1124 The same remarks apply to third class Magistrates

Power of the Magistrate to whom proceedings are submitted—See notes under sec 380

Joint trial of young and aged offenders—Where the first accused aged nearly 50 and the second accused a boy of 11, were charged of theft before a Second Class Magistrate, and the Magistrate sent the case of both the accused to a First Class Magistrate so that the second accused might be dealt with under sec 562, it was held that the Second Class Magistrate should have disposed of the case of the first accused according to law without submitting the case to the First Class Magistrate, and that he should have submitted the case of the second accused only—2 Bom L R 112 Under the present law, the case of the aged offender also falls under this section

1438 Subsection (1A):—The offences enumerated in this subsection are the same as those mentioned in the old section. It is restricted to offences under the Indian Penal Code, and does not apply to an offence under any other law, e g an offence under the Indian Railways Act—1 N L R 139, or an offence under the Excise Act—1916 P R 19

Again, the benefit of this subsection is not extended to the aggravated forms of the offences mentioned herein. Thus when this subsection speaks of theft, dishonest misappropriation or cheating, it must be construed to mean theft etc in its simple form, punishable respectively under secs 379, 403 and 417 I P C, and does not include the aggravated forms of those offences. The offence of cheating means simple cheating and not the aggravated form of it under sec 420 I P C—3 L B R 95, 41 Mad 533, 1 Lah 612. The word theft can only mean simple theft otherwise it would not have been followed by the words theft in a building as well. A servant found guilty of theft and convicted under sec 381 I P C is not entitled to the benefit of this clause, as theft by servant is not one of the offences specified herein. It is an evasion of law to treat an aggravated form of offence as an ordinary offence and thus introduce a different jurisdiction or a lower scale of punishment—4 N L R 18. But the Allahabad High Court holds that the words dishonest misappropriation and 'cheating' apply to and cover those offences in all their forms, thus 'cheating' covers secs 418, 419 and 420 I P C and 'criminal misappropriation' includes offences under sections 404 and 405 I P C otherwise the words are a mere surplusage, because these offences are not punishable with more than two years imprisonment. The words of a Statute should be given an extended meaning of which they are reasonably susceptible, when a restricted meaning would reduce those words to a mere surplusage—12 A L J 465. The Nagpur Court holds the same view in Emp v Jan Lal 8 N I J 97, 24 Cr I J 251.

This subsection also speaks of any other offence punishable with not more than two years' imprisonment. In applying this subsection to those offences, the term of imprisonment and not the nature of the offences is the test. If the offence is punishable with not more than two years' imprisonment, the clause may be applied even though the offence be a serious one. Thus a boy of 18 years who attempted to cause hurt with a weapon may be dealt with under this subsection, because the attempt cause hurt is punishable with 18 months though the offence of causing hurt itself is punishable with 3 years—3 L B R 30

The words 'the Court before whom he is so convicted' occurring in subsection (1A) should not be read as controlled by the proviso to subsection (1) so that it is not necessary that the Magistrate passing an order under subsection (1A) should be a first class Magistrate or a second class Magistrate specially empowered. Therefore an ordinary Magistrate of the second class who has convicted an accused under section 279 I P Code can order his release after due admonition—Murlidhar v Mahboob Khan 47 All 353 26 Cr L J 624 A I R 1925 All 644 But the Bombay High Court holds that the proviso to subsection (1) governs the whole section and is therefore applicable to subsection (1A), so that a 3rd cla Magistrate is not competent to release an offender after due admonition under subsection (1A)—Emp v Rauchhod 27 Bom L R 1019 26 Cr L J 1461 A I R 1925 Bom 479

Distinct conviction must be recorded—Where the charge is in the alternative either of theft or of retaining stolen property, and the Magistrate while convicting the accused does not say of which of those offences he convicts the accused, held that in the absence of a conviction for theft the Magistrate is not competent to pass an order under this subsection—1 Bom L R 857

Subsection (2).—Under subsection (2) an appellate Court can pass an order releasing the accused on probation of good conduct. Where the High Court on an appeal from a conviction and sentence by the Presidency Magistrate ordered that the accused be released on entering into a bond but the accused failed to execute the bond, the punishment originally awarded by the Presidency Magistrate would not stand, (because that sentence had been already cancelled by the High Court) but the Presidency Magistrate should treat the accused as a person who was convicted but not sentenced to punishment and is again produced before the Court for the purpose of suitable punishment being awarded—In re Budsha 21 L W 40 26 Cr L J 683 A I R 1925 Mad 496

1439 Appeal and revision—An appeal lies from an order under this section releasing a convict on his entering into a bond—Emp v Maishar, 1904 P R 24 Bahadur v Ismail 29 C W N 151 57 Cal 463 26 Cr L J 435 A I R 1925 Cal 329 And the appeal may be preferred even after the expiry of the period of the bond—Hayata v Frip 1917 P R 20 18 Cr L J 401 An appeal will lie to the Sessions Judge from an order of a Magistrate of the first class passed under this section in a summary trial—Emp v Hira Lal 46 All 828 (see this case cited under sec 414) So also the High Court in revision can set aside the conviction and the order demanding security, even though the convicts have not moved the High Court to exercise that power—1912 P W R 7 1914 P W R 12

But unless the order passed by the Magistrate under this section is clearly mistaken or injudicious or amounts to a failure of justice, the High Court will not interfere in revision—Murlidhar v Mahboob, 47 All 353 26 Cr L J 624

It was held under the old law that in setting aside in revision the order under this section the High Court could not substitute in its place a sentence of imprisonment because no sentence had been passed by the Lower Court (the order under sec 562 not being a sentence) and the provisions of sec 439 as to enhancement of sentence did not apply—Fimp v Ghasite 37 All 31 12 A I J 1244 16 Cr L J 43 If the Appellate or Revisional Court considered that any sentence should be passed upon the accused it could order a retrial—1911 P R 16 37 All 31 But the new subsection (3) now empowers the High Court in appeal or in revision, to pass sentence on the accused after setting aside the order as to security—Fimp v Aesar 24 A I J 228 27 Cr L J 303

563 (1) If the Court which convicted the offender, or a Court which could have dealt with the offender in respect of his original offence, is satisfied that the offender has failed to observe any of the conditions of his recognizance, it may issue a warrant for his apprehension

(2) An offender, when apprehended on any such warrant, shall be brought forthwith before the Court issuing the warrant, and such Court may either remand him in custody until the case is heard or admit him to bail with a sufficient surety conditioned on his appearing for sentence Such Court may, after hearing the case pass sentence

564 (1) The Court before directing the release of an offender under Section 562, subsection (1) shall be satisfied that the offender or his surety (if any) has a fixed place of abode or regular occupation in the place for which the Court acts or in which the offender is likely to live during the period named for the observance of the conditions

(2) Nothing in this section or in sections 562 and 563 shall affect the provisions of Section 31 of the Reformatory Schools Act 1897

The words sub-section (1) have been added by the Repealing and Amending Act VII of 1914 This is intended to make it clear that section 564 (1) does not relate to the release of an offender under sub-section (1A) of section 562 —Ga ette of India 1924 Part V page 59

Previously convicted offenders

565 (1) When any person having been convicted—

Order for notifying address of previously convicted offender

(a) by a Court in British India of an offence punishable under Section 215, Section 489A, Section 489B, Section 489C or Section 489D, of the Indian Penal Code or of any offence punishable under Chapter VII or Chapter XVII of that Code, with imprisonment of either description for a term of three years or upwards, or

(1) by a Court or Tribunal in the territories of any Prince or State in India acting under the general or special authority of the Governor General in Council or of any Local Government of any offence which could if committed in British India have been punishable under any of the aforesaid sections or Chapters of the Indian Penal Code with like imprisonment for a like term, is again convicted of any offence punishable under any of those sections or Chapters with imprisonment for a term of three years or upwards by a High Court, Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Subdivisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, * * * such Court or Magistrate may, if it or he thinks fit, at the time of passing sentence of transportation or imprisonment on such person also order that his residence and any change of or absence from such residence after release be notified as hereinafter provided for a term not exceeding five years from the date of the expiration of such sentence.

(2) If such conviction is set aside on appeal or otherwise such order shall become void.

(3) The Local Government may make rules to carry out the provisions of this section relating to the notification of residence or change of or absence from residence by released convicts.

(4) An order under this section may also be made by an Appellate Court or by the High Court when exercising its powers of revision.

(5) Any person against whom an order has been made under this section and who refuses or neglects to comply with any rule so made shall be deemed within the meaning of section 176 of the Indian Penal Code to have omitted to give a notice required for the purpose of preventing the commission of an offence

(6) Any person charged with a breach of any such rule may be tried by a Magistrate of competent jurisdiction in the district in which the place last notified by him as his place of residence is situated

Change:—This section has been almost redrafted by section 151 of the Cr P C Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. The main changes introduced are the following—Firstly, it extends the list of offences after a conviction for which a person may be required to notify his residence and subsequent changes of residence, secondly on the analogy of section 75 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1910, provision has been made for previous convictions before tribunals of Native States which exercise their jurisdiction under the general or special authority of the Government of India or the Local Government, thirdly all first class Magistrates, in place of those specially empowered, have been authorised to pass orders under this section, fourthly the rule-making power has been extended to cover the provision of this section relating to the notification of residence, or change of residence or absence from residence of released convicts, fifthly the punishment of a breach of the rules made under this section has been enhanced and lastly Courts of Appeal or revision have been empowered to pass orders under this section—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914)

1440 Application of section:—This section applies when the accused has been previously convicted the passing of an order under this section on a first offender is illegal—8 M I T 35

This section does not apply where either the previous or the subsequent conviction is for an attempt to commit the offences under Chap XII or XVII of the I P C—1907 P R 17

This section does not apply where the accused upon the subsequent conviction, is sentenced to whipping—35 Bom 13. An order under this section can be passed only when the accused is sentenced to transportation or imprisonment

This section does not apply where the subsequent conviction is a technical one. Where a person is found only technically guilty of theft, it is absurd to make his conviction for such a trifling offence the occasion for a long period of Police supervision under this section—1914 P W R 3

Where the previous conviction of the accused is set aside on appeal, though on technical grounds the accused cannot be called an old offender and an order of restriction cannot be passed under this section on a subsequent conviction—Nga Po v K F 3 Rang 156 26 Cr L J 1344

Under the old law, this section did not apply where the previous conviction had been in a Native State, even though the law of that State was identical in terms with the Indian Penal Code—1 N L R 13. But now this section does apply in such a case. See clause (b) which has been newly added

(a) by a Court in British India of an offence punishable under Section 21, Section 489A, Section 489B, Section 489C or Section 489D of the Indian Penal Code or of any offence punishable under Chapter VII or Chapter XVII of that Code, with imprisonment of either description for a term of three years or upwards, or

(1) by a Court or Tribunal in the territories of any Prince or State in India acting under the general or special authority of the Governor General in Council or of any Local Government, of any offence which could if committed in British India have been punishable under any of the aforesaid sections or Chapters of the Indian Penal Code with like imprisonment for a like term

is again convicted of any offence punishable under any of those sections or Chapters with imprisonment for a term of three years or upwards by a High Court, Court of Session, Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Subdivisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, * * * such Court or Magistrate may if it or he thinks fit, at the time of passing sentence of transportation or imprisonment on such person also order that his residence and any change of or absence from such residence after release be notified as herein after provided for a term not exceeding five years from the date of the expiration of such sentence

(2) If such conviction is set aside on appeal or otherwise such order shall become void

(3) The Local Government may make rules to carry out the provisions of this section relating to the notification of residence or change of or absence from residence by released convicts

(4) An order under this section may also be made by an Appellate Court or by the High Court when exercising its powers of revision

(5) Any person against whom an order has been made under this section and who refuses or neglects to comply with any rule so made shall be deemed within the meaning of section 176 of the Indian Penal Code to have omitted to give a
